In many ways this is a far more thorough and interesting book than the usual parochial history. The large maps are specially to be commended, particularly the one which shows the sites of the Domesday and later manor houses, and the chief finds of Romano-British remains together with the roads and tracks extant before 1500. There are also a variety of other illustrations, including reproductions of several old portraits of the Rawdons and other worthies of the district. The book will be of much interest to residents in the district, whilst the valuable series of extracts and abstracts from the early Manor-Court Rolls will prove of genuine worth to all who are interested in these definite records of the past. One symptom of poverty among the people appears in the frequent presentments in the local courts against women for hedge-breaking. These hedges were the stake-and-thorn enclosures used for the yearly fencing of the fields when cropped; their dry materials were of course excellent for firing or heating the bread ovens. The Lord's "pound" is frequently mentioned in the courts of the reign of Edward III. Each separate manor possessed its own parcus or pound; there is evidence in the cases of Geddings and Boas that the pounds were close to the manor house. Geddings pound at Michaelmas, 1366, held "1 cart-horse value 30 shillings, another value 20 shillings, 1 ox, 2 stots, and 11 sheep"; all of these were liable for fine, in proportion to their value, before release. It is of some interest to note the complaints which were common at the beginning of the fifteenth century as to the cutting down of small trees. Mr. Tregelles draws attention to the fact that, whilst oak, ash, elm, and thorn are mentioned, nothing is said as to beech, hornbeam, or willow, although he believes that the hornbeam and the willow must have been at least as plentiful as they are now.

Notwithstanding our general appreciation of this substantial book, it bears evidence of incomplete research. The vast storehouse of records in Chancery Lane would have thrown more light on the old history of Hoddesdon and the district. As for the long annotated list of the clergy who served Hoddesdon, it should have depended on the original episcopal registers at St. Paul's, rather than on the not always accurate extracts long ago printed in Newcourt's 'Repertorium.' The book should have been divided into chapters, and lists of contents and illustrations provided.

Historische Neuenglische Grammatik. Von Wilhelm Horn.—Part I. Lautlehre. (Strasbourg, Trübner.)—Prof. Horn's historical grammar of modern English is written on the right method. The author has confined himself strictly within the limits indicated by the title, taking the phenomena of late Middle English as the starting-point from which the subsequent changes down to the present time are traced. This first portion, treating of the phonology, and incidentally of the orthography, is remarkably well executed. The works of writers on orthoepy from the sixteenth century onwards, and the materials contained in the 'Oxford Dictionary,' have been carefully studied, and abundant use has been made of the modern dialects. Now and then, though rarely, Prof. Horn's manner of accounting for apparent exceptions to phonetic law appears unsatisfactory; for example, the explanation of the local pronunciation behint as due to the analogy of front is inadequate, and would hardly have been proposed by an Englishman familiar with any of the dialects in which this pronunciation occurs.

There are one or two questionable statements with regard to modern English pronunciation; blackguard and forehead, for instance, are not sounded exactly as if they were written "blaggud" and "forrud." We note two odd misprints or slips of the pen—"Osten und Osten" (p. 3) for Osten und Westen, and "im Ausland" (p. 92) for im Auslaut. On the whole, however, the book is admirably correct, both typographically and otherwise; and it is certainly by far the most complete treatise on the historical phonology of modern English hitherto published. The index of English words contains about 3,000 entries. Prof. Horn has rendered valuable service to scholarship by this first part of his grammar. We hope that the remainder of the work will prove equally excellent, and that its publication will not be long delayed.

It is not often that an English author can translate his own writings into a foreign language sufficiently well to satisfy those of whom it is the native tongue. This, however, Mr. Charles Pond has done in his French versions of three of his recitations, 'Glimpses of Life,' which for several years have delighted audiences both public and private. The ability to write excellently humorous things like 'On Strike,' and 'The Fully Licensed Man' is no small gift; and when the author is equal to the double task of reciting them successfully in his own French to French audiences, his fitness for the line which he has chosen becomes indisputable. Mr. Pond's Trois Monologues, now issued under one cover (Reynolds & Co.) are 'L'Hôpital des Chiens,' 'Le Baron de Grippefort,' and 'Le Marchand de Vins.' In their original states as 'Evings's Dorg 'Ospital,' 'Greifenstein,' and 'The Fully Licensed Man' they are known to innumerable English people, and their French popularity increases every day. In their French form they were "récités par l'auteur pour la première fois à All Souls College, Oxford, le 15 Mai, 1908."

GEORGE MEREDITH.

By a mischance, which no one regrets more than ourselves, we are obliged to withhold until next week our intended estimate of the great writer who has just passed away and put the whole world of letters in mourning. Though he had passed the allotted span of man's life, his vitality was so wonderful, his spirit so youthful, that the announcement of his illness did not prepare us for the end on Tuesday last.

George Meredith had a special regard for The Athenæum, which recognized his powers in very early days, and few things gave him more pleasure than the unstinted tribute paid by Henley to 'Diana of the Crossways' in 1885. "It has no touch," the review remarked, "of the tremendous spiritual tragedy which forms the subject of 'Rhoda Fleming'—in some ways the greatest of the author's achievements; nor, on the other hand, is its essence so peculiar and rare as that spirit of comedy whose expression in Sir Willoughby Patterne sets 'The Egoist' on a pinnacle apart among novels, and marks the writer for one of the breed of Shakespeare and Molière.... In one word, it is a common novel, as 'Amelia' is, and 'Vanity Fair.' It ends as happily as the feeblest and flimsiest of visions in three volumes, and is only distinguished from the ruck of its contemporaries in being the work of a man of genius and a great artist."

Henley noted that "here and there we are confronted with a metaphor in four dimensions (as it were), whose conquest appears to demand the instant and active exercise of all the five senses at once, and which even then emerges from the fight unvanquished. To say that is to say that the book is by the author of 'The Tragic Comedians.' But such defects are rare. Mr. Meredith writes such English as is within the capacity of no other living man; and in epigram as in landscape, in dialogue as in analysis, in description as in comment and reflection, he is an artist in words of whom his country may be proud."

'NOTES FROM SOTHEBY'S.'

35, Pond Street, Hampstead, N.W., May 15, 1909.

WITH reference to your review of my volume 'Notes from Sotheby's' in the current number of The Athenæum, it appears likely to convey the idea to outsiders that I had merely made a "selection" of notes from the whole of Messrs. Sotheby's catalogues, and in justice to myself, I should wish it to be known that this is not so. The review commences by stating that it is "the peculiar fate of catalogues to disappear, and in a few years they become exceedingly difficult to obtain." This is exactly the case. It was only possible to procure every spare catalogue still in Messrs. Sotheby's possession, and to advertise in the trade journals for others. This was done, and every note that contained a scintilla of bibliographical interest was reproduced. The catalogues which were not obtainable by the means stated of course contain notes of equal value and interest to those in 'Notes from Sotheby's,' and the only alternative to the plan adopted was to spend weeks at the British Museum, copying the notes from the store of catalogues there preserved. So much expenditure of time would, however, have been thus incurred that the cost of producing the volume would have been more than doubled, while it was by no means certain that a sufficient number of purchasers at the increased price necessary to make a commercial success would have been forthcoming. If, however, the present volume should meet with sufficient support, it would be easy to prepare a supplementary volume from the catalogues in the Museum and thus fill the gaps indicated by your reviewer. All that I am anxious for is that it should not be supposed that the absence of notes which ought to form part of such a compilation is due to carelessness on my part, or want of system.

As regards misprints, I doubt if half a dozen will be found in the entire volume, and this, to those who are accustomed to proof-correction, seems to be not unsatisfactory. It is a singular coincidence that one misprint, reproduced from 'Book-Prices Current,' occurs in your reviewer's article. He refers to 'the Crampton Sale at Messrs. Sotheby's in June, 1896.' The sale in question was that of the library of M. Alfred Crampon, a well-known French book-collector, then resident in London.

FRANK KARSLAKE.

* * Mr. Karslake contradicts himself. He says, first, that his "notes" are not a "selection" from Messrs. Sotheby's catalogues, 1885-1909, and then admits that he had to depend on "every spare catalogue," which he could get from Messrs. Sotheby's or other sources. Further, he suggests that he might "fill the gaps" which we indicated. This task will occupy him several years, and provide material for many volumes as large as his 'Notes,' which, we must repeat, contains only a small portion of those printed in Sotheby's catalogues during the last twenty-four years.

'PARADISE LOST.'

Union Club of Boston, May, 1909.

A COPY of one of the many variants of the first edition of 'Paradise Lost' has been found in a private library in this city, differing from any hitherto noted. It reads as follows:—

Paradise lost. | A | Poem | in | Ten Books. | The Author | John Milton. | London. | Printed by S. Simmons, and are to be sold by | T. Helder, at the Angel in Little Britain, | 1667.

The unusual feature lies in the name of the publisher and the date of publication. Simmons did issue an edition in 1668, but no trace of an earlier issue bearing his name has been found outside of this copy. The book was purchased in 1844, and bears no evidences of having been "doctored" to meet a bibliographical demand. Can another copy be located by your readers?

WORTHINGTON C. FORD.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Awdry (W.), United Worship, 1/6. Illustrated from the office for morning and evening prayer in the Anglican Communion.
- Duchesne (Monsignor Louis), Early History of the Christian Church, from its Foundation to the End of the Third Century, 9/ net. Rendered into English from the Fourth Edition.
- Hull (Rev. John E.), The Holy Angels, 1/6.
- MacDermott (G. M.), The Gospel according to St. Matthew, 6d. One of the Plain Commentaries.
- Robertson (J. Methven), Encouragements in the Maintenance of Christian Belief. An address to the Synod of Perth and Stirling.
- Sampson (Rev. Holden E.), Progressive Creation, 2 vols., 21/ net. A reconciliation of religion with science.
- Studies in Difficult Texts, Second Series*, 6d. Edited by the Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, and reprinted from The Church Family Newspaper.
- Walker (Rev. Dawson), The Letters of St. Paul to Corinth, 1/6. Intended for the general reader interested in the life and writings of St. Paul.
- "Which Is"; or, the Unknown God, by an Unknown Man, 3/6 net.
- Williams (C. D.), A Valid Christianity for To-day, 6/6 net. Discourses delivered on various occasions, and published at the request of friends.

Law.

- Duckworth (L.), Charter Parties and Bills of Lading, 2/6 net.
- Kime's International Law Directory and Telegraphic Code, 1909, 10/6 net.
- Leake (S. Martin), An Elementary Digest of the Law of Property in Land. Second Edition, revised by A. E. Randall.
- Practical Statutes of the Session 1908 (8 Edward 7)*. With introduction, notes, tables of statutes repealed and subjects altered, lists of local and personal and private Acts, and a copious index, edited by J. Sutherland Cotton.
- Roscoe's Damages in Maritime Collisions, 10/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Essex, described by A. R. Hope Moncrieff, and painted by L. Burleigh Bruhl, 20/ net. Contains 76 illustrations in colour.
- Gheyn (J. van den), Croniques et Conquestes de Charlemaigne: Reproduction des 105 Miniatures de Jean le Tavernier d'Audenarde, 1460, 17/.
- Hallé (C. E.), Notes from a Painter's Life, including the Founding of Two Galleries, 6/ net. With illustrations.
- India Annual Report of the Director-General of Archaeology for the Year 1906-7: Part I., Administrative.
- Marquand (A.), Greek Architecture, 10/ net.
- Medallist Illustrations of the History of Great Britain and Ireland: Part X., Plates XCI-C., 6/.
- Smith (Rev. F.), The Stone Ages in North Britain and Ireland, 16/ net. Illustrated by over 500 drawings of typical specimens, with an introduction by Augustus H. Keane.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Barnes (William), A Selection from Poems of Rural Life in the Dorset Dialect, 1/6 net. Edited by his Son. Copy-right Edition.
- Cecil (K. H. D.), The Poet and his Soul, 2/6 net. A poem.
- Cripps (Arthur Shearly), Lyra Evangelistica: Missionary Verses of Mashonaland, 2/6 net.
- Hankin (St. John), The Last of the De Mullins, 1/6 net. A play without a preface.
- Hundert besten Gedichte der deutschen Sprache (Lyrik), 6d. net. Selected by R. M. Meyer.
- Mackail (J. W.), Swinburne, 1/ net. A lecture delivered before the University of Oxford on April 30.
- Mackaye (Percy), The Playhouse and the Play, 5/ net. With other addresses concerning the theatre and democracy in America.
- Moulton (Louise C.), Poems and Sonnets, 7/6.
- Stapleton (A.), The King and the Miller of Mansfield, 2/6. With new notes about Robert Dodsley. Reprinted from The Newark Advertiser.
- Taylor (M.), Songs of Solitude, 3/6 net.
- Wedmore (Millicent), A Minstrel in the South, 2/6 net. One of these poems has been published in The Cornhill of the present month; three or four have appeared in The Pall Mall Magazine; and three or four in the writer's previous volume 'Essays and Verses.'
- Williamson (K.), Cambridge: a poem, together with Indian and other Verses and Notes, 2/ net. No. 1 of the Fenlight Booklets.

Bibliography.

- Battersea Public Libraries, Twenty-Second Annual Report, 1908-9. Descriptive Catalogue of the Naval Manuscripts in the Pepsian Library at Magdalene College, Cambridge, Vol. III. Edited by J. R. Tanner.
- Early Printed Books to the Year 1500 in the Library of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, 6d.
- Library Economics, 2/ net.

Philosophy.

- Armstrong (C. Wicksteed), The Mystery of Existence in the Light of an Optimistic Philosophy, 2/6 net.
- Boehme (J.), The High and Deep Searching Out of the Threefold Life of Man, 12/6 net. Englished by J. Sparrow, reissued by C. J. E.
- Boole (Mary Everest), Symbolical Methods of Study, 3/6 net.
- Lindsay (James), Studies in European Philosophy, 10/6 net.
- Miller (Irving E.), The Psychology of Thinking, 5/ net.

Political Economy.

- Bolland (W.), The Railways and the Nation: Problems and Possibilities, 1/ net.
- Charlesworth (S. J.) and Hallsworth (H. M.), Unemployment, 2/6 net. The results of an investigation made in Lancashire, and an examination of the Report of the Poor Law Commission.

Hirst (Margaret E.), Life of Friedrich List and Selections from his Writings, 7/6 net. An account of Friedrich List, the founder of the German Zollverein, and advocate of the American system of Protection.

History and Biography.

- Ballantyne Press and its Founders, 1796-1908. With illustrations and facsimiles.
- Booth (W. Stone), Some Acrostic Signatures of Francis Bacon, 25/ net. Now for the first time deciphered and published.
- Boudin (F.), Essais de Biographies Littéraires, 2/. Sketches designed to familiarize Englishmen with French writers.
- Brackenbury (Right Hon. Sir H.), Some Memories of my Spare Time, 5/ net.
- Butler (Josephine E.), 6/ net. An autobiographical memoir, edited by George W. and Lucy A. Johnson, with an introduction by James Stuart.
- Calendar of the Patent Rolls preserved in the Public Record Office, Richard II.: Vol. VI., 1396-9, 15/.
- Johnson (R. Brimley), The Cambridge Colleges, 2/6 net. With 25 illustrations.
- Knight (E. F.), The Awakening of Turkey, 10/6 net. A history of the Turkish Revolution. Illustrated.
- Leishman (J. Fleming), A Son of Knox, and other Studies, Antiquarian and Biographical, 3/6 net.
- Memoir of Col. the Right Hon. William Kenyon-Slaney, M.P., 3/6 net. Edited by Walter Durnford, with portraits and illustrations.
- Milford (L. S.), Haileybury College, Past and Present, 10/6 net. Contains 45 illustrations.
- Random Recollections of a Commercial Traveller, 3/6 net. Illustrated.
- Tulloch (Major-General A. B.), The '45, from the Raising of Prince Charlie's Standard at Glenfinnan to the Battle of Culloden, 1/. With plan. Third Edition.

Geography and Travel.

- Brabant (F. G.), Rambles in Sussex, 6/ net. Contains 30 illustrations.
- Cox (R. Hipplesey), A Guide to Avebury and Neighbourhood, 2/ net.
- Dutt (W. A.), The Norfolk and Suffolk Coasts, 6/ net. Illustrated.
- Earle (A.), A Narrative of a Nine Months' Residence in New Zealand in 1827, 2/6.
- Hutchinson (Sir J. T.) and Cobham (C. Delaval), A Handbook of Cyprus, 2/6 net. Revised Edition, with frontispiece and two maps.
- Johnston (Keith), A Sketch of Historical Geography, 3/6 net.
- Kelly's Directory of the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire, 1909, 25/.
- Shelley (Henry C.), Literary By-Paths in Old England, 10/6 net. With illustrations from photographs by the author.
- Wade (G. W. and J. H.), Monmouthshire, 2/6 net. Contains 32 illustrations, 4 plans, and 4 maps.

Sports and Pastimes.

Golfing Annual, 3/6.

Education.

- Barrett (S. M.), Practical Pedagogy, 2/6.
- Brenl (Karl), The Teaching of Modern Foreign Languages and the Training of Teachers, 2/6 net. Fourth Edition, revised and enlarged.
- Richmond (Mrs. Ennis), A Natural Education; For our Daughters; Two Aspects of the Co-Education of Boys and Girls; Public Schools and Co-Education; Why Not Co-Education? 3d. each.
- Royal University of Ireland: Calendar for 1909; Examination Papers, 1908.

Folk-lore.

Treasury of Basuto Lore, Vol. I., 10/6 net. Edited by E. Jacottet.

Philology.

- Arthur (C.) and Ginever (Ilona), Hungarian Grammar, 4/6 net.
- Goddard (Harold C.), Chaucer's Legend of Good Women. Reprinted from The Journal of English and Germanic Philology.
- Gummere (F. B.), The Oldest English Epic: Beowulf, Finnsburg, Waldere, Deor, Widsith, and the German Hildebrand, 4/6 net. Translated in the original metres, with introduction and notes.
- Hemingway (S. B.), Thirty-Eight English Nativity Plays, One of the Yale Studies in English.
- Hoogvliet (Dr. J. M.), Elements of Dutch, 3/6 net. Seventh Edition, in which a simplified spelling system has been adopted. Thoroughly revised and enlarged from Ahn's 'Concise Grammar of the Dutch Language.'
- Meyer (Kuno), The Instructions of King Cormac Mac Airt, 1/6. Royal Irish Academy Todd Lecture Series, Vol. XV.
- Pulman (W.), The Truth about the Teaching of Foreign Languages, 1/ net. Endeavours to show why people have failed to learn them by the prevailing methods, and has an introduction to "Linguistics by the E. and S. Method."
- Thackeray (H. St. John), A Grammar of the Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint: Vol. I. Introduction, Orthography, and Accidence, 8/ net.

School-Books.

- Shipley (Mary E.), An English Church History for Children, 1066-1500, 2/6 net. With a preface by W. Edward Collins, 12 illustrations, and a map.
- Short Extracts from Old English Poetry, chiefly for Unseen Translation, 1/6 net. Edited by O. T. Williams.

Science.

- Arrhenius (Svante), The Life of the Universe, as conceived by Man from the Earliest Ages to the Present Time, 2 vols., 5/ net. Translated by Dr. H. Borns, with illustrations. In Harper's Library of Living Thought.
- Ashcroft (E. A.), A Study of Electrothermal and Electrolytic Industries: Part I. Introductory, 8/6 net.
- Bower Manuscript. Facsimile leaves, Nagari transcript, romanized transliteration, and English translation with notes, revised translation of Parts I-III. A native medical treatise, edited by A. F. R. Hoernle.

Cooper (C. S.) and Westell (W. P.), Trees and Shrubs of the British Isles, Native and Acclimatized, Part IV., 1/ net. With illustrations by C. F. Newall.

Country Gentlemen's Estate Book, 1909, 21/. Edited by William Broomhall.

Cremation in Great Britain, 1909, 6d. A description of British crematories, illustrated with numerous views, together with the Cremation Act, 1902, and regulations for carrying out cremation.

Cyclopedia of American Agriculture. Vol. IV., 21/ net. Edited by L. H. Bailey.

Dearmer (Percy), Body and Soul, 6/ net. An inquiry into the effects of religion upon health, with a description of Christian works of healing from the New Testament to the present day.

English Vegetable Garden, 8/6 net. Illustrated. Country Life Library.

Floy (H.), High-Tension Underground Electric Cables, 8/6 net.

Goodrich (E. S.), Vertebrata Craniata (First Fascicle: Cyclostomes and Fishes), 20/ net. Forming Part IX. of Ray Lankester's Treatise on Zoology.

Heil (Adolf) and Esch (W.), The Manufacture of Rubber Goods, 10/6 net. A practical handbook. Illustrated.

Hodgson (J. T.) and Williams (J.), Locomotive Management from Cleaning to Driving, 2/6 net.

Hogarth (A. H.), Medical Inspection of Schools, 6/. One of the Oxford Medical Publications.

Hogle (W. M.), Internal Combustion Engines, 12/6 net.

Horner (D. W.), Observing and Forecasting the Weather, 6d. net. See Athen. of 8th inst., p. 564.

Journal of Comparative Neurology and Psychology, Vol. XIX., No. I.

Pearson (Karl), The Groundwork of Eugenics, 1/ net. The substance of two lectures delivered as an introduction to a course on the science of national eugenics at the Galton Laboratory, February 23 and March 2.

Staars (David), The English Woman, 9/ net. Studies in her psychic evolution, translated from the French, and abridged by J. M. E. Brownlow.

Strack (Hermann L.), The Jew and Human Sacrifice (Human Blood and Jewish Ritual), 10/ net. An historical and sociological inquiry.

Wanhil (C. F.) and Beveridge (W. W. O.), The Sanitary Officer's Handbook of Practical Hygiene, 5/ net.

Wells (W.), New Plane and Solid Geometry, 3/6.

Whetham (W. C. Dampier), The Recent Development of Physical Science, 5/ net. New Edition.

Fiction.

Aldington (May), Meg of the Salt-Pans, 6/. A domestic tragedy laid in a Kentish village.

Barker (H. J.), A Nice Pair, and Others, 3/6. A book of humorous stories told by a quaint old character.

Dickinson (H. N.), Sir Guy and Lady Rannard, 6/. Has a good deal to do with political life.

Lee (Eldon), The Burden of 1909, 6d. net. A prophecy.

Le Queux (William), Spies of the Kaiser, 6/. A story of German secret agents who are at work gaining our naval and military secrets.

Manning (Frederic), Scenes and Portraits, 6/. The author is principally influenced by Renan in these studies of different times and places.

Mighels (Mrs. Philip Verrill), The Full Glory of Diantha. A novel of New York life, with some scenes in a typical mining camp of the West.

Moberly (L. G.), A Very Doubtful Experiment, 6/. The story of a marriage. Illustrated.

Pasture (Mrs. H. de la), The Lonely Lady of Grosvenor Square, 7d. net. For former notice see Athen., Feb. 16, 1907, p. 192.

Raine (Allen), Where Billows Roll, 6/. The scene is in Wales, and the story has a strong love-interest and a touch of mysticism.

Rousseau (J. J.), Julie; or, La Nouvelle Héloïse, 1/6 net. Abridged edition, with preface by Frank A. Hedgcock.

Sellar (Edmund Francis), Where Every Prospect Pleases, 6/. A story of love and life in Ceylon.

Trites (W. B.), John Cave, 6/. An attack on the American press from the point of view of an American reporter of some refinement.

Turner (R.), Samson Unshorn, 6/. A tale of Fleet Street and a newspaper Napoleon.

Vielé (Herman K.), Heartbreak Hill, 6/. A comedy romance with a frontispiece by John Rae.

Ward (Mrs. Humphry), Daphne; or, "Marriage à la Mode", 6/. The story of a young Englishman's love for a bright American girl of wealth, and the failure of their married life through misunderstanding and jealousy.

Wood (Mrs. Henry), Orville College, 6d.

General Literature.

Boys' Brigade Camp Handbook. With 6 illustrations.

Esenwein (J. Berg), Writing the Short-Story, 1 dol. 25. A practical handbook on the rise, structure, writing, and sale of the modern short-story.

Findlay (J. G.), Humbugs and Homilies, 3/6 net.

Fremantle (H. E. S.), The New Nation, 5/ net. A survey of the Condition and Prospects of South Africa.

Heritage (Lizzie), Cassell's Household Cookery, 3/6.

India Office List, 1909, 10/6.

Journal of the Royal Institution of Cornwall, Vol. XVII. Part III.

Mackenzie (A.), The Prophecies of the Brahan Seer (Coinneach Odhar Fiosaiche). An account of a Highland seer, with introductory chapter by Andrew Lang.

Saints among the Animals, 6d. net. Text by Margaret W. Cole, pictures by Alphons P. Cole. Second Edition.

Pamphlets.

Clayton (Rev. H. J.), The Church in Wales To-day, 1d. No. 24 of the Churchman's Penny Library.

Cunningham (W.), Socialism and Christianity, 3d. The substance of a paper read before the Victoria Institute on February 1.

Neligan (Right Rev. M. R.), Betting and Gambling, 2d.

Newbolt (Canon W. C. E.), The Athanasian Creed, 1d. No. 23 of the Churchman's Penny Library.

Our National Flag, by an Old Naval Officer, 1d. Describes what it is and what it is not.

Ripon (Bishop of), Shall the Race Perish? 2d.

Smith (Jas. C.), Legal Tender, 3d. net. Correspondence with the editor of The Bankers' Magazine.

FOREIGN.

Poetry.

Praviel (A.) et Brousse (J. R. de), L'Anthologie du Félibrige, 3fr. 50.

Music and the Drama.

Bellaigue (C.), Les Époques de la Musique, 2 vols., 7fr.
Fauchois (R.), Beethoven, 3fr. 50. The piece recently acted at the Odéon.

History and Biography.

Beaunier (A.), Éloges, 3fr. 50. Appreciations of several leading men of letters in France.
Doutrepont (G.), La Littérature française à la Cour des Ducs de Bourgogne, 12fr.
Harry (G.), Maurice Maeterlinck, 2fr. 50. One of Les Écrivains français de Belgique.
Historiske Samlinger udgivne af den Norske Historiske Kildeskriftkommission, Vol. III. Parts I. and II.

Philology.

Jost (K.), Beon und Wesan: eine syntaktische Untersuchung, 3m. 60. Part 26 of the Anglistische Forschungen.
Voigt (E.), Shakespeares Naturschilderungen, 3m. 80. Part 28 of the same series.

Fiction.

Daudet (E.), La Course à l'Abîme: un Roman sous la Terre, 3fr. 50.

General Literature.

Revue germanique, mai-juin, 4fr.
Weiss (Gerolamo), Elogio dei Libri, 2 lire.

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

IN The Cornhill Magazine for June Mr. Stanley Weyman introduces 'Leaves from the Diary of a Tramp,' a record of real experiences on the road and in the work-house by J. A. H. Mr. L. J. Brown, of the Consular Service in Morocco, writes on 'The Rise of Moulay Abd el Hafid,' the new Sultan. In 'A Forgotten Botanist of the Seventeenth Century' Canon Vaughan writes on John Goodyer. 'Wild-fowl and Parlakimedi' is a description of sport in a sequestered corner of India, by Mr. Edmund Candler. Mr. Andrew Lang writes on 'Anti-Jacobite Conspiracies.' 'Sarah Wilson,' by Mr. W. W. Gibson, is a record in verse of an old fisherwoman; and short stories are 'The Girl with only One Talent,' by Mr. W. E. Norris, and 'Old Sandy,' by Mr. Austin Philips.

Blackwood for June opens with an article by Mr. Charles Whibley on 'Characters,' a literary convention much in vogue in the seventeenth century. The number also contains 'A Day in a Game Reserve,' by Major Stevenson Hamilton, Warden of the Eastern Transvaal Game Reserve; 'A Sacred River Head,' by Prof. James Sully; and 'A Jaunt to Janina,' by Mr. Orlo Williams.

FOR some time Mr. J. A. Hammerton has been preparing 'George Meredith in Anecdote and Criticism,' a companion volume to his 'Stevensoniana,' and the manuscript was delivered to the publisher, Mr. Grant Richards, last week. The book, which will appear early in June, was begun six or seven years ago, and was originally intended as a souvenir of Meredith's eightieth birthday; but it was only last week that the author was able to give it the final touches. An important feature will be the illustrations.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—

"George Meredith's breezy fortitude, as well as his unfailing kindness, is illustrated in the following letter, which the veteran novelist sent to a young author, perplexed by the attitude of reviewers:—

"My practice with regard to reviews is to look for none and to read all that may come in my way. It is like expecting a windy day in our climate when we go out of doors and face the air: an author must master sensitiveness when he publishes. He knows what he intended, and should be able to estimate the degree of his attainment. Criticism will then brace him. We have not much of it, and there will be indifference to wear through, and sometimes brutality to encounter. Tell yourself that such is our climate. I began sensitively, but soon got braced. Here and there a hostile review is instructive, if only that it throws us back on the consciousness of our latent strength."

If Meredith had to wait long for general critical recognition, he secured from the beginning the applause of good judges, George Eliot in 1856 writing of 'The Shaving of Shagpat' as "a work of genius." Swinburne's generous defence of his poetry will be recalled by many.

AMONG the chief articles in the June International will be the following: 'Mr. Lloyd-George's First Budget,' by Mr. L. G. Chiozza-Money, M.P.; 'The Influence of Aerial Navigation on Civilization,' by the editor, Dr. Rodolphe Broda; 'The Problem of the Overgrown Cities,' by M. Émile Vandervelde; 'The International Situation,' by M. Francis de Pressensé; 'The Future of Parliamentary Life in Turkey,' by Mustapha Bey; and 'The Austrian Administration of Bosnia-Herzegovina,' by M. Y. Marhula.

MR. FISHER UNWIN will publish on June 7th a work entitled 'Christ and the Eastern Soul,' by Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, late President of the Union Theological Seminary, New York. It contains a course of lectures delivered in India, Ceylon, and Japan, and is intended to indicate the points of contact between Christianity and the religions of the East, and to show how the latter call for Christianity as their complement and crown.

MR. HERBERT RICHARDS is about to publish through Mr. Grant Richards another collection of papers on Greek authors, of which some have appeared in The Classical Review, and some are new. They deal largely with Aristophanes, the comic fragments, and the Attic orators; and they include a new study of the diction of comedy, and a large number of miscellaneous emendations in Greek authors.

'GROWLS FROM UGANDA' is the title of a new work to be published by Mr. Elliot Stock. In it the anonymous author, writing from his grass hut in Uganda, reviews and records his recollections of commercial life in England, and also devotes a chapter to a search for gold in British Columbia.

'THE HISTORY OF PEMBROKESHIRE,' by the Rev. James Phillips, is announced for immediate publication by the same firm, also a volume of stories by the Rev. Zachary Mather, descriptive of Welsh life and character, entitled 'Tales from the Welsh Hills.'

MR. FRANCIS COUTTS, of 440, Strand, W.C., asks for the sight of letters and papers connected with his great-grandfather Thomas Coutts the banker, as his life is being written.

MR. PERCY WHITE, the popular author of 'The West End,' has completed a novel for Messrs. Hurst & Blackett, which they will publish next Tuesday under the title of 'The House of Intrigue.'

'THE CIVIL WAR IN DORSET, 1642-1660,' by Mr. A. R. Bayley, is being published by subscription. Many transcripts from the Clarendon and Tanner MSS. will be included, and Edward Drake's 'Diary of the Siege of Lyme' will be printed in full. Interesting matter is, in fact, abundant, and the volume is due to the suggestion of Prof. Firth, who has given assistance in the plan of it, and authorities to be consulted. Subscribers' names should be sent to Messrs. Barnicott & Pearce, the Wessex Press, Taunton, or Mr. B. H. Blackwell, Broad Street, Oxford.

THE BRITISH ACADEMY announce that the Schweich Lectures on Biblical Archaeology will be given by Prof. Kennett on May 28th, June 4th, and 11th. These lectures will be open to the public free, and the subject will be 'The Composition of the Book of Isaiah in the Light of Archaeology and History.'

THE June Sunday at Home will contain an article on 'New England and Boston,' by the Rev. J. Edgar Park; 'Studies in St. Paul's Prison Ministry,' by the Bishop of Sodor and Man; and the conclusion of the Rev. Dr. Hanson's discussion of the first chapter of Genesis. Mr. Oliver G. Pike writes on 'The Buzzard and its Home.'

The Oxford Magazine of last week says:

"All who are interested in Latin scholarship in Oxford must have been pleased, and no one, we are sure, can have been surprised, at the election of Mr. A. C. Clark to the re-established Latin Readership. We say re-established, for there has not been a Reader in Latin since 1893, when Prof. Nettleship died and Mr. Robinson Ellis was promoted from the Readership to the Corpus Chair."

MR. QUARITCH announces that Part I. is now ready of a carefully revised edition of the well-known 'Chinese-English Dictionary' published in 1892 by Prof. H. A. Giles. Many corrections have been made, and about twenty thousand entries have been added.

MR. CHARLES E. ROCHE writes:—

"May I point out that the author whose death you announce was Olive Logan, and not Morgan?"

MR. J. W. CLARK's life-long devotion to Cambridge is to be recognized by a Festschrift written by some of his many friends at home and abroad. The volume will contain thirty-one papers and a short bibliography, and will be presented to Mr. Clark in June on the occasion of his seventy-sixth birthday.

WE regret to notice the death at St. Andrews of Mr. H. C. S. Everard, a golfer and writer on golfing topics. The eldest son of Henry Everard of Gosberton, Lincolnshire, he graduated at Oxford, but lived for the greater part of his life at St. Andrews. He was author of 'The Theory and Practice of Golf' and an excellent 'History of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club.'

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces a cheap edition of the Rev. H. T. Dixon's 'Have Miracles Happened?' which met with a good reception last year.

MR. STOCK will also publish immediately 'The Dawn of Christianity in Continental Europe and the Planting of the Order of Knights of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England.' The work, which is written by Miss S. F. A. Caulfeild (a "Lady of Grace" of the Order), will be illustrated from photographs.

UNDER the title 'Wind and Hill' Messrs. Smith & Elder will publish immediately a volume of poems inspired by the spirit of the mountains, and written by Mr. Geoffrey Young.

WE hear that a movement is on foot to establish a permanent memorial of Moncure D. Conway by "the endowment of periodical lectures by distinguished public men, to further the cause of social, political, and religious freedom, with which Dr. Conway's name must ever be associated." It is proposed that the lectures should be printed and widely circulated. A preliminary canvass among those known to be specially interested in Dr. Conway's work has produced a sum running into three figures, and the Committee are now making a wider appeal. The head-quarters of the movement are at Dr. Conway's old chapel in South Place, Finsbury, where the Treasurer may be addressed.

A REMARKABLE collection of Alpine and mountaineering books will be offered by Messrs. Hodgson on Wednesday next. It was formed by the late Sir Maurice Holzmann, K.C.B., who was for many years Librarian to the King (when Prince of Wales), and also held the position of Keeper of the Records of the Duchy of Cornwall. The collection, which contains upwards of 1,600 volumes, not to mention a number of pamphlets and maps, comprises the writings of all the best-known English climbers, as well as a large selection of German and French periodicals, and many early and curious works relating to Switzerland and the Alps.

MR. RALPH STRAUS, of 58, Bassett Road, North Kensington, W., is preparing for the press the life and letters of Robert Dodsley, and would be glad to hear of any letters and papers of, or relating to Dodsley in private collections.

WE are sorry to notice the death on Monday last, at the early age of forty, of the Rev. C. H. Thursfield Wood, who recently retired, owing to ill-health, from the head-mastership of Sherborne School. Mr. Wood was the son of the head master of Harrow, was for five years an assistant master at Marlborough, and was only appointed last year to Sherborne.

WE hear from Paris that Madame Marcelle Tinayre is visiting Turkey for the Revue des Deux Mondes to study the effect of the Young Turk movement on Mohammedan women, and also that a novel from her pen, dealing with Western problems, is likely to appear in the Revue de Paris under the title of 'L'Ombre de l'Amour.' The first part is expected for one of the September numbers.

MADAME MARCELLE TINAYRE's story is understood to deal with the transformation human love is undergoing in a period of transition caused by the present growth of feminist opinion. It will complete a view of which the more obvious side was represented in 'La Rebelle' and the novels of other women writers we have noticed. The scene is laid in the mountains of the Department of La Corrèze, in which a part of Madame Tinayre's youth was spent.

At the last meeting of the Académie Française a number of annual prizes were awarded. The Prix de Poésie, of which the subject was 'Le Drapeau,' was divided into three, the largest share (2,000fr.) going to M. Maurice Couallier. The Prix François Coppée (1,000fr.) was taken by M. Gustave Zidler for his 'Terre divine.' The Prix Santour (3,000fr.) was divided equally among M. Théodore Rosset, M. Verier, and M. Onillon for their literary works. The Prix Langlois was divided between Prof. Legouis and M. Georges Duval for their translations of English works, and the Prix Archon-Despérouses, for the encouragement of young poets, was given to M. Abel Bonnard (1,500fr.), M. Jean Balde (800fr.), and Mlle. Jeanne Nels (800fr.).

DR. HERMANN OSTHOFF, whose death in his sixty-third year is announced from Heidelberg, was Professor of Indo-Germanic Philology and Sanskrit at the University of that town, and author of a number of valuable works, among them 'Die neueste Sprachforschung und die Erklärung des indogermanischen Ablauts,' 'Zur Geschichte des Perfekts im Indogermanischen mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Griechisch und Lateinisch,' and 'Etymologische Parerga.'

THE death at the age of sixty-two is reported from Zurich of the well-known popular writer Hans Nydegger, author of a number of stories, most of which were written in Swiss dialect and had an historical background.

WE note the appearance of the following Government Papers: Calendar of Patent Rolls, Richard II., 1396-9 (15s.); Education, Wales, Regulations as to Pupil Teachers, Bursary and Student-Teachers (3d.); Language Teaching in Secondary Schools (1d.); and Report on the Finances of the University of Aberdeen (4½d.).

SCIENCE

Native Life in East Africa. By Dr. Karl Weule. Translated by Alice Werner. (Pitman & Sons.)

THIS volume presents the results of an ethnological research expedition into the south-eastern portion of German East Africa undertaken by Prof. Weule, who is Director of the Leipsic Ethnographical Museum, and occupies the chair of "Völkerkunde und Urgeschichte" in the University of that city. His residence in Africa extended over the second half of 1906, and the present volume of 431 pages is good evidence of the thorough German industry with which he pursued and recorded his researches. He has been fortunate in his English translator, whose book on the native races of South Africa and contributions on the women of South and South-West Africa to the 'Women of All Nations,' showed her knowledge of African native races. Indeed, she may claim to have edited as well as translated Dr. Weule's work, inasmuch as she has furnished a critical Introduction; has omitted the personal addresses and allusions consequent upon the form of letters to wife and friends adopted by the author in the German work; has "handled the text freely," and "eliminated passages which added nothing important to the narrative, and fell intolerably flat in translation"; and has by foot-notes called attention to any statements in the text that appeared to her disputable or questionable. Whether the author approves of this or not, it is clearly an advantage to the reader, inasmuch as his attention is called to both sides of several questions, and he is warned against some of the dangers of hasty generalization.

Dr. Weule started on his mission with instructions from the Geographical Exploration Committee of the German Colonial Office to explore the northern part of German East Africa, from Mount Kilimanjaro to Lake Victoria Nyanza; but when he arrived at Dar es Salam, he found that the Iraku rising had left that part in a condition of disturbance which was not favourable to ethnographic research. He accordingly obtained leave of the authorities to change his plans, and went to Lindi by steamer, taking a circuit from that port through Nyangao, Masasi, Chingulungulu, and across the Makonde plateau. He did not attempt to do any anthropometric work, and the volume is therefore deficient in the tabular and statistical matter which now forms an important, though perhaps not very attractive, part of most records of anthropological observation. As an ethnographer, he considered that he had more urgent work to attend to, and that time was too precious for the use of measuring instruments, compasses, and poles. He also thought that the types of the various tribes were too much mixed, and that there was probably no distinction of race, for all alike belong to the great sub-group of the East African Bantu.

However, he had with him a cinematograph, a phonograph, and a dynamometer, and made good use of these. He obtained a great number of excellent photographs, and records of native songs, and induced some of his carriers and others to make original sketches, several of which illustrate the volume.

These native drawings are interesting. Some of them were made by Barnabas, an educated Makua, from a distant part of the interior, who has passed all the examinations in the Government school at Lindi, is now engaged in the Post Office, and is an occasional contributor to a Swahili newspaper. Only one specimen of his art is given here: a sketch of a herd of elephants. It certainly shows some technical skill, but as an accurate and life-like representation of the animal depicted it is far behind the famous prehistoric mammoth on a tusk found in Perigord. The other specimens are produced by persons, whether carriers, soldiers, or savages from the interior, who have never had pencil and paper in hand before. Some of the drawings are spirited, as, for example, a portrait of Dr. Weule himself, "Bwana Pufesa" (professor), and a picture of a chain gang; but their execution is much like that of the early artistic efforts of children.

The fashions for women include the insertion of a large plug of wood in the upper lip (distorting it out of all shape) of a metal pin or peg in the lower lip, and of plugs in the lobes of the ears, as well as the decoration of the skin by scars, forming keloids arranged in various patterns. The distortion of the lips gives rise to a wonderful display of teeth in the act of laughter. The women wear garments of calico, gaily coloured. The phonograph appears to have greatly delighted them:—

"When the full-voiced melody poured forth from the mysterious funnel in exactly the same time and with the precise timbre which had been sung into it....all the more unsophisticated souls joined in the chorus....Two women, who had previously attracted my notice by their tremendous vocal power, as well as by the elegance of their attire, came forward again....first one and then the other approached the apparatus, dropped a curtsy in the finest court style, and waving her hand towards the mouthpiece said 'Good-bye, my voice.' They had not lost their voices in the least, yet because they had heard them coming out of the phonograph, they solemnly took leave of them."

One object of great interest is figured at p. 114, a shutter with inlaid swastika in Nakaam's house at Mwiti, neatly worked in ivory. The only explanation the owner gave of it was that it was a star. Dr. Weule infers that it was introduced by the builder of the house from the coast as a mere matter of ornamentation.

He found his stay at Masasi, which lasted a little less than a fortnight, a disappointment as regards the customs, habits, and ideas of the natives; and he commented on the difficulty at Chingulungulu of obtaining information as to the more intimate customs, habits, and opinions of the people, and thus penetrating into their intellectual and moral life. His translator suggests that this was to some extent his own fault, since the natives do not readily respond to direct leading questions, and his methods were not always conciliatory. He acknowledges himself that he was somewhat free in the use of the whip. Whether his carriers and other attendants shared the proverbial characters of "a spaniel, a wife, and a walnut tree," or not, they do not seem to have harboured any resentment of his treatment, and kept on good terms with him throughout the expedition. If we may judge by the pleasant style in which he writes and by many other indications, Dr. Weule has the faculty of making himself popular, even among native surroundings. He found his dynamometer of service in amusing his men and their friends. The whole troop in turn took the steel oval and pressed it, and would go on for hours without tiring. Fortunately, the Professor himself always obtained better results than his men, indeed, he suggests that, so far as a spontaneous exhibition of strength goes, Europeans are as giants compared with the African.

The book is of interest throughout, as the record of the impressions of a sympathetic and fortunate observer, possessing scientific appliances, eminence in the knowledge of ethnology, and the habit of original thinking.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

MR. F. G. PARSONS, Lecturer on Anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital and at the London School of Medicine for Women, has made a careful study of the famous ossuary at Hythe, and has presented a report of it to the Royal Anthropological Institute for their Journal. It is now admitted that the bones are the result of ordinary interments, brought together and stacked up. Mr. Parsons counted the thighbones of 4,000 individuals, men, women, and children. He measured 590 skulls. He attributes them mainly to the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.

Mr. A. L. Lewis has reported to the same Journal his observations on three tomb-chambers near Autun, and on the remains of the buried group of menhirs at St. Pantaléon.

Prof. Ridgeway holds that the crescent form is the result of placing two claws of animals, base to base, as an amulet, and that the connexion of the crescent with the moon is a later development. The Mohammedan, therefore, in adopting the crescent as a badge, used a symbol of pre-existing primitive peoples. The discussion on this question is reported in the Journal.

Mr. Mark Sykes's paper on the Kurdish tribes of the Ottoman Empire is "the result of about 7,500 miles of riding, and innumerable conversations with policemen, muleteers, mullahs, chieftains, sheepdrovers, horse-dealers, carriers, and other people capable of giving one first-hand information."

The report of Mr. H. A. Rose, local correspondent of the Institute on Hindu betrothal observances in the Punjab, is prefaced by a general statement of orthodox Shastric ideas on the subject of betrothal, which is interesting, as it specifies the conditions in boy and girl which are believed to be eugenic.

Mrs. Brenda Z. Seligmann's description of a devil-dance performed to cure sickness at Gonagolla, a remote jungle village in the Eastern province of Ceylon, is illustrated by seventeen photographs. A collection of photographs of the Veddas of Ceylon and of their ceremonial dances was exhibited by Dr. C. G. Seligmann at the conversazione of the Royal Society described in last week's Athenæum. The dances are performed to obtain the assistance of the spirits of the dead.

A correspondent of Man sends to that periodical for May some observations by Mr. E. H. Man on the marriage customs of the Nicobar Islanders, which appear to be regulated only by consanguinity, the marriage of first cousins or nearer relatives being prohibited, but not by any rule of exogamy or division into castes, as was suggested by Nicolas Fontana, who visited the islands in 1778.

Mr. A. E. Lawrence, Assistant Resident of Mukah, and Mr. John Hewitt, Curator of the Museum of Sarawak, have collected much information on some aspects of spirit worship among the Milano (a tribe engaged in the working of sago on the coastal regions of North-West Borneo), and contributed it, with many illustrations, to the Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute.

Mr. T. A. Joyce, in Man, adds to his previous observations on steatite figures from Sierra Leone drawings and descriptions of similar figures since acquired by the British Museum, with some observations by the Rev. A. E. Greensmith on those objects called "nomoli," or soapstone persons, and, when accompanied by metallic rings, "mahai-yafei," i.e., king spirit or king devil, and used in the courts of the chiefs for witnesses to be sworn upon.

The Law Quarterly Review for April contains an article by Mr. W. Morris Carter, Judge of His Majesty's High Court at Uganda, on the clan system, land tenure, and succession among the Baganda, which may usefully be consulted by anthropologists.

Dr. F. C. Shrubbsall, in Man, gives measurements and photographs of two crania and some long bones in the Natural History Department of the British Museum that are referred to by Mr. Hall in his work on Rhodesia as having been found in the neighbourhood of the ruins. The contribution they offer to the controversy as to the antiquity of those ruins is that, in Dr. Shrubbsall's opinion, they are those of negroes of a similar type to those now found in Rhodesia.

SOCIETIES.

LINNEAN.—May 6.—Dr. D. H. Scott, President, in the chair.—Mr. J. Pearson, Mr. E. J. Salisbury, and Mr. F. Hicks were admitted Fellows.—Dr. W. H. Lang and Mr. M. H. Foquet Sutton were elected Fellows; and Prof. Yves Delage and Prof. Magnus Gustaf Retzius were elected Foreign Members.—The following Auditors were elected: For the Council, Sir Frank Crisp and Prof. J. F. Hill; for the Fellows, Mr. G. S. Saunders and Mr. H. Groves.—Mr. E. A. Newell Arber explained by lantern slides the ecology of two alpine species of Sempervivum, namely, S. arachnoideum and S. montanum.—Dr. Otto Stapf made some additional remarks.—Mr. J. Buckland exhibited a series of sixty lantern-slides received from the United States and Australia, in illustration of various species of birds in imminent danger of extinction in consequence of the commercial demand for their plumage as means of adornment. He pointed out the urgency of prohibitive legislation in order to save a multitude of birds, now rare, owing to the reckless slaughter by the plume-hunters.—Prof. A. Dendy spoke of the remarkable interest of the exhibition, and trusted that the devotion of Mr. Buckland to the cause he had so much at heart would be crowned with success. He referred to the fact that the Council of the Society had done what it could, by supporting the proposed Bill for the restriction of the importation of plumage into this country.—The first paper, by Mrs. Leonora J. Wilsmore, 'On some Zoanthæ from Queensland and the New Hebrides,' was read in title by the Zoological Secretary.—The second paper, 'On Two New Genera of Thysanoptera from Venezuela,' by Mr. Richard S. Bagnall, was also formally read.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—May 5.—Dr. F. A. Dixey, President, in the chair.—Mr. S. A. Neave exhibited three specimens of a remarkable Cæstrid fly belonging to the genus Spathicera, Corti, captured on the carcase of a rhinoceros shot by him near Fort Jameson, N.E. Rhodesia, in February, 1908. He pointed out the extreme rarity of individuals of this genus in the imago state, though the Cæstrid larvæ had long been known and frequently recorded in the intestinal canal of Rhinoceros bicornis, and recently Prof. Sjöstedt had succeeded in rearing one individual from a larva described by him under the name Meruensis. Mr. Neave remarked that this seemed to be the first recorded occasion on which the adult insect had actually been observed to be following the rhinoceros.—Mr. H. St. J. Donisthorpe brought for exhibition the following new and rare British ants: Formica exsecta, Nyl., and Dinarda hagensi, Wasm., from Parkhurst, I.W., the latter hitherto only observed at Bournemouth; Tetramoeria donisthorpei, Kieffer, n.sp., and T. femoralis, Kieffer, n.sp., taken by himself with Tetramorium cæspitum, L., at Whitsand Bay, Cornwall, on April 15th last; Paracletes cimiciformis, taken with T. cæspitum at Barnes Head, Cornwall; and Antenormorphus pubescens, Wasm., a species new to Britain, taken on Lasius flavus at Whitsand Bay.—Mr. W. E. Sharpe exhibited examples of Coleoptera from the West of Ireland to illustrate the prevalence of colour-variation in that region.—Mr. H. St. J. Donisthorpe showed three melanic forms of Carabus nitens, C. arvensis, and Pterostichus dimidiatus from the New Forest, all quite black.—Mr. Sharpe, explaining his exhibit, said that in his opinion these dark forms were racial, and represented the survival of an older race, and that the melanism was not due to protective necessities, derived from the environment of the localities in which the several species existed.—Mr. H. Rowland-Brown exhibited a series of Picris manni, Mayer, lately described as a separate species of "white," from le Vernet, Pyrénées-Orientales, and called attention to the superficial differences which presented themselves when compared with images of P. rapa.—Mr. E. C. Bedwell exhibited a series of Cassida fastuosa taken by him on Boxhill, Surrey (a new locality) mostly from the leaves of young foxgloves.—Dr. G. B. Longstaff exhibited a series of 33 specimens of Danaïda chrysippus taken by him in Egypt and the Sudan during January and February, 1909.—Mr. T. Bainbridge Fletcher exhibited two mimics of D. chrysippus: the females of Elymnias undularis and of Argynnis hyperliis (niphæ), whose males in both cases show the ordinary coloration of the genera to which they belong. He also exhibited specimens of a large and conspicuous Mydæid fly, Mydas ruficornis, Wied., which shows a striking resemblance when on the wing to the large and powerfully armed Scoliid wasps so common throughout Ceylon; a red spider (taken at Calle on October 26th, 1908) found on a "bilimbi" tree (Arenhoa bilimbi), up the trunk of which members of the common leaf-nesting red ant, Ecophylla smaragdina—a model for several different insects and spiders—were running; some newly hatched Mantids from tea-bushes, whereon they closely mimicked the common leaf-nest ant; examples of a small Pyralid moth (Syngamia floridalis), when flying, exactly like a Coccinellid beetle; and a yellow-spotted Reduviid bug, Acanthaspis quinquispinosa, Fab., an interesting case of warning coloration common to various Carabid beetles found in the same locality and situations (under logs, &c.).

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHAEOLOGY.—May 12.—Mr. H. R. Hall in the chair.—Mr. F. Legge read a paper on 'The Carved Slates and this Season's Discoveries,' in which he said that Mr. Ayrton's discovery of a prehistoric cemetery at Mahasna during the winter of 1908-9 had thrown great light on the scenes depicted on the carved slates from Hieraconpolis and elsewhere. They had shown in the first place the existence of a tribe in predynastic times having as their totem or symbol the lion, and the slates seemed to show that this tribe fought alternately for and against the great confederation of the followers of Horus, or the Hawks. A statuette discovered by Mr. Ayrton also argued, according to the author, the existence of a large servile or subject population, distinguished by the wearing of the karnata or cincture and sheath (traces of which, he thought, might be found in Crete and Greece), who were subdued by the kilt-wearing tribes who gave their names to the nomes. Dr. Platt and the Chairman also spoke, the latter doubting the existence of the karnata in Europe, or elsewhere than in Africa.

MATHEMATICAL.—May 13.—Sir W. D. Niven, President, in the chair.—Vicomte Robert de Montessus de Ballore was elected a Member.—Mr. H. B. Heywood was admitted into the Society.—The following papers were communicated: 'Ternary Quadratic Types,' by Mr. H. W. Turnbull; 'On Gauss's Theorem, and on the Semi-Convergence of Certain Force Integrals in the Theory of Attractions,' by Dr. J. G. Leathem; and 'On the Continuity or Discontinuity of a Function defined by an Infinite Product,' by Mr. J. E. Littlewood.

HELLENIC.—May 11.—Prof. Percy Gardner, President, in the chair.—Dr. L. R. Farnell read an illustrated paper on 'The Megala Dionysia and the Origin of Tragedy,' in which he contended that the origin of tragedy partly turned on the question about the date of the introduction of the cult of Dionysus 'Ελευθερεύς from Eleutherai. Vollgraff's view was that this was only introduced shortly before the peace of Nicias; if so, the legend and cult of Eleutherai would not necessarily throw light on the origin of tragedy. But there were strong reasons against Vollgraff's view, and for supposing that the cult and cult-legends of Eleutherai reached Athens as early as the middle of the sixth century B.C., and that a new "cathartic" festival in spring was instituted to provide for the god of this new cult. Scholars had long felt the difficulty in the Aristotelian dogma that "tragedy" arose somehow from the dithyramb and was primarily "satyric": a new theory had been put forward by Prof. Ridgeway that tragedy arose not from Dionysiac ritual, but from a mimetic service performed at the graves of heroes. But whatever advantages attached to this theory, it did not account, any more than the older theory accounted, for the name τραγῳδία. No explanation of this word of any probability had ever been put forth other than the obvious one, that it meant "goat-song"; that is, according to the most likely analogies, the song of men dressed in goat-skins. The mistake hitherto made was to suppose that men so dressed were satyrs. The original performers in the τραγῳδία were worshippers of Dionysus Μελάναιγς, a god of the black goat-skin; and their mimetic dance was solemn, sad, always tragic, probably originally a winter rite. The true meaning of the primitive service was indicated partly by the legend concerning Dionysus Μελάναιγς and the duel between Melanthus and Xanthus, in which Black-man killed Fair-man; partly by the story of the Minyan φολῳίς of Orchomenus, who had to do with a ritual in which the young god was killed; partly by the discovery by Mr. R. M. Dawkins of a Dionysiac mummers' play in modern Thrace, of which pictures taken on the spot were exhibited, in which goat-men appeared and a goat-man was slain and lamented. They must look for the origin of Attic tragedy in an ancient European mummery, which was a winter-drama of the seasons, in which the Black personage Dionysus Μελάναιγς or Μελάνθος, or ὁ φολῳίς, killed Xanthus the Fair One. The actors wore the black goat-skin of their god. Such a peasant mummery-play spreading through the North-Greek villages would often attract the local dramatic legend of some priest like Icarus, who was slain in the service of the god: this would bring in the "heroic" element, the death of the Dionysiac "hero": the heroic element triumphed, all heroes were admitted, and the black goat-skin was discarded. Finally the religious intention of the festival explained the Aristotelian theory of "Katharsis."

Prof. W. Ridgeway discussed the paper at some length, contending that in the Adrasteia we had a clear instance of the funerary origin of tragedy; that the myth of the Black-man killing Fair-man was merely a primitive nature myth; and that the Thracian mummery-play witnessed by Mr. Dawkins could not fairly be described as solemn, sad, and tragic, as it contained elements distinctly Dionysiac.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- Mon. Geographical, 3.—Annual Meeting.
- Linnean, 3.—Annual Meeting.
- Surveyors' Institution, 5.—Annual Meeting.
- Tues. Royal Institution, 3.—The Ilittites: (2) Recent Discoveries in Asia Minor and Northern Syria, Prof. J. Garstang.
- Zoological, 8.30.—Description of a New Species of the Genus Alpheus, Fabr., from the Bay of Batavia, Dr. J. G. De Man; 'On the Skull of a Black Bear from Eastern Tibet,' Mr. R. Lydekker; 'The Anatomy of the Olfactory Organ of Teleostean Fishes,' Mr. R. H. Burne.

- Wed. British Numismatic, 8.
- Geological, 8.—'The Cauldron Subsidence of Glencoe, and the Associated Igneous Phenomena,' Messrs. C. T. Clough, H. B. Muff, and E. B. Bailey; 'The Pitting of Flint-Surfaces,' Mr. C. Carus-Wilson.
- Society of Arts, 8.—'The Manufacture of Nitrate of Lime from Atmospheric Nitrogen,' Mr. S. Eyde.
- Thurs. Royal Institution, 3.—'Newfoundland,' Lecture III., Mr. J. G. Millais.
- Royal, 4.30.
- Society of Arts, 4.30.—'The Function of Schools of Art in India,' Mr. C. L. Burns. (Indian Section.)
- Society of Antiquaries, 8.30.—'On some Late Celtic Remains at Broadstairs, Kent,' Mr. Howard Hurd; 'Notes on Lead-stones and Eaglestones,' Mr. Albert Hartshorne; 'Carved Achievement of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester,' Mr. Seymour Lucas.
- Fri. Royal Institution, 9.—'Advances in our Knowledge of Silicon as an Organic Element,' Mr. J. E. Reynolds.
- Sat. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Secret Societies of the Banks Islands,' Lecture II., Dr. W. H. R. Rivers.

Science Gossip.

DR. G. A. GIBSON writes from 3, Drums-hugh Gardens, Edinburgh:—

"In response to the wishes of Lady Gairdner and her family, I have undertaken to edit the medical and scientific papers and articles of the late Sir William Tennant Gairdner, and to preface the collection with a biography. In order to render the work as worthy as possible of the memory of the late Professor, I am desirous of enlisting the sympathy and help of his friends. I venture, therefore, to request, through your columns, that any one who has in his possession any letters or other literary remains of Sir William Gairdner will be so kind as to communicate with me."

WITH regard to our remark last week in speaking of the 'Connaissance des Temps' for 1911 and the solar eclipse on the 28th of April that year, that the central line will nowhere cross land, the Superintendent of 'The Nautical Almanac' (Dr. Downing) writes to point out that, though it will not actually cross land, it will pass very near the Tonga Islands, and that at Vavau, one of that group, the totality will last somewhat more than 3½ minutes. The island is 9½ miles long by 6½ miles wide, and Neiafu on its south-western coast (longitude 173° 59' west, latitude 18° 39' south) is a port of call for mails from Sydney every fourth week. The local time of totality will be about 21 minutes before 9 in the morning, and no doubt astronomers will make a strenuous effort to observe the eclipse.

THE ADMIRALTY have decided to restore Halley's tomb in the churchyard of St. Margaret's, Lee. So far as is known, not any of his descendants are living. The same grave holds the remains of another Astronomer Royal, John Pond, who resigned in 1835, and was succeeded by Sir George Airy.

THE death at the age of seventy-nine is announced from Munich of the distinguished physician Dr. Heinrich von Ranke, nephew of the historian. He studied at Erlangen, Berlin, Leipsic, and Tübingen, and after taking his degree came to England as house surgeon to the German Hospital in London. He was sent to the Crimea by the English Government, and was present at the siege of Sebastopol. Returning to Germany in 1859, he soon won for himself a reputation as one of the foremost children's doctors, and was in 1874 appointed Professor at the University of Munich. He was greatly interested in questions relating to public hygiene and agricultural improvements. In addition to his numerous scientific publications, he wrote on archæology.

RECENT Parliamentary Papers of Scientific interest include Report of H.M.'s Astronomer at the Cape (1d.); and Report on Admiralty Surveys for 1908 (2d.).

Two new variable stars are announced, both in the constellation Lacerta, detected by Madame Ceraski whilst examining photographic plates taken by M. Blazko at the Moscow Observatory. The first (var. 15, 1909, Lacertæ) changes from the tenth to the eleventh magnitude, the period being short or irregular. The second (var. 16, 1909, Lacertæ) is also of the tenth magnitude at its maximum, but sinks below the twelfth at minimum; the period is probably some months in length.

ANOTHER number of the Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani has appeared. Prof. Riccò gives the statistics of the solar spots and faculae observed at Catania during the first half of 1908; and there are papers by Prof. Bemporad and others, besides diagrams of the images of the sun's limb observed at Catania, Kalocsa, Madrid, Odessa, Rome, Zô-sè, and Zurich from the 30th of May to the 9th of September, 1906.

MR. HEINEMANN writes:—

"Various contributions have been published in different periodicals in connexion with Lieut. Shackleton's Antarctic discoveries, generally illustrated with pictures taken from prior Antarctic expeditions. May I, in order to avoid any confusion or misunderstanding, be allowed to say that I control the exclusive copyright in Lieut. Shackleton's writings on the expedition of the Nimrod, and that Lieut. Shackleton's articles will be published in England in Pearson's Magazine, and in America in McClure's Magazine? These will be the only articles published by Lieut. Shackleton, or any of his colleagues, prior to the publication of his book."

FINE ARTS

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

A Short History of Engraving and Etching. By A. M. Hind. (Constable & Co.)—This is an exceedingly serious book, and by no means a 'Short History' of a phase of art which has suffered a good deal from superfluous histories, English and otherwise. It is not a picture book, with text hastily thrown together for the purpose of accompanying a quantity of cheaply acquired process blocks. Mr. Hind set himself to produce a history of engraving and etching "for the use of collectors and students," and his 'History' exactly fills that want. Most previous efforts, in English and French at all events, have been "popular" in character, written with inadequate knowledge, and repeating the blunders of earlier writers.

In the scientific investigation of engravers and engraving the Germans are far ahead of us, and Mr. Hind fully acknowledges his debt to such works as Lippmann's 'Kupferstich' and Kristeller's 'Kupferstich und Holzschnitt in vier Jahrhunderten.' It is almost as difficult to expect a satisfactory treatise on the comprehensive subject of engraving from a private collector as from a novice. The limitations of the one are almost as serious as the ignorance of the other. The ruling passion of the collector is to collect, and the great knowledge which he often possesses after a lifelong study at first hand nearly always dies with him. One of the few exceptions was John Chaloner Smith, whose 'Mezzotinto Portraits' is a monument of labour, knowledge, and accuracy. Without coming into daily contact with engravings of all periods, and studying them as Robert Proctor studied incunabula, a man cannot write accurately and exhaustively; and it is to the custodians of great national collections such as those of the British Museum, Berlin, and the Bibliothèque Nationale that we look for help and guidance. Although Mr. Hind's book is in no sense an official publication, it possesses the admirable qualities which we are now accustomed to associate with Mr. Sidney Colvin and his assistants—thoroughness, accuracy, sobriety, and absence of flowery language. We confess to a liking for Chatto's 'Treatise on Wood Engraving,' which, in spite of its shortcomings, is, so far as we remember, the only acceptable history of the subject published in this country. Chatto wrote his book just seventy years ago, and so laboured under manifest disadvantages compared with Mr. Hind, whose book now supersedes all others, and must remain for a long time a standard authority.

Starting with a short chapter on processes and materials Mr. Hind takes us in stages through the earliest engravers of the fifteenth century; the great masters of engraving, 1495–1550; the beginnings of etching and its progress during the sixteenth century; the decline of original engraving; the first century of engraving in England; the great portrait engravers; the masters of etching, 1590–1700; and the later development and decay of line engraving, down to modern etching. Any one of the ten chapters into which Mr. Hind has divided his book could be easily elaborated into a substantial volume. His earlier chapters constitute an array of condensed facts and theories at which a reviewer may tilt in vain. We think that Barthel Beham (p. 83) was a "more talented artist" than his elder and more famous brother Hans Sebald Beham. We have recently seen a companion pair of portraits, each dated 1534, on panel, which, if the ascription is correct, reveal Barthel as one of the great portrait painters of his time, and suggest that many portraits by him are in existence to which his name is not attached.

In the portion which deals with the etchers of the Rubens School (p. 165), we find a reference in a foot-note to Schneevogt's 'Catalogue des Estampes grav. d'après Rubens,' p. 153, where is cited "a picture in the coll. of a Mr. Hastings Elevyn [sic] as being the original." Schneevogt is in this instance nearer the truth than Mr. Hind. The owner referred to was Mr. Hastings Elwin, of Booton, Norfolk, some of whose pictures (but not the Rubens, which had long before changed hands) were sold at Messrs. Christie's on February 1st, 1902. Mr. Hind will find all about the picture and its variants in Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné,' part. ii. No. 770.

Nearly a third of Mr. Hind's book is occupied with appendixes. The first of these consists of a classified list of engravers, who again are arranged according to a geographical distribution—those of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and German Switzerland forming one group, those of the Netherlands another, and so forth. These lists are of great value for reference, for they show at a glance not only the period of the leading engraver, but also those who were more or less influenced by his work; for instance, opposite the name of William Faithorne we have the names of D. Loggan, R. White, P. Lombart, A. Blooteling, and P. van der Bank.

The second Appendix consists of a general bibliography of engraving, the fullest of its kind hitherto drawn up in this country. This section, full as it is, affords ample opportunity for comment. We will take a few of the entries in Mr. Hind's order. Vinet's 'Bibliographie méthodique et raisonnée des Beaux-Arts' (p. 393) was, we believe, never finished. It was to have been in four parts. The first appeared in 1874, the second in 1877; but Vinet died whilst the third was in preparation. A notice of the publishers printed in the second part stated that the work would be continued and finished on Vinet's system by Messrs. A. Choisy, E. Müntz, and G. Pawlowski; but, so far as we can find, these two parts are still unpublished. With regard to Bartsch, 'Le Peintre-graveur' (p. 396), it would have been a great advantage to a print-collector forming a library to have references to sources wherein Bartsch is amplified or supplemented; for instance, in 1857 the well-known firm of print-dealers A. E. Evans & Sons published 'A Descriptive Catalogue of Nearly Four Hundred Engravings unknown to Bartsch.' This is a substantial pamphlet of 50 pages, each print is fully described and the measurements given, and so this 'Descriptive Catalogue' is essential to possessors of Bartsch's great work. In this section also we should have included Evans's 'Fine-Art Catalogue and Print Collector's Manual,' which enumerates nearly 6,000 etchings and engravings by "artists of every school and period." It was published circa 1857, and although a tradesman's catalogue, is in many respects a most useful book. It is distinct from Evans's two catalogues of portraits cited by Mr. Hind on p. 405. Under 'Fans and Fan-Leaves' (p. 403) mention should have been made of Robert Walker's 'Cabinet of Old Fans,' catalogued for sale at Messrs. Sotheby's on June 8th, 1882, and two following days (462 lots): the illustrated edition of the catalogue contains 52 fine autotype plates. Under the heading 'Portraits' Mr. Hind has slighted woman by ignoring the 'Manuel de Bibliographie biographique et d'Iconographie des Femmes célèbres,' by "un Vieux Bibliophile," of which the second and last supplement was issued in 1905. W. F. Tiffin (p. 405) also wrote an amusing little book, 'Gossip about Portraits, principally Engraved Portraits,' 1866, which was published by Bohn, and is full of discursive anecdotes.

The section 'Bibliographies of Sales and other Catalogues' (p. 409) is capable of extension and revision. Of Dr. Mireur's 'Dictionnaire de Ventes' only two volumes have appeared, or are likely to appear.

The History of Engraving from its Inception to the Time of Thomas Bewick. By Stanley Austin. (Werner Laurie.)—It is unfortunate for Mr. Austin that his 'History' should have appeared almost simultaneously with that of Mr. Hind, for no two volumes on the same topic could afford a more striking contrast. This book contains some 30,000 words, and no 'History' can properly deal with the rise and progress of engraving 'From its Inception to the Time of Bewick' in this space. It is made up of a series of articles which the author contributed to The Print-seller and Collector in 1903–4. Of the many illustrations which, in serial form, gave some small amount of interest to the text, only eighteen are here republished. A 'History of Engraving' with eighteen illustrations! "Standard works on this subject," says the author in his Preface, "are costly and scantily illustrated, and I have found reason to traverse many opinions which have been before expressed." Illustrations, as Mr. Austin ought to know, form an expensive item in book-production. "Costly," too, is a relative term. Popular and cheap work on any subject is seldom worth its price. We make a few comments on details. The 'Speculum Humanæ Salvationis' (p. 43) has long since ceased to be "Lord Spencer's copy"; and "Grainger" (passim) is not the correct form of that worthy's name. Henry "Moorland" (p. 136) and "Delattre" (p. 172) are also slips. Mr. Austin says: "Unscrupulous persons have not hesitated to engrave the name of Bartolozzi on plates which were never touched by him" (pp. 172–173). The author's hero was himself guilty of conniving at this sort of thing: Charles Knight's engraving of Miss Farren (Countess of Derby) was published as by Bartolozzi, who probably did not make half a score dots on the plate. No one denies Bewick's share in the revival of wood engraving, but to declare that he was "to Art what Shakespeare was to Letters" seems to us a hopeless overstatement.

The Engraved Work of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. By W. G. Rawlinson. Vol. I. (Macmillan & Co.)—Mr. Rawlinson is recognized as the first authority on engravings after Turner, and his catalogue of the 'Liber Studiorum' enjoys so high a reputation that the sequel, of which this volume is the first instalment, has been awaited by collectors with lively interest and confident anticipation of a notable performance. Such anticipation is amply justified by the event. The book has been written, not only with scholarly accuracy and at least a near approximation to completeness, but also with a fine taste and sense of proportion. The author's critical remarks are sober and well grounded, his quotations apt, and restrained within sensible limits: he does not load the book with every impulsive utterance of Ruskin. Mrs. Alfred Hunt's notes, largely quoted for the 'History of Richmondshire,' supply a valuable and illuminating commentary on the plates.

The catalogue is confined to the engravings, mezzotints, aquatints, and lithographs issued during Turner's life or by engravers who had worked under his supervision. That is a wise restriction, for Turner, an exacting taskmaster, established by his personal influence a very high standard of reproductive work, especially in line engraving, and a tradition which grew weaker as soon as death had removed the stimulus and inspiration of its founder. A brief outline list of the whole of the prints is given first, to the number of 863; then follows the detailed catalogue, extending to No. 312, the end of the line engravings on copper. The information is always full and practically arranged. The only quarrel we have with Mr. Rawlinson's method is that he departs from the usual—nay, almost invariable—practice of cataloguers by quoting width before height. The fact that most of Turner's landscapes are oblong is, surely, an inadequate excuse for this irregularity. An oblong subject is just as naturally measured first by its height as an upright one. The only instance in which we have noticed any lapse from the generally impeccable finish of execution is that under Nos. 66 and 79 a collection, "M.," appears which is not explained on p. lxxxiii. The long Introduction, placing the various series of publications of Turner's pictures in the right perspective with regard to their chronology and relative importance, is exceedingly interesting. In discussing the relative merits of the several processes for translating painted landscape into black and white, Mr. Rawlinson comes forward as the stalwart champion of line engraving. His advocacy of that unjustly neglected art deserves attention at a time when tone processes, mezzotint and its mechanical rival photogravure, are preferred by the public to the vastly more difficult, but, as Mr. Rawlinson claims, more "luminous" work of the line engraver.

PICTURES BY JAN STEEN.

THE loan collection organized by Messrs. Dowdeswell in aid of the National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic is an excellent idea from the artistic as well as the charitable point of view, for the work of Jan Steen has had something less than the study it deserves. More than any other of the so-called "Little Masters" of Holland, he belies the term—strange flashes of greatness constantly emerging from his curiously unequal work. The men with whom he is usually ranked—Teniers, Terborch, De Hoogh, even the matchless Vermeer—are craftsmen who have carried to perfection a speciality, and within its limits maintain an astonishingly high level of practice. Jan Steen showed himself again and again capable of a like proficiency, but as a rule is not so much careful to maintain the level of his past work as eager to transcend it in some one direction. For all the apparent monotony of his subject-matter, his invention is Shakespearian in its fertility, and he is for ever exploring new fields. In spite of certain repetitions of figures and types, which look like marks of the manufacturer, he was at bottom less of a practitioner than a chercheur, and hence the imperfection of much of his work. He is restless and unsettled for all his tremendous technical skill—as experimental as if he were a painter of the twentieth instead of the seventeenth century.

Biographers remind us that his position had something in common with that of many modern painters. With him, as with them, art did not quite pay its way, and he was obliged to give a large slice of his life to work which interested him less. To a considerable proportion of penniless painters to-day the same sacrifice is inevitable, and we are able to observe the natural result—the tendency first to crabbed criticism of the work of other artists more favourably situated; the recognition afterwards of the obligation to try their own painting by standards as exacting. This develops the "divine discontent" of the artist to an abnormal pitch, causing him to strain at tasks beyond his strength—or at least his opportunities—and making his work nervous, spasmodic, and unquiet.

To such men we would offer some comfort by pointing out that they are "poor relations" of Jan Steen, in whom are to be remarked the advantages of such a position. His execution has an extraordinary and vivid directness: it has rarely the imitative look which betrays the presence of the model, but still less has it the aloofness of painting done from drawings. It is the product of a mind habitually exercised in a kind of technical imagination. We can imagine Jan Steen occupied with his unexact duties as an innkeeper—duties which prevented him from wielding the brush—but did not prevent him from trying over and over again in his head the combination of processes by which he would render this or that structure. Thus while many painted more than he did, few thought more about painting, for, alas! the former act is often soporific in its effect and precludes the latter. It is conceivable that, had Jan Steen been able, like his rivals, to spend his whole time in painting, he would, like them, have got into that perfect practice which makes only too perfect. Endowed with the advantages of an onlooker, he escaped the snare of soothing habit; and the most typical Jan Steens are not those which, like 'The Music Master' in the National Gallery or the fine Spendthrift in the present collection (24), achieve the delicate finish and sustained perfection of Terborch, but the more dynamic creations in which the touch is scornful of the otiose in paint.

When we come, however, to distil from his work the essential Jan Steen, we are baffled by his variety. Reynolds discerned in him affinities with Raphael, and every visitor to Messrs. Dowdeswell's galleries will establish fresh parentage and new descendants for the shifting, dissatisfied artist on whom Fortune showered many artistic gifts, and none perhaps more valuable than the inability to strike a line so popular as to tempt him to go on repeating it. There is the large Wedding (8), lent by the Duke of Wellington, with its amazingly vital figure in the foreground; and there is The Physician's Visit (12), wherein the painter anticipates Hogarth's zest in exploring the sinister corners of modern life. The grim intensity of the weird old lady in this picture is unsurpassable. How different from such lurid characterization is the delicate charm of The Marriage at Cana (5), reminiscent of Memlinc on the one hand, while at the same time it forecasts Watteau. The coarsely daubed Drunken Woman (39) has an elemental quality which makes us think of Daumier and Goya. It is summary rather than careless—the work of a man who realizes that high finish is not always the mark of exacting artistry.

PICTURES BY HOPPNER.

FOR a like charitable purpose (King Edward's Hospital Fund) Messrs. Colnaghi are showing a collection of portraits of varied degrees of merit. Three of them (Nos. 1, 6, and 8) show Hoppner at an unusual pitch of technical brilliancy. Miss Elizabeth Beresford (1) is flimsy as a portrait, but its light, loose handling of paint is full of charm. Mrs. Granville (6) has this in combination with an extreme cleverness in modelling a face conventionally pretty rather than interesting. It compares with Mr. Sargent's 'Mrs. Astor' at the Royal Academy in this respect, but is more mysterious in texture, quieter, and more complete pictorially. Still better is Miss Papendiek (8), which represents about the high-water mark of Hoppner's talent. Here is a personal and very creditable portrait, a head solidly and precisely modelled in deliciously liquid paint—a colour-scheme as brilliant as that of Mr. Steer, but without his reliance on excessive impasto. It is above all for this picture that the show demands to be seen.

THE WORK OF THE LATE ALEXANDER MANN.

A MEMORIAL exhibition at the Baillie Gallery contains upwards of a hundred and seventy works of a painter typical of one side of artistic activity in the last quarter of a century. He was trained in a Paris school, the besetting danger of which was obvious realism, and, like most of his contemporaries in that school, did his best work before he had achieved complete confidence to carry its teachings to their logical conclusion. Thus an early work, Mentone (62), is beautiful and delicate in texture like a rather objective Corot; and another picture of the same period, Firs and Furze (123), if not quite justifying its larger scale, has yet a quietness and refinement which confess as among the responsibilities of picture-making the creation of an atmosphere of reserve and nobility. The pupils of Carolus Duran have rarely been content to remain long within the irksome bondage of these aristocratic traditions of art, and though Mr. Mann escaped degradation through the practice of sensational portraiture which has ruined most of the others, yet the temptations of the travelling sketch of obvious attractiveness seduced him no less surely. He attained in the making of these forcibly brilliant notes great cleverness—witness Nos. 66, 92, 154, 160, or 172 (No. 146, The Wet Sands, being a more refined and individual colour study); but when he endeavoured to enlarge these into pictures he seems to have lacked objective, the recording of a colour-scheme in the most violent terms possible having come to be an end in itself.

A few larger pictures of figure subjects painted in Berkshire show a similar impersonal outlook, but considerable capacity. Sheep-washing (118) is the best, recalling the work of Mr. A. S. Hartrick, though with more generous and more confident use of paint than that artist usually offers.

PICTURES BY MR. THEODORE ROUSSEL.

THE painting of Mr. Theodore Roussel as shown at the Chenil Gallery is sincere and personal, but has not, perhaps, the definite accomplishment of his etched work. The majority of the exhibits are landscape, and we are of opinion that Mr. Roussel is mistaken in thinking that for him landscape painting should be a literal transcript of the thing seen. Working on this assumption, he discerns a colour-scheme often of some subtlety, and there are signs that the form also has been conceived broadly at some time in the process of painting the picture. He is too impressionable, however, to hold fast this initial conception amid the varying suggestions of the moving scene, and his excited hand goes on registering minor accidents till the design is lost in untidiness. The Little Fauness (20), May Morning, Hurlingham (17), and Grave Evening (16) would all, in our opinion, have gained by more formal treatment, which might have kept in check the slipperiness of oil paint, which tends in these works to look formless when brought into contact with a picture frame. A design of more arbitrary character, moreover, more consciously occupied with the precise subject-matter which interested the artist, would probably have given greater emotional intensity to Green Lace (8). Here the shimmer of hanging boughs is daintily wrought, but loses some of its effect by reason of the predominant part played in the design by the rather insistently black tree-trunks, which either by cutting or deliberate fantasy of treatment, should have been reduced to less than their objective importance. The tiny Rose in the Evening (18), glimmering like a Chinese lantern in the gloom, shows Mr. Roussel tentatively essaying the path of fantasy which we exhort him to follow even without the authorization of fact, here still secure. His taste and sense of style would make it safer for him than exposure to the too copious suggestiveness of nature.

Mr. Roussel's figure painting is more successful, A Profile (21) being sensitive and strong in modelling, and the figure seen reflected in the mirror in No. 10 being severe and fine in form. The back view in the same picture, on the other hand, and the Portrait of the Artist's Daughter (3) show a slight want of variety and resource in brushwork—an excess of the formality of which we note the lack in the landscapes.

Upstairs are some characteristic drawings by Mr. Augustus John and a small painting which shows him as a modest, but charming landscape painter. Mr. Nicholson has a clever study of a vast interior hung with glass candelabra.

THE SIR JOHN DAY SALE.

THE pictures, drawings, and engravings of the late Sir John Charles Day, sold by Messrs. Christie on the 13th, 14th, 17th, and 18th inst., realized the enormous total of over 103,000*l.*, several of the prices being the highest on record.

The honours of the first day fell to J. F. Millet: 'The Goose-Maiden,' 5,000 guineas; 'The Village of Greville,' 330 gs.; 'Les Nageurs,' 600 gs. J. B. C. Corot, 'The Ferry,' 2,800 gs.; 'The Woodcutters,' 1,450 gs.; 'Entrée au Village de Coubron,' 1,800 gs.; 'Souvenir d'Italie,' 950 gs.; 'La Chaumière des Dunes,' 1,350 gs.; 'Saintry,' 850 gs.; 'River Scene,' with a peasant woman and two cows on the right, 820 gs. C. F. Daubigny, 'Les Bords de l'Oise,' 1,800 gs.; 'The Harvest Moon,' 1,000 gs.; 'Le Petit Port,' 550 gs.; 'Bords de Rivière,' 850 gs.; 'Seaweed Harvest,' 360 gs.; 'View on the Seine, looking across the river, houseboat against the left bank,' 430 gs. N. Diaz, 'Evening,' 850 gs.; 'Autumn in the Woods,' 460 gs.; 'Herd of Cattle, sunset,' 360 gs. Jules Dupré, 'Woody Landscape, with a peasant woman on a path leading to a cottage,' 520 gs.; 'River Scene, with a man in a punt,' 520 gs. H. Harpignies, 'Solitude,' 1,800 gs. 'Bords de la Cance aux Loups,' 900 gs.; 'La Vieille Route de Fargiau à St. Privé,' 620 gs.; 'Coucher de Soleil,' 550 gs.; 'Returning Home, Sunset,' 520 gs.; 'Ruins of a Castle, evening,' 600 gs. Ch. Jacque, 'The Shepherdess,' 1,680 gs. Th. Rousseau, 'River Scene, with a man fishing from a punt,' 520 gs.; C. Troyon, 'The Return of the Flock, sunset,' 420 gs. F. Ziem, 'The Port of Marseilles,' 420 gs. Matthew Maris, 'The Four Mills,' 3,300 gs.; 'Feeding Chickens,' 3,000 gs. Jacob Maris, 'View near Dordrecht, buildings and windmill on the bank of a river,' 1,600 gs.; 'Ploughing,' 950 gs.; 'Old Delft,' 1,100 gs.; 'Dordrecht,' 1,270 gs.; 'At the Well,' 630 gs.; 'Les Brouetteries de Sable,' 720 gs.; 'Amsterdam from the River,' 740 gs.; 'A Stormy Day,' 820 gs.; 'Chemin de Halage,' 580 gs.; 'Washerwomen by a Stream,' 900 gs.; 'Amsterdam,' 850 gs.; 'The Return of the Fishing-Boats,' 600 gs.; 'Canal at Amsterdam, with steamer and barges,' 600 gs. Willem Maris, 'Milking-Time,' 460 gs. A. Mauve, 'Troupeau de Moutons sous Bois,' 2,700 gs.; 'Lisière de Bois,' 2,020 gs.; 'Marshlands, evening,' 650 gs.; 'The Wood Cart,' 600 gs.; 'Shepherd and his Flock,' 720 gs. Josef Israëls, 'Bonheur Maternel,' 1,080 gs. E. van Mareke, 'Cattle resting in a Pasture,' 700 gs.

The second day's sale included: Jacob Maris, 'The Old Mill,' 420 gs.; 'Delft,' 340 gs.; 'Ploughing,' 370 gs.; 'The Plough,' 560 gs.; 'Town on a River,' 440 gs.; 'On the Towing-Path,' 370 gs.; 'A Rainy Day,' 400 gs. Willem Maris, 'Springtime,' 300 gs.; 'Milking-Time,' 260 gs. Anton Mauve, 'Returning to the Fold,' 1,350 gs.; 'The Return of the Flock,' 900 gs.; 'Opening the Gate,' 740 gs.; 'Leaving the Fold,' 610 gs. Josef Israëls, 'The Angler,' 500 gs.; 'Mending the Nets,' 420 gs.; 'The Young Fishwife,' 285 gs. A. Neuhuys, 'Hide and Seek,' 360 gs.; 'Minding Baby,' 270 gs. J. Weissenbruch, 'Haarlem 240 gs. H. Harpignies, 'Le Loing Debordé près St. Privé,' 210 gs.; 'Une Route de Village, Oisème,' 150 gs.; 'Olive Trees, Beaulieu,' 100 gs. J. Bosboom, 'Interior of a Church, with a peasant woman and child,' 460 gs.; 'Interior of a Church, with figures,' 370 gs.

On Monday high prices were obtained, particularly for the Rembrandts, including 'The Three Trees,' 360 gs.; 'The Three Cottages,' 300 gs.; 'Landscape, with cottage and haybarn,' 125 gs.; 'Landscape, with a flock of sheep,' 80 gs.; 'Landscape, with a square tower,' 90 gs.; 'View of Omval,' 85 gs.; 'Rembrandt's Mill,' 88 gs.; 'View of Amsterdam,' 70 gs. Sir F. Seymour Haden, 'A River in Ireland,' 100 gs. C. Méryon, 'La Morgue,' 80 gs.; 'La Tour de l'Horloge,' 80 gs.; 'St. Etienne du Mont,' 72 gs.; 'Le Pont Neuf,' 80 gs.; 'Le Pont au Change,' 120 gs. Albrecht Dürer, 'Adam and Eve,' 180 gs.; 'Virgin and Child with Long Hair,' 150 gs.; 'St. Hubert,' 245 gs.; 'St. Jerome in his Cell,' 100 gs.; 'Melancholia 70 gs.; 'The Great Fortune,' 78 gs.; 'The Knight and Death,' 160 gs.

Tuesday's sale included: D. Y. Cameron, 'The Palace, Stirling Castle, and Rosslyn Castle,' 48 gs.; 'A Venetian Palace,' 38 gs.; 'St. Laumer, Blois,' 38 gs. A. H. Haig, 'Mont St. Michel,' 42 gs.; 'Interior of Burgos Cathedral,' 54 gs.; 'another impression of the same,' 55 gs. S. Cousins, 'Master Lambton, after Lawrence,' 102 gs. Constable's English Landscape, a series of 23 engravings by D. Lucas, 125 gs. A set of the published plates of Turner's Liber Studiorum (wanting 'River Wye'), 90 gs.

Fine-Art Gossip.

UNDER the National Galleries (Scotland) Act, 1906, arrangements have been made for the rehousing of the Royal Scottish Academy, in the adjoining building known as the Royal Institution, which has been vacated by the Royal Society and School of Art. It is expected that the alterations will be completed so that the Royal Academy exhibition may be held there in 1911.

THE death is reported, at the age of fifty-eight, of M. Henri P. Dillon, the President of the Société des Peintres-Lithographes, and for many years an exhibitor at the Salon. Born in San Francisco, the son of French parents, M. Dillon studied art under M. Carolus Duran, and obtained medals at the Salons of 1892 and 1900 for his lithographic work.

M. LÉONCE BÉNÉDITE, the Keeper of the Luxembourg Museum in Paris, is publishing through M. Ernest Flammarion an exhaustive history of 'La Peinture au dix-neuvième Siècle.' The work will be completed in twelve parts, each of which is to contain a plate in colours, whilst the whole will include about 400 illustrations from photographs.

THE death at the age of eighty-four is announced from Munich of the distinguished historical painter Prof. Ludwig Thiersch. He studied art at the Munich Academy, and, after spending some years in Rome, was appointed Professor of Painting at the Art School of Athens. In addition to his historical pictures, he painted many religious subjects, especially in the service of the Greek Church, in which he endeavoured to improve on the traditional Byzantine style, without detriment to its typical character. The Greek Church in London contains works from his hand.

THE death of Prof. Franz Wickhoff, which took place at Venice last month, at the comparatively early age of fifty-six, is a serious loss to art criticism and history. Born at Steyr in Upper Austria, he was for many years Keeper of the Museum of Industrial Art at Vienna, and in 1891 was appointed Professor at the University in that city. His contributions to the history of art covered a wide field, and are of the utmost value for their profound learning, closely reasoned arguments, and scholarly method. Among them may be mentioned the catalogue of the Italian drawings in the Albertina (1891); 'The Library of Julius II.' (1893); the 'Wiener Genesis' (1895), perhaps his most important work, of which an English translation appeared in 1900 under the title of 'Roman Art'; numerous contributions to the history of Venetian Art, including dissertations on the relation between literature and art, and an interpretation of the subjects of certain pictures by Giorgione and Titian. At the time of his death he was engaged in editing a great descriptive catalogue of the illuminated MSS. in the libraries of Austria, three volumes of which have already appeared.

EXHIBITIONS.

- SAT. (May 22).—Artificers' Guild, Exhibition of Craftwork, 9, Maddox Street, W.
- Mr. G. Clausen's Paintings and Drawings, Leicester Galleries.
 - The late Ina Clogston's Water-Colours, 'Italian Spring and English Summer,' Private View, Fine-Art Society's Gallery.
 - Fair Children, Messrs. Speaight's Galleries.
 - French and Dutch Masters of the Nineteenth Century, Messrs. Obach's Gallery.
 - Count Fritz Hochberg's Sketches of Kashmir, Japan, and Egypt, New Dudley Gallery.
 - Mr. Francis E. James's Water-Colours of Flowers, Leicester Galleries.
 - Japanese Colour-Prints, Fine-Art Society's Gallery.
 - The late Earl of Leven and Melville's Water-Colours, Fine-Art Society's Gallery.
 - Mr. John MacWhirter's Water-Colours, Messrs. Frost & Reed's Gallery.
 - New English Art Club, Forty-First Exhibition, Royal Society of British Artists.
 - Replicas of Tanagra and Antique and Modern Statuettes, New Dudley Gallery.
- MON. Mr. Paul Cohen's Pictures of Cities and Cathedrals and Pen and Pencil Drawings, Private View, Modern Gallery.
- TUES. English Miniatures from the Sixteenth to the Eighteenth Centuries, Press View, Mr. E. M. Hodgkins's Gallery.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN.—Armide. Rigoletto. Samson et Dalila.

GLUCK'S 'Armide' was given on Monday, the 10th inst. Mlle. Bérat, a new singer, appeared in the title-rôle, and created a favourable, if not very strong impression. M. Fontaine, the Rinaldo, was more successful in his acting than in his singing. Madame Kirkby Lunn's impersonation of Hate was, as usual, very fine. The piece was beautifully presented, and scenic effects are of importance in the work. It was given under the intelligent direction of Mr. Percy Pitt. Gluck's 'Armide,' like Mozart's 'Don Juan,' is a surviving masterpiece. Both are in letter and spirit more characteristic and refreshing than many later works which have achieved popularity.

Of 'Rigoletto,' performed on Friday in last week, we have only to say that Madame Tétrazini, though not in her best voice, sang successfully; also that Mlle. Bérat was a satisfactory Giovanna, while Mr. John McCormack, up to a certain point, was a good Duke.

M. Affre, who has a pleasing, if not sufficiently strong voice, appeared in the part of Samson at the fourth performance, on Tuesday last, of M. Saint-Saëns's opera. The work pleased us at first, and certainly gains on further hearing.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—Herr Max Reger's Concerts.

HERR MAX REGER, though only thirty-six years old, has produced over a hundred works, including orchestral and chamber music, many pieces for organ and pianoforte, and songs. "Back to Bach" is said to be his motto, and this is no idle report, for not only has he written many fugues, including one on the name Bach, but he has also made constant use of that composer's phraseology. These fugues, however, are not bald imitations, for there are harmonies, figures, and developments in them which tell of a much later period. There is probably no living musician who could write a cleverer fugue than Herr Reger.

He gave two chamber concerts at Bechstein Hall on the 10th and 14th inst. We were unfortunately unable to attend the first, which seems to have offered a more general idea of the composer's concerted music. The second opened with a suite for violin and pianoforte, Op. 93, the Largo of which was broad and expressive, while the following movement, a fugue, revealed in light and pleasing fashion his skill as a contrapuntist. There was also a Pianoforte Trio, Op. 102, the four sections displaying skill rather than inspiration; but the delicate Allegretto and the spirited Allegro con moto created a most favourable impression. At the end of the programme came the clever Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Beethoven for two pianofortes, of which a brilliant rendering was offered by the concert-giver and Mr. Richard Buhlig. In the Suite and Trio Herr Reger was assisted by Mr. William Ackroyd and Mr. Percy Such.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Philharmonic Concert.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR's Symphony in A flat has been performed in London under Dr. Hans Richter, Mr. Henry J. Wood, and Mr. Landon Ronald, also under the composer's direction; and last Thursday week at the final Philharmonic Concert it was heard under Herr Arthur Nikisch. They were all able renderings of the work, and the last was of special interest, in that the conductor was not only the first to produce the symphony in Germany, namely, at Leipsic, but had also expressed his great desire to conduct it here. His reading of the music was strong and vivid, though the subjective character of it was not sufficiently emphasized; this, to our thinking, was particularly noticeable in the Adagio.

The programme opened with a brilliant performance of the Vorspiel to 'Die Meistersinger.' Mr. John Coates sang the two "forge songs" from 'Siegfried' with full understanding of their dramatic significance.

The dates of the ninety-eighth season of the Philharmonic Society are November 11th and 25th, December 8th, February 10th and 24th, 1910, March 9th, and April 21st. Sir Edward Elgar will conduct the first concert.

IMPRESSIONS OF STRAUSS'S 'ELECTRA' AT BERLIN.

I MAKE no pretence to write a deliberate criticism of this the latest effort of Dr. Strauss's genius. To do so with any fairness at the present time would be difficult, if not impossible. I seek rather to put on record the impressions which a hearing of the work in Berlin, combined with some study of the piano score, has made upon my mind.

It is always well to take a familiar subject for an opera "book," but, as a matter of fact, 'Electra' is no adaptation from Sophocles. The words are taken from the play written by Hermann von Hofmannsthal, and beyond the fact that Clytemnestra and Ægisthus are killed by Orestes in both, there is little in common between the plays. They are entirely different in language, manner, and construction. Hofmannsthal's play is a most gruesome piece of modern naturalism—powerful and in places poetical beyond a doubt, but for sheer ingenuity of horror not to be paralleled outside Webster's 'Duchess of Malfi.' Whether such a play is suitable for music at all, whether any setting could be made possible, are questions which naturally occur to one on reading the libretto.

But at the performance such doubts were speedily set at rest. From beginning to end it was clear that Strauss's genius could rise to the demands made upon it; also that his score, although colossally difficult, was possible, at least as far as one could judge from a single performance; while as to the suitability of the words, it was certain that the text was in complete accordance with the music to which it was set.

But then the opera was no lyrical drama, as we have hitherto accepted the term. Strauss has no intention of bringing melody to the illustration of his subject; his object is rather to invent and combine sounds to impose upon the imagination. His effects are vertical rather than horizontal. He uses motives, of course, mostly of his own extraordinary type, and chiefly harmonic in character; but what we usually term melody is conspicuously wanting. So are the great lyrical scenes which are the chief charm of Wagner's operas from the point of view of the public. Perhaps not entirely: there is one scene, Electra's recognition of Orestes, which would be found of interest even out of its context, on the concert platform; but I think no other.

But are we to imagine, therefore, that this new work fails to hold the imagination? By no means; on the contrary, both text and players become forgotten at times in the thunderous roll of the music which surges on that desolate and horror-haunted shore. Were the play longer (it is in one act only, and lasts less than two hours), human endurance would be strained to breaking-point. Not human patience, for Richard Strauss never becomes dull or inconspicuous; but human endurance, the power to abide the stress of such an intensity of passion.

And this is the composer's object; so his disciples assure us. He can find no place for the homage of intellectual appreciation. He would not have hearers who look for interpretation of the text, or view music merely as a background or atmosphere for the drama. Still less would he accept those who sit as Billroth, the friend of the Brahms, confesses that once he sat listening to 'Rheingold' for the sake only of its ingenious orchestration. He must have your whole heart. His music must affect your emotions so strongly that for the time being you live in the forms of his characters. Their passions are your passions; their hates your hates; and their miseries rend your own heartstrings. You dare not pity them; to do so would be to patronize their griefs; you must suffer with them, and in so doing escape from your own trifling, everyday existence into the larger open air of human nature in its primitive form, no longer fettered and confined by the stale conventions of social laws and social morality!

And is this result realized? I think so, to a certain extent, by every one who surrenders himself to the spell put upon his ears. It is useless listening for music such as we are in the habit of hearing. From that point of view all the harmonies are far-fetched, and most of them incongruous; at moments of stress and strain the sound of the orchestra rises to indescribable cacophonies. But we have the idea that Strauss could, if he wished, give a sense to every note he employs. As long as law exists, whatever it be, in the composer's mind, it will be possible eventually for others as well as himself to realize the meaning and reasonableness of what he chooses to do.

To take the drama in detail; it is simple enough, and the characters are few. The three leading parts are all in the hands of women, a technical defect which in anybody else's works would probably have resulted in monotony; but Electra, Chrysothemis, and Clytemnestra represent passion incarnate in such widely varying forms that there is no danger of such a result. The men, Orestes and Ægisthus, are but slightly sketched, and play only a very subordinate part in the drama. The opera consists of one act only, played in the forecourt of Agamemnon's palace. There is no overture, and the curtain rises on the chatter of the castle maids about the well. As Electra enters, they gibe and mock at the fallen princess, whose untameable spirit has reduced her to crouch in the kennel, and eat broken meat with the dogs. One maiden alone raises voice in her defence—"For all her misery, she is of royal blood: none of you all are fit to breathe the air she breathes"—but she is driven forth, and the orchestra, with Strauss's usual ingenuity, echoes the sound of blows from within. Indeed, so tricky is his manufacture of these physical sounds by musical means, that a door cannot creak, or a movement make itself heard among the audience, without falling under suspicion of being an orchestral effect.

On the departure of the maids, Electra, who has hitherto remained motionless, breaks into passionate wailing. In her monologue she recalls with horrible detail Agamemnon's murder, and exults in the thought of the vengeance to come. The gruesome realism of the "slipping in blood" motive and the devilish dance of triumphant revenge with which the scene closes must be heard to be imagined.

Chrysothemis, her sister, now enters in wild affright, and tries to drag her sister away from this house of horror. She longs for life. "I cannot sit and stare into the darkness as you do." "If you will not flee, at least keep out of Clytemnestra's way. She is dangerous; she has been dreaming, dreaming of Orestes." But Electra has no fear: "I have a desire to speak with my mother as never before"; so Chrysothemis alone disappears as the Queen approaches, sleepless, horrible in strange barbaric state, preceded by the daily tale of victims. Past the dim-lighted windows (I quote the book of the text) clatters and scurries a hurrying train. There is a sound of worrying and driving, mingled with subdued curses and quickly choked cries; whips crack as beasts are forced up, and stagger blindly on.

The tumult of the orchestra becomes indescribable; it loses all resemblance to music. In this, as also in the last section of the terrible scene which ensues when Electra prophesies to Clytemnestra her fate, it reminds the hearer of that awful imagination of the Russian novelist where the boy awakes to find his uncle baying at the moon in the extremity of his anguish and despair. Of the colossal technique displayed in such passages there can be no question, nor of the gruesome effect they have upon the hearer's imagination; whether or not they have a place in the art of music must be left to future generations.

But at the close of the scene it is Clytemnestra's turn to triumph. It is whispered through the Court that Orestes is dead. Chrysothemis brings the news to her sister, while Clytemnestra in haste sends messengers to Ægisthus in the field.

Electra will not believe. "It is not true; it is not true," she repeats with rising disdain; but as conviction comes in spite of herself, she whispers, "Then we must do it ourselves, you and I." "No! no!" cries Chrysothemis in horror; but Electra insists, and seeks to effect her purpose with grim flattery: "Such strong arms, such dainty limbs! From now on will I be to thee true sister; help thee to home and husband; see thee some day happy mother; only this must first be done."

But her pleadings are of no avail, and at last Electra turns, curses her for a coward, and sets to work digging silently, like an animal, with her hands, to find the axe which she has hidden close by.

Here again the music is terrible in its hideous intensity, and is pursued at some length before the theme changes, and Orestes stands behind her.

He is there as messenger with tidings of his own death, and it is long before Electra comes to recognize him. It is only when Orestes learns who she is that he can no longer restrain himself, and acknowledges, in a scene of wild excitement, that he is indeed her brother.

Then follows the lyrical scene above mentioned. It is unfortunate that the leading theme has a strong resemblance to a well-known passage in 'Tristram and Isolde,' but that is a small matter in a musical scene of such genuine beauty.

But the horrors recommence. Orestes goes into the house, while Electra keeps the door, pacing at intervals up and down like a wild beast. The orchestra in stealthily hurrying scales depicts the increasing tension of expectation, till at last Clytemnestra's awful scream rings out. "Strike still again!" cries Electra, mad with excitement. Another scream follows, echoed by the orchestra in a combination consisting of three consecutive semi-tones, played double forte together; lights begin to be seen, and maids run hither and thither in alarm. The sight of Ægisthus approaching, however, scatters them. "He will kill us," they cry, "if he find us here"; so Electra is left alone to meet him. She answers his question with courtesy and dutiful submission, proceeding in front of him, torch in hand, with the fantastic movement of a grim dance. "Take care of the step," she says at last, bows deeply, and he goes in. The same scene of horror is repeated; blows are heard; an agonized face appears at the window; more blows succeed. The merciless realism into which the art of music is deliberately compelled becomes in the end loathsome.

It is with relief that we feel the end approaching, for now the victims have both met their appointed doom. Chrysothemis joins Electra in a wild song of triumph, which ends in the weird dance rhythm of her prophecy. To this measure Electra dances her death dance of triumphant revenge, and falls dead as the curtain descends.

The "motive" method, as developed by Wagner, is employed throughout the work. There is always a multiplicity of such phrases to be found in the orchestration. The difference is that whereas Wagner's motives are chiefly lyrical, and characteristic, Strauss's are so grotesque for the most part that the ear cannot retain them, and the music resulting from their combination is frankly ugly. Nothing will convince me that it would not be better that they should contain melodious material, but in default Strauss's strong originality has driven him to the curious instead. Another proof of the weakness of the composer's melodic invention is that the motives which are intended to be expressive are the least characteristic. At the same time I have no intention of saying that the work as a whole is poor art. Without pretending to decide whether the music will live, or whether its vitality is too heavily weighted by some of the doctrines it embodies to survive, I still feel the irresistible power of the work. It is not in its orchestration alone, it is not in its dramatic conceptions or musical fitness, but in all of these combined, that its real greatness makes itself felt. Fault might be found with the mannerisms of a style which makes so continual a use of a forced effect like muted trumpets, and similar criticism would be easy in all matters of detail; but the original personality of the great artist is never absent, and welds the whole into a form which shows that it came red hot from the fires of genius. This music is not the kind of music to which we are accustomed, it offends our ears in every conceivable way; but still we feel that as an expression of emotion it is consistent with itself, and true to its own objects. However little the music be to our taste, or the objects seem desirable, these qualities are sufficient to give it place among the highest rank of modern masterpieces.

E. D. R.

Musical Gossip.

OWING to the success of the performances of the Castellano company at the Coronet Theatre, the season has been extended until Saturday, the 29th inst.

HAYDN's oratorio 'Il Ritorno di Tobia' will be performed, for the first time in England, at the forthcoming Newcastle-upon-Tyne Musical Festival. The work was produced at Esterházy during the winter of 1774-5, and was afterwards performed twice in Vienna under the composer's direction.

THE thirteenth Feis Ceoil was opened on Monday last in Dublin. This institution, which holds a similar place in Ireland to the Eisteddfod in Wales, has grown in importance during the past few years, and the entries for the various competitions show an increase of nearly a hundred over those of last year. A choral and orchestral concert was held on Tuesday evening, at which two important prize works—an Irish symphony by Signor Benedetto Palmieri, and a cantata, 'The Abbot of Innisfallen,' by Mr. G. Molyneux Palmer—were produced under the conductorship of Dr. Esposito.

THE HAYDN FESTIVAL at Vienna opens on Tuesday next with a performance of one of his Masses. During the week 'The Seasons' will be given, also orchestral and chamber concerts. On Saturday evening, at the Hofoper, Haydn will be represented by his "Dramma eroicomico" 'L'Isola disabitata,' composed in 1777, described by Haydn as an "operetta," and the earlier 'Lo Speciale' (1768).

THE eighty-fifth Lower Rhenish Festival will take place at Aix-la-Chapelle from May 30th to June 1st, under the direction of Richard Strauss, Max Schillings, and E. Schwickerath. The programmes include Haydn's 'Seasons,' Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and the 'Salome' Dance, the 'Sinfonia Domestica,' and Lieder by Strauss.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN.	Concert, 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON.—SAT.	Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
MON.—SAT.	Italian Opera, 8, Coronet Theatre.
	(Wed. and Sat. Matinees, 2.30).
MON.	Empire Day Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Signor Paolo Martucci's Pianoforte Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Herr Reinhold v. Warlich's Song Recital, 3.15, Æolian Hall.
—	Lucas String Quartet, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
TUES.	Herr Kreisler's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Madame Elena Gerhardt's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Miss Helen Blain's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Sergei Kusnezsky's Symphony Concert, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
WED.	Mr. Herbert Fryer's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Steinway Hall.
—	Miss Irene Gorainoff's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Miss Jolanda Mero's Pianoforte Recital, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
THURS.	Miss Emma Banks's Pianoforte Recital, 3.15, Æolian Hall.
—	Solly String Quartet, 3.30, Bechstein Hall.
—	Misses Bessie Cox and Lily West's Vocal and Pianoforte Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
—	Miss Florence Macnaughton's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Æolian Hall.
—	Musical and Dramatic Association Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Herr Hans Neumann's Violin Recital, 8.30, Steinway Hall.
FRI.	Miss Irene Gorainoff's Second Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
SAT.	Master Maurice Reeve's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

HIS MAJESTY'S (AFTERNOON THEATRE).—Light o' Love. Translated by G. Valentine Williams from Arthur Schnitzler's 'Liebelei.'

THE AFTERNOON THEATRE's latest production is a love-tragedy curiously Viennese in setting, and perhaps rather exuberant in sentiment. But to such playgoers as can recognize that there are other types, other manners, and ways of love-making than those of the English, the picture of the lighter side of life in Vienna must have seemed most interesting, and its story of a romance cut short by fate more than ordinarily affecting. The atmosphere of the gay city and its delight in "woman, wine, and song" are happily realized in Herr Schnitzler's first act, and young love, with its absorption in the moment, its levity, recklessness, and aftermath of sorrow, furnishes all the material needed for the simple drama.

Two sets of lovers are neatly contrasted. There is Fritz, a fervent and rather moody lad, who is only half in love with his gentle and equally romantic Christine. And there is his frivolous friend Theodor, who does not mean to let women disturb his peace of mind, and exacts liveliness and meekness in turn from his Mizi. Both girls belong to a lower social grade than their sweethearts, and both readily submit to the behests of these lordly youngsters in the way of preparing a meal, jesting and dancing with them, or accepting their caresses.

It is at a banquet at which there is more kissing than eating, and more noise than sensible talk, that we make the acquaintance of this quartet, and neatly are their moods of alternate joviality and sentiment used as prelude to the grimmer side of the play. There is a loud knock at the street-door, the girls scuttle into another room, and there enters a sinister figure for whose intrusion we have been in a way prepared. This is the husband of a lady whom Fritz has compromised, and he brings back the lover's letters and demands satisfaction. The hero accepts his challenge and imposes secrecy on his friend.

The next act carries us to Christine's rooms, and we watch her restlessness when she returns from an appointment which Fritz has failed to keep. But he appears at last to pay his farewell visit before the duel. Too late he has learnt to value and respond to Christine's affection, and as he glances round the girl's apartments to stamp as it were their features on his memory, and clings to her as if he could not tear himself from her presence, both she and the audience surmise disaster. The foreboding is justified. For the last act is one long scene of agony during which the girl learns that her lover is already dead, and buried, having met his doom for the sake of a woman other than herself. Wildly she rushes from the arms of her kindly but weak old father, telling him he will never see her again.

The Christine at His Majesty's was Miss Margaret Halstan, an actress of rather too much natural refinement for the part; nevertheless her acting was marked by no less emotional intensity than intelligence. In the final scene she earned from her audience the sufficient tribute of tears. Mr. Ainley was scarcely impulsive enough as Fritz, but otherwise gave a thoroughly picturesque and agreeable performance. Mr. Hearn had an impressive moment as the husband; and Mr. Charles Maude and Miss Margaret Bussé were sprightly as the more frivolous lovers.

Dramatic Gossip.

THE first production of the English Play Society, 'A Servant of the Public,' dramatized by Mr. David Kimball from Anthony Hope's novel, and produced at a matinée at Terry's Theatre, suggests that Anthony Hope knew better than the adapter of his novel the medium which suited his subject. His story, it may be remembered, is an elaborate study of an actress's temperament. Ora Pinsent, the actress in question, is an exasperating, yet fascinating creature, at once a child, and a woman of infinite guile; pathetically affectionate, and cruel with the cruelty that only the reckless egoist can show; exacting and selfish, yet wholly dependent for her happiness on other persons' sympathy and devotion. In the novel the author is able to realize the type as the result of meticulous analysis. Mr. Kimball gets but a suggestion of the woman across the footlights; and her changes of mood, her maddening helplessness before any situation demanding decisive action, her tendency to make even of her lover in tête-à-tête talk an audience before which she can act, are almost the only material on which the playwright is able to work. Such drama as the story contains—and little enough it is—is all concerned with Ora's resolve, in order to free herself from a love-entanglement with a young barrister, to send from America for her drunken reprobate of a husband. When he arrives, she leaves the task of meeting him to the barrister, and characteristically takes to flight.

If Mr. Kimball scarcely makes a play out of the novel, it cannot be said that the leading actress expressed the novelist's idea. Miss Isobel Merson has a certain amount of personality. She piques curiosity by her lethargic smiles and languorous airs; but her methods are too monotonous to maintain interest during four long acts. In agreeable contrast were the sterling acting of Mr. Ben Webster as the lover and the clever performance of Mr. Saintsbury, who hit off in realistic style the demoralization of Ora's drink-sodden husband.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—W. S.—A. M.—G. R.—W. M.—R. S.—Received. G. K.—Agreed.

WE cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

NO notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENTS	602
BAGSTER & SONS	602
BELL & SONS	628
BLACKIE & SON	607
CASELL & Co.	604
CATALOGUES	602
CHAPMAN & HALL	629
CONSTABLE & Co.	606
DENT & Co.	632
DOVES PRESS	607
EDUCATIONAL	601
ENO'S FRUIT SALT	630
EXHIBITIONS	601
GAY & HANCOCK	603
HEINEMANN	606
HUMPHREYS	603
LANE	603
LECTURES	601
LONGMANS & Co.	608
MACMILLAN & Co.	608
MAGAZINES, &c.	603
METHUEN & Co.	605
MISCELLANEOUS	602
MURRAY	604
NOTES AND QUERIES	630
PRINTERS	602
PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS	601
SALES BY AUCTION	602
SHIPPING	630
SITUATIONS VACANT	601
SMITH, ELDER & Co.	606
SOCIETIES	601
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	602
UNWIN	603, 631

READY MAY 28, crown 4to, 15s. net.

MODERN HOMES.

Selected Examples of Dwelling-Houses Described and Illustrated.

By T. RAFFLES DAVISON, Hon.A.R.I.B.A.

With a Foreword by Sir ASTON WEBB, R.A., and nearly 300 illustrations, chiefly from Pen-Drawings by the Author.

A book of typical specimens of modern country-house architecture, which should appeal to all who are interested in modern architecture, or who are contemplating building.

AN IMPORTANT NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE TRAMPING METHODIST.'

STARBRACE.

By SHEILA KAYE SMITH,

Author of 'The Tramping Methodist.' Cloth, 6s. (Ready May 28.)

In her new story Miss Kaye Smith provides a worthy successor to her first novel 'The Tramping Methodist,' which was very well received last year. Like its predecessor, it gives a graphic and vivid picture of eighteenth-century life in Sussex.

JUST PUBLISHED, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON'S LURE.

An Anthology of Prose and Verse Passages bearing on London.

By HELEN and LEWIS MELVILLE.

With Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers designed by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

"Here we have a collection of what a number of people, famous more or less, have written about London, and a very fine collection it is. The arrangement is admirable." Spectator.

THE QUEEN'S TREASURE SERIES.

Crown 8vo, each with 8 Coloured Plates and Decorated Title-Page, Covers, and End-Papers, 2s. 6d. net each.

NEW VOLUMES.

JAN OF THE WINDMILL.

By Mrs. EWING.

Illustrated by M. V. WHEELHOUSE. (Now ready.)

MRS. OVERTHEWAYS'S REMEMBRANCES.

By Mrs. EWING.

Illustrated by M. V. WHEELHOUSE. (Ready May 28.)

READY NEXT WEDNESDAY, crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Newly Translated, with Introduction and Notes, By G. G. C. GOMME, B.A.

JUST PUBLISHED.

With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo.

WHEN RAILROADS WERE NEW.

The Story of Early Railway Enterprise in the United States.

By CHARLES F. CARTER.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

"The new series of Bohn's Libraries, on which judicious bookbuyers have long learned to keep a careful eye."—Athenæum.

This well-known Series now includes upwards of 800 Volumes of Standard Works in English Literature, and Translations from the Classics and all the Modern Languages on

HISTORY	SCIENCE
BIOGRAPHY	NATURAL HISTORY
ARCHÆOLOGY	PHILOSOPHY
THEOLOGY	POETRY
TOPOGRAPHY	ART
ANTIQUITIES	FICTION

With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference. Price 3s. 6d. or 5s. per Volume (with exceptions).

A Detailed Catalogue of the Libraries will be sent on application.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

CICELY HAMILTON. MARRIAGE AS A TRADE.
By CICELY HAMILTON, Author of 'Diana of Dobson's.'
Crown 8vo, 6s. [In a few days.]

This is a candid and outspoken book on marriage, written from the modern standpoint, and its remarkable frankness is calculated to create no little stir, for the interest of the subject is universal.

HENRY MURRAY. A STEPSON OF FORTUNE:
Memories, Confessions, and Opinions of Henry Murray.

With Portrait. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"We are conscious of having done less than justice to the variety and eager sincerity of this remarkable book.... We doubt if any book of the time gives such a fresh unvarnished picture of the hardships of literary life in the best years of the Victorian era."

Daily Telegraph.
"We cannot remember ever to have met a record that has interested us more than this planless history of a life without purpose or plan."—Daily Mirror.

CHARLES G. HARPER. THE TOWER OF LONDON.
FORTRESS, PRISON, PALACE.

By CHARLES G. HARPER.

Illustrated by the Author and from Photographs by W. S. CAMPBELL.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Harper's book is in the main descriptive, such a book as an artist would write who has an eye that lets nothing characteristic or picturesque escape it. This aspect of the work is emphasized by its admirable illustrations of an artistic quality not too common among those taken to adorn books.... well studied and agreeably written book.... should both please and instruct any one who is studiously interested in the sights of London."

Scotsman.

LEWIS MELVILLE. BRIGHTON:
Its History, Its Follies, and Its Fashions.

By LEWIS MELVILLE,

Author of 'The First Gentleman in Europe,' &c.

Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"When London is wrapped in gloom and influenza waits for one round every corner, then is the time for the sudden resolution, the swift taxi, and the first train to Brighton. Some such reflections as these are aroused by the mere sight of a book on Brighton; they impress one with redoubled importunity when it is written with such sympathy and affection as Mr. Lewis Melville has to give to his subject.... Mr. Melville's admirably balanced chronicle is full of good stories, always in the picture, never lugged in by the ears; and most of them new."—Daily Graphic.

E. HALLAM MOORHOUSE. SAMUEL PEPYS:
Administrator, Observer, Gossip.

By E. HALLAM MOORHOUSE.

With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"It is given to but few readers to study the Diary with such excellent purpose as Miss Moorhouse, who has been for some time recognized as a sound authority upon British naval history, and who shows, in this thoroughly competent, human, and vivacious volume, that she has a sense of natural character just as keen as her appreciation of public service and of nautical adventure. We have here, in short, an admirable essay in biography."

Daily Telegraph.

J. CUMING WALTERS. THE LOST LAND OF KING ARTHUR.

By J. CUMING WALTERS.

With many Illustrations. Pott 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Walters writes in this book as he should write of so enchanting a subject, with the feelings of a poet. To him the few facts and the many fantasies of the Arthurian legend are sacred.... We share the vintage which hath been cooled for so long an age in the deep-delved earth, and are refreshed. He calls the book an impressionist view. But it is more than that. It is like a golden light brightening the forgotten glories of Camelard and Lyonesse—a light, more over, not so much radiated from the lamp of legend as caught from the sunbeams on the Cornish sea and the Pentragon heights, the great gorges, the weird bays and caves, the rock-strewn valleys and waterfalls of the West, which seem still to have in their keeping the secrets of Merlin."—Daily Graphic.

BRANSBY WILLIAMS.

AN ACTOR'S STORY.

By BRANSBY WILLIAMS.

With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"No one who takes up Mr. Bransby Williams's book is likely to put it down until he has read it through.... He has set down his reminiscences and his opinions with charming impartiality.... A very interesting volume."—Globe.

"One of the most interesting of theatrical autobiographies of late years.... Not only is it well worth reading on account of the author himself, but it will be found particularly entertaining to the Dickens lover, for it is crammed with stories about the famous writer."

M.A.P.

NEW NOVELS BY POPULAR WRITERS.

ELLA MACMAHON.

FANCY O'BRIEN.

By ELLA MACMAHON,

Author of 'The Heart's Banishment,' 'The Other Sin,' &c.

Crown 8vo. [Next week.]

OSWALD CRAWFURD.

THE LEAGUE OF THE WHITE HAND.

By OSWALD CRAWFURD,

Author of 'Revelations of Inspector Morgan,' &c.

Crown 8vo. [Next week.]

J. B. HARRIS BURLAND.

THE HOUSE OF THE SOUL.

By J. B. HARRIS BURLAND,

Author of 'The Financier,' 'Love the Criminal,' &c.

Crown 8vo. [In June.]

REGINALD TURNER.

SAMSON UNSHORN.

By REGINALD TURNER,

Author of 'Imperial Brown of Brixton,' &c.

Crown 8vo. [Just published.]

FRANK T. BULLEN.

BEYOND.

By F. T. BULLEN,

Author of 'The Cruise of the Cachalot,' &c. Crown 8vo.

"An ingenious tale."—Times.

"The author has written nothing more characteristic."—Scotsman.

E. TEMPLE THURSTON.

THE CITY OF BEAUTIFUL NONSENSE.

By E. TEMPLE THURSTON, Author of 'Sally Bishop.'

[Fifth Edition.]

"A beautiful bit of work, full of delicacy and discernment, with touches here and there of that happier mood of idealistic sweetness from which your stern, unbending realist is so logically adverse. It is a book well worth reading."

Mr. W. L. COURTNEY in the Daily Telegraph.

"In 'The City of Beautiful Nonsense' Mr. Thurston surpasses his former achievements as a writer of idyllic romance.... It is quite simple in construction and delicate in theme. We cannot do better than advise every one who has not yet grown entirely old at heart to take a journey to 'The City of Beautiful Nonsense.'"—Daily Graphic.

RIDGWELL CULLUM.

THE COMPACT.

By RIDGWELL CULLUM,

Author of 'The Watchers of the Plains.'

[Second Edition.]

"Gives a wonderfully interesting picture of the days following Majuba.... 'The Compact' is distinctly welcome.... Mr. Ridgwell Cullum has before shown his capacity for dealing with open-air life, and he is seen to advantage in his new book."

Westminster Gazette.

"The book is distinctly thrilling, and incidentally presents a detail picture of South African life drawn by one who is not merely himself a master of detail, but possesses the gift of inspiring his readers with something of his own spirit.... It is a fine book, full of dramatic incident, and can be thoroughly recommended."—Liverpool Daily Post.

ARNOLD BENNETT.

THE OLD WIVES' TALE.

By ARNOLD BENNETT.

[Fifth Edition now ready.]

"I am prepared to maintain against all comers that at least one really great novel has been published in 1908. 'The Old Wives' Tale,' by Arnold Bennett.... There is no book in the fiction of recent years that I should rank as equal to it.... The story is a masterpiece.... it is a real book. I have read none like it for a very long time and am commencing a course of the author's novels."—A MAN OF KENT in the British Weekly.

Shipping.PLEASURE CRUISES.*SPITZBERGEN.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 5.

JULY 1 to JULY 27.

SPITZBERGEN, NORWAY, &c.

Fares from 30 guineas.

NORWAY.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 6.

JULY 29 to AUGUST 11.

No. 7.

AUGUST 13 to AUGUST 26.

THE NORWEGIAN FJORDS.

BY Fares from 12 Guineas.

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT "VECTIS."NOTES AND QUERIES.GENERAL INDEXES.THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

GENERAL INDEX, £ s. d.

* FOURTH SERIES .. 3 3 0

GENERAL INDEX,

* SIXTH SERIES .. 0 6 0

GENERAL INDEX,

* SEVENTH SERIES 0 6 0

GENERAL INDEX,

* EIGHTH SERIES .. 0 6 0

* For Copies by post an additional Threepence is charged.

GENERAL INDEX,

† NINTH SERIES .. 0 10 6

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

† This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publishers reserve the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

JOHN C. FRANCIS & J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

THE NEW PENCARBON.—LETTERS COPIED WHILE WRITING. Ordinary Pen, Ink, and Paper are used. 1s. 6d. per Dozen Sheets, 8 in. by 10 in.—HACON & GRINAWAY, Queen Street, Cardiff.

For Acidity of the Stomach.

For Heartburn and Headache.

For Gout and Indigestion.

DINNEFORD'SMAGNESIA.

For Sour Eructations and Bilious Affections.

A Safe and most effective Aperient for regular use.

YOUR BIRTHRIGHT IS HEALTH.THE SCIENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

'Health is a Man's Birthright. It is as natural to be well as to be born. All pathological conditions, all diseases, and all tendencies to disease are the result of the transgression of physiologic and hygienic law. This is the science of health in a nutshell.'—DENSMORE.

Eno's Fruit Salt

IS NATURE'S ANTIDOTE FOR HUMAN ILLS
arising from the neglect or violation of her laws.

'Our Acts, our angels are, for good or ill, our fatal shadows that walk by us still.'

'And such is life, so gliding on, it glimmers like a meteor, and is gone.'

CAUTION.—Examine the capsule, and see that it is marked ENO'S 'FRUIT SALT.' Without it you have the sincerest form of flattery—IMITATION.

Prepared only by J. C. ENO (Limited), 'FRUIT SALT' WORKS, LONDON, S.E.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

NOW READY

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

SUPPLEMENT TO

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Containing an Account of the Flag, Reprinted June, 1908.

With Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NEXT WEEK'S ATHENÆUM will contain Reviews of THE SPRINGS OF HELICON, by Prof. J. W. MACKAIL, and RICHARD SAVAGE, by STANLEY V. MAKOWER.

NEARLY READY.

With 8 Illustrations. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

NOTES BY THE WAY,

WITH

MEMOIRS OFJOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.,*Dramatic Critic and Editor of 'Notes and Queries,' 1883-1907,

AND

THE REV.JOSEPH WOODFALL EBSWORTH, F.S.A.,*Editor of the Ballad Society's Publications.

BY

JOHN COLLINS FRANCIS,

AUTHOR OF 'JOHN FRANCIS AND THE ATHENÆUM.'

THE FOLLOWING ARE SOME OF THE CONTENTS:—

JOSEPH KNIGHT.—His Father and Mother—Education—King of the College—Life at Leeds—Leaves for London—Becomes Critic of the Athenæum—Editor of Notes and Queries—Dramatic Critic of the Daily Graphic and of the Globe—Contributions to the 'Dictionary of National Biography'—Writes Life of Rossetti—Sunday Evenings with the Marstons.

JOSEPH WOODFALL EBSWORTH.—His Life in Edinburgh—Affection for Scott—Exhibits at the Scottish Academy—Contributes to Hogg's Instructor and Bradshaw's Magazine—Goes to Cambridge—His Ordination—Wins the Hearts of the Gipsies—Devotes Himself to Ballad History—His Friendships with Ellicott, Kingsley, George Gilfillan—Writes on the Brontës—Letters from Patrick Brontë—Dedicates 'Roxburghe Ballads' to Queen Victoria.

LITERARY JUBILEES AND CELEBRATIONS.—Daily News—Daily Telegraph—Guardian—Blackwood's Magazine—Gentleman's Magazine—John Rylands Library—Leisure Hour—Chambers's Journal—John Cassell—John Limbird—Charles Knight—Globe—Field—Saturday Review.

LONGFELLOW.—His Father—First Poem—Considers his Poetic Career Finished—His Marriages—Enthusiastic Reception in England—Visits Tennyson—Returns Home—Children Celebrate his Birthday—Death and Funeral—Sorrow in America and England—His Bust in the Abbey.

COWPER.—His Sensitive Temperament—His Terrible Lines—John Newton's Influence Beneficial—Happy Years at Olney—His Gratitude to Mrs. Unwin and Lady Hasketh—His Lost Poem 'The Castaway'—Why the Name is Pronounced Cooper—'The Cup that Cheers'—Cowper Anticipated—Maitland on Cowper's Works in America—Origin of "God moves in a Mysterious Way"—Letters Sold at Sotheby's.

AUCTION SALES.—Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge—Hodgsons—Puttick & Simpson—Trade Sales—Sale of Scott's Copyrights.

THE CITY OF LONDON.—Its Privileges—Its Roll of Fame—Guildhall Library—Lord Mayor's Precedence—Street Improvements—Cattle in Streets—Increase of Traffic—The Thames Embankment—Bad Odours of the Thames—Rateable Value—The Guilds—Financial History—Black Friday—Baring Brothers—Goschen Converts the 3 per Cents—Splendid Series of Records—Dr. Reginald R. Sharpe—Educational Grants—Charitable Grants—City Temple Pulpit—Report on Coronation Privileges—Title of "Lord" Mayor never Officially Conferred.

PUBLISHERS.—The Longmans—John Murray—Smith, Elder & Co.—Macmillans—Richard Bentley—George Bentley—The Blackwoods—John Camden Hotten—Chatto & Windus—Henry Bohn—Quaritch—The Sotherans—Frederic Norgate—The Lockwoods—Nicholas Trübner—John Chapman.

THE JEWS IN ENGLAND.—The First Synagogue—"Gates of Hope" School—First Hebrew Book Published in England—Jewish Portraits by Lady Magnus—Halevi's 'Songs of Faith and Hope'—Jewish Historical Society—Rebecca in 'Ivanhoe'—Efficiency of Jewish Schools—Medal to Lord John Russell—David Salomons—Moses Montefiore—The Rothschilds.

GENERAL SUBJECTS.—The National Flag—The United Free Church of Scotland—Edward VII.'s Title in Scotland—The Ninth Jubilee of Glasgow University—The British Academy—War Correspondents—Brougham's Reported Death in 1839—G. J. Holyoake—Philip James Bailey—Elizabeth Barrett Browning—First Christmas Card—Longest Telegram—List of Civil List Pensions under Victoria, published by permission of the Comptroller, with Biographical Notes—The Post Office, 1856-1906—Newspapers at the Time of the Coronation of Queen Victoria—Chorley's Hymn on the Birth of Edward VII.

FROM J. M. DENT & CO.'S LIST.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF MASTER JOHN HUS.

By COUNT LÜTZOW, Hon. D.Litt.Oxon., Ph.D.Prag., Author of 'A History of Bohemian Literature,' 'Prague,' &c. Medium 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.
Contains a Map, 4 Photogravures, and many other interesting Reproductions from Old Prints and Paintings.

Daily Telegraph.—"Count Lützow has rendered the English-speaking world a signal service, for, apart from the importance of the subject, he has revealed to us a great and most sympathetic personality, whose life was purity and devotion personified, and whose death, in its sublime patience and self-negation, recalls that of Socrates."

BEETHOVEN'S LETTERS.

CRITICAL EDITION, CONTAINING OVER 1,100 LETTERS, WITH EXPLANATORY NOTES. By Dr. ALF. CHR. KALISCHER. Translated, with Preface, by J. S. SHEDLOCK, B.A. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 21s. net.

Daily Telegraph.—"It is hardly too much to state that here we have the final word on Beethoven, the best of all studies of the man and his innermost self."

A POCKET LEXICON AND CONCORDANCE TO THE TEMPLE SHAKESPEARE.

Prepared by MARIAN EDWARDS. Illustrated cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. net.

Consists of various readings and interpretations of words and phrases, including the latest contributions given in the Oxford Dictionary. The Glossary is accompanied by a Concordance; and illustrations from authentic sources have been introduced as a necessary means of understanding words referring to dress, armour, &c.

NEW THINGS AND OLD IN SAINT THOMAS AQUINAS.

A Translation of various Writings and Treatises of the Angelic Doctor. With an Introduction by H. C. O'NEILL. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

TALES FROM SACCHETTI.

Translated from the Italian by MARY G. STEEGMANN. Introduction by Dr. GUIDO BIAGI. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Athenæum.—"For Miss Steegmann's translation of more than eighty of Sacchetti's Tales we have nothing but praise.... It is an excellent piece of work."

NEW POOR LAW OR NO POOR LAW.

Being a Description of the Majority and Minority Reports of the Poor Law Commission. With an Introductory Note by CANON BARNETT. 1s. net.

CALVIN IN HIS LETTERS.

By Rev. HENRY F. HENDERSON, M.A., Author of 'Erskine of Linlathen,' 'The Religious Controversies of Scotland.' Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net.

BOOKS ON ART.

VOLUME II. TO BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY.

A NEW HISTORY OF PAINTING IN ITALY.

By J. A. CROWE and G. B. CAVALCASELLE. A Reprint of the Original Text Verbatim. Edited and supplemented with Notes by EDWARD HUTTON. At least 300 Reproductions of Pictures.

To be completed in 3 vols. Demy 8vo, 3l. net per set.

Volume III. will be published Autumn, 1909.

VASARI ON TECHNIQUE.

Translated by L. S. MACLEHOSE. The Translation revised and an Introduction added by Prof. BALDWIN BROWN. With Coloured and other Illustrations. Square demy 8vo, 15s. net.

This work, the introduction to Vasari's 'Lives,' has never before been translated out of the Italian into any other European language, in spite of its enormous value to all interested in art.

SCIENCE, MECHANICS, AND MANUAL TRAINING.

DENT'S SCIENTIFIC PRIMERS.

Edited by J. REYNOLDS GREEN, Sc.D. F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations, 1s. net.

The Following Three Volumes are now ready.

BOTANY. BIOLOGY. CHEMISTRY.

By Dr. J. REYNOLDS GREEN, F.R.S., Fellow of Downing College, Cambridge. By Prof. HARVEY GIBSON, Professor of Botany in the University of Liverpool. By Prof. W. A. TILDEN, F.R.S. Professor of Chemistry in the Royal College of Science, South Kensington.

Other Volumes in active preparation. Please write for Prospectus.

A FIRST DYNAMICS.

By C. S. JACKSON, M.A., Late Scholar Trinity College, Cambridge, and W. M. ROBERTS, M.A., Late Scholar Corpus Christi College, Oxford, Instructors in Mathematics in the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. With more than 200 Diagrams and numerous Examples. Crown 8vo, 5s.

PRINCIPLES OF EDUCATIONAL WOODWORK.

A Handbook for Teachers and others interested in Education. By CHAS. L. BINNS and RUFUS E. MARSDEN, A.R.S.I. Illustrated with numerous Designs. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

LES CLASSIQUES FRANÇAIS.

Edited by H. WARNER ALLEN.

A Series in the Original French. Photogravure Frontispiece. Pott 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net per vol.; limp lambskin, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLUME.

JULIE; OU LA NOUVELLE HÉLOÏSE.

Par JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU. Édition Abrégée, avec Préface de FRANK A. HEDGCOCK.

A full List of the Volumes may be had post free on application.

TRAVEL BOOKS.

PARIS AND ITS STORY.

By THOMAS OKEY. With over 120 Illustrations, including 50 in Colours by O. F. M. WARD, numerous Line Drawings by KATHERINE KIMBALL, and many Reproductions of the famous Pictures and Statuary for which Paris is so renowned. Large fcap. 4to, 1l. 1s. net.

The Athenæum says:—"A pleasant, readable, chatty and accurate record of the principal events of which Paris has been the theatre from its foundation to the present time."

ROME AND ITS STORY.

By LINA DUFF GORDON and ST. CLAIR BADDELEY. With over 150 Illustrations (50 in Colours) by AUBREY WATERFIELD, together with Reproductions of famous Pictures and Statuary. Large fcap. 4to, 1l. 1s. net.

THE CASENTINO AND ITS STORY.

By ELLA NOYES. Illustrated in Colour and Line by DORA NOYES. Fcap. 4to, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

A vivid picture of the upper part of the Valley of the Arno—a district teeming with historic memories and items of interest relating to such men as Dante and St. Francis.

THE OLD VENETIAN PALACES AND OLD VENETIAN FOLK.

By THOMAS OKEY. With 50 Reproductions in Colour and many in Black and White from Drawings by TREVOR HADDON, R.B.A. Also Reproductions from Ruskin's 'Stones of Venice,' 'The Seven Lamps of Architecture,' and 'Examples of the Architecture of Venice.' Square medium 8vo, 1l. 1s. net.

VENICE AND ITS STORY.

By THOMAS OKEY. With 112 Illustrations (50 in Colours) by NELLY ERICHSEN, W. K. HINCHLIFF, and O. F. M. WARD. Cloth, full gilt back and side. Large fcap. 4to, 1l. 1s. net.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"Not only gives in a sustained and consistent narrative the story of the Queen of the Adriatic, in all its marvellous vicissitudes, but is illustrated in a manner that unfolds to the eye fresh charms the oftener they are regarded."

IN FURTHER ARDENNE.

By the Rev. T. H. PASSMORE, M.A. With 16 Illustrations from Photographs, and a Map. Fcap. 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

"GUIDES TO THE SPIRIT OF THE PLACE."

DAILY NEWS.

"FOR VISITORS IT WOULD BE HARD TO IMAGINE A MORE DESIRABLE COMPANION."

ATHENÆUM.

DENT'S MEDIAEVAL TOWN SERIES.

A Series of Literary Guide Books.

The latest Volume just issued is PISA. By JANET ROSS and NELLY ERICHSEN. Fully illustrated by the latter.

Please write to us for complete List of Volumes.

J. M. DENT & CO. Bedford Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4257.

SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

Lectures.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

TUESDAY NEXT, June 1, at 3 o'clock, F. GOWLAND HOPKINS, Esq. D.Sc. F.R.S., FIRST OF TWO LECTURES on 'Biological Chemistry.' Half-a-Guinea the Course.

THURSDAY, June 3, at 3 o'clock, Prof. W. E. DALBY, M.Inst.C.E., FIRST OF TWO LECTURES on 'A Modern Railway Problem: Steam or Electricity.' Half-a-Guinea.

SATURDAY, June 5, at 3 o'clock, F. F. BLACKMAN, Esq. D.Sc. F.R.S., FIRST OF TWO LECTURES on 'The Vitality of Seeds and Plants.' (1) 'A Vindication of the Vitality of Plants.' (2) 'The Life and Death of Seeds.' Half-a-Guinea.

THE BRITISH ACADEMY.

THE SCHWEICH LECTURES ON BIBLICAL ARCHÆOLOGY.

The Rev. R. H. KENNETT, B.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge, Fellow of Queens' College, Canon of Ely, will deliver THREE PUBLIC LECTURES ON FRIDAYS, May 28, June 4, and 11, at 5 o'clock, in THE THEATRE, BURLINGTON HOUSE, BURLINGTON GARDENS, W. (Vigo Street), on 'The Composition of the Book of Isaiah in the Light of Archaeology and History.'

The Lectures are open to the Public free, and without invitation.

Societies.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY. (Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

The ALEXANDER PRIZE (Silver Medal) will be AWARDED MARCH 31, 1910. Candidates will be at liberty to select their own Subject in European or English Colonial History, but Subjects must be submitted to the Literary Director.—For further conditions apply to THE HON. SECRETARY, 7, South Square, Gray's Inn, London, W.C.

Exhibitions.

G. F. WATTS, R.A., F. SHORT, A.R.A.—The FINE ART SOCIETY beg to call attention to their New Colour Reproductions of the Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A., just issued from the Watts Gallery; also a Collection of Mezzotints and Etchings by FRANK SHORT, A.R.A., NOW ON VIEW at 148, New Bond Street.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall, S.W.
The 96th Exhibition of Pictures now open.
SELECTED WORKS BY

M. MARIS. H. HARPIGNIES.
J. ISRAELS. L. HERMITTE.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION OF PORTRAITS AND LANDSCAPES
by EARLY BRITISH AND FOREIGN MASTERS is NOW OPEN.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King Street, St. James's.

Educational.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION
for FILLING about TWENTY VACANCIES on the FOUNDATION will be held on TUESDAY, June 22, and Following Days.—For particulars of the Examination application should be made to the Bursar, Mr. S. BEWSHER, St. Paul's School, Hammersmith Road, W.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION will be held on JUNE 22, 24, and 25 to FILL UP NOT LESS THAN SEVEN RESIDENTIAL AND TWO NON-RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS and also some EXHIBITIONS. For particulars apply by letter to THE BURSAR, Little Dean's Yard, S.W.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

The EXAMINATION for SCHOLARSHIPS in CLASSICS, MATHEMATICS, and THEOLOGY COMMENCES at 9 A.M. on WEDNESDAY, June 16. For particulars apply to THE SECRETARY OF EXAMINATIONS, University Offices, Durham.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.
F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.
Preparation for Universities and Professions.
Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

EDUCATION (choice of Schools and Tutors
Gratis). Prospectuses of English and Continental Schools, and of successful Army, Civil Service, and University Tutors, sent (free of charge) on receipt of requirements by GRIFFITHS, SMITH, POWELL & SMITH, School Agents (established 1833), 34, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE OF SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppincham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

Situations Vacant.

KATHARINE LADY BERKELEY'S
GRAMMAR SCHOOL, Wotton-under-Edge, Glos.
The HEAD-MASTERSHIP of this recognized SECONDARY MIXED SCHOOL is VACANT. The GOVERNORS will proceed in JULY to appoint a HEAD MASTER, who must be a University Graduate, and who will take up his duties in SEPTEMBER. Applications to be sent in before JULY 1.—For Forms and particulars apply to the Clerk, H. GOLDINGHAM Solicitor, Wotton-under-Edge.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN (University of London), YORK PLACE, LONDON, W.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in FRENCH who will be Head of the Department. The appointment is open to Men and Women equally, and will take effect at the beginning of the Michaelmas Term.

Applications, with thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 19, to the Secretary, from whom further particulars may be obtained.
ETHEL T. MCKNIGHT, Secretary.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN (University of London), YORK PLACE, LONDON, W.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in LATIN who will be Head of the Department. The appointment is open to Men and Women equally, and will take effect at the beginning of the Michaelmas Term.

Applications, with thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 19 to the Secretary, from whom further particulars may be obtained.
ETHEL T. MCKNIGHT, Secretary.

ROYAL HOLLOWAY COLLEGE ENGLEFIELD GREEN. (University of London.)

The GOVERNORS will shortly appoint a LADY as STAFF LECTURER in FRENCH, who will be expected to come into residence in OCTOBER.—Applications, with four copies of Testimonials, should be sent by JUNE 10 to THE PRINCIPAL, from whom all particulars may be obtained.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON. GOLDSMITHS COLLEGE TRAINING DEPARTMENT. LECTURER IN ENGLISH.

A LECTURER (Man) in ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE will be needed in the above Department in SEPTEMBER, 1909. Initial Salary between 180*l.* and 250*l.*, according to attainments and experience.

Applications should be received by JUNE 9.—Full particulars can be obtained from THE WARDEN, Goldsmiths College, New Cross, S.E.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF CROYDON. EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

The COMMITTEE invite applications for the post of PRINCIPAL of the POLYTECHNICS at a Salary of 300*l.* per annum, rising by two biennial increments of 25*l.* to 350*l.*, subject to percentage deduction under the Corporation Superannuation Scheme.

The Candidate appointed will be required to devote the whole of his time to the duties of his office, and will be responsible for the development and organization, the discipline, and the educational efficiency of the instruction given in the Polytechnics.

The Instruction at the Polytechnics is for the most part given in the Evening, and there are Classes in Science, Art, Trade, Commercial, Building, and Domestic Subjects, and in Mechanical and Electrical Engineering.

The Principal will also be required to take part in superintending any other Evening Classes established by the Committee, and to advise and assist the Committee in the co-ordination of all Evening Classes.

Candidates must not be over 45 years of age, and must hold University or other professional qualifications.

A List of Classes held in the Polytechnics, together with a form of application and statement of duties, may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, accompanied by copies of not more than three Testimonials of recent date, must be sent not later than the 26th JUNE, 1909.

JAMES SMYTH, Clerk to the Committee.

Education Office, Katharine Street, Croydon.
May 17, 1909.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

CAMBRIDGE AND COUNTY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

TWO MASTERS will be REQUIRED on the STAFF of the above SCHOOL in SEPTEMBER NEXT.

(a) For Senior Latin, Junior French, and General Form Work.

(b) For Junior Latin, and General Form Work.

Applications, stating Salary required, should be sent on or before JUNE 1, to the Education, County Offices, Cambridge.

AUSTIN KEEN, Education Secretary.

GOSPORT AND ALVERSTOKE SECONDARY SCHOOL.

An ASSISTANT MASTER is REQUIRED, to commence duties in SEPTEMBER NEXT.

Candidates must be specially qualified in English Language and Literature.

The Salary will commence at 120*l.* to 140*l.*, rising to 200*l.* by annual increments of 10*l.*

Further particulars may be obtained from THE HEAD MASTER, to whom applications should be addressed not later than JUNE 10 NEXT.

High Street, Gosport.

HANDSWORTH (STAFFS.) EDUCATION COMMITTEE. SCHOOL OF ART.

ASSISTANT MASTER REQUIRED, to commence duty in SEPTEMBER NEXT. Commencing Salary 90*l.* per annum. Time for Private Study.—Forms of Application may be obtained from the undersigned (on receipt of a stamped addressed envelope), and must be returned, together with copies of three recent Testimonials, not later than JUNE 12, 1909, to J. F. INGRAM, Secretary, Education Offices, Handsworth, Staffs.

TECHNICAL SCHOOL, GUILDHALL, BATH.

SENIOR ASSISTANT ART MASTER REQUIRED for the BATH SCHOOL OF ART. Salary 110*l.* per annum. Applications must be received not later than THURSDAY, June 17.—For further particulars apply to

A. GODFREY DAY, Director of Studies.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland,
15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

WEST SUSSEX AND CHICHESTER JOINT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

CHICHESTER HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Applications are invited for the post of HEAD MISTRESS of the above NEW SCHOOL. It is hoped that the Buildings will be completed and ready for occupation by the middle of September, 1909, and it is desirable that the Head Mistress should enter on her duties at as early a date as possible. Accommodation for 200 Girls of 10 to 18 years of age. The Salary will be 300*l.* per annum, with a Capitation Grant of 10s. per unit of average attendance for all Pupils up to 150, and 1*l.* per unit for pupils over 150. Applicants must be Graduates of some University in the United Kingdom, or have equivalent qualifications as may be approved by the Board of Education. A copy of the Draft Scheme (which has received the approval of the Board of Education), together with a print of the prescribed Form of Application, may be obtained of the undersigned. Applications, accompanied by copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, must be received on or before JUNE 22, 1909.

Personal canvassing will be a disqualification.

LIONEL THOMPSON, Secretary.

Education Offices, Horsham, Sussex.
May 21, 1909.

COUNTY COUNCIL OF THE WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE.

The WEST RIDING EDUCATION COMMITTEE are prepared to receive applications for the post of ORGANIZING MISTRESS for MODERN LANGUAGES (French and German). The Work of the Organizing Mistress will consist chiefly in visiting Secondary Schools in order to assist and supervise the Modern Language work. She will also be required to take charge of certain Teachers' Classes in Modern Languages.

Commencing Salary 250*l.* per annum.

Applications, addressed to the Education Department, Secondary Branch, County Hall, Wakefield, should arrive not later than MONDAY, June 14, and should be made upon a special Form, which can be obtained on application.

RADNORSHIRE EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL.

A MISTRESS, with experience in teaching Mathematics and History, is REQUIRED for the above Secondary School after the Summer Holidays. A Degree or its equivalent is essential. Salary 120*l.* per annum, non-resident.

Applications, with copies of Testimonials and References, to be sent to THE HEAD MASTER.

LITERARY SECRETARY REQUIRED by the Editor of an important Weekly Publication. Must be young and energetic. Shorthand indispensable.—Reply, by letter, stating experience, if any, and Salary required, to Box 1061, Sell's Advertising Offices, Fleet Street, London.

Situations Wanted.

GENTLEMAN (Professional) experienced
Traveller in many Countries, good Linguist, OFFERS SERVICES as SECRETARY, TUTOR, or COMPANION. July and half August, or part of time.—No. 159, Keith & Co., 43, George Street, Edinburgh.

SECRETARY - LIBRARIAN.—YOUNG MAN, of good family, REQUIRES RE-ENGAGEMENT. Had over four years' Literary experience.—Apply A. BRUSH, 10, St. Edward's Passage, Cambridge.

Miscellaneous.

RETIRED PUBLISHER seeks a PARTNER-
SHIP in a LONDON PUBLISHING BUSINESS in which he could take an active interest, involving about Three Days' Work each Week. The Business must be profitable, and bear strictest investigations. Advertiser willing to invest 5,000*l.* to 10,000*l.*—Reply, by letter, to F. C. A., 28, Basinghall Street, London, E.C.

SCULPTOR has VACANCY for a PUPIL. Instruction given in Painting, Design, and the Crafts.—Address Box 1596, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL
RESEARCH WORK undertaken. Moderate Terms. Excellent References.—Apply Box 1594, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

REGINALD GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Cantab., undertakes GENEALOGICAL and RESEARCH WORK. Three years' experience in Ulster's Office, Dublin. Highest references. Terms moderate.—3, Challoner Street, West Kensington.

RESEARCH WORK in the British Museum or elsewhere undertaken. Also Translations. Experienced.—Miss KENNEDY, 54, Grove End Road, London, N.W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 1062, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PRIVATE SOCIAL TOURS FOR GENTLE-
WOMEN.—AUSTRIA, JUNE 17. Including Vienna, Budapest, the Danube, and beautiful Salzkammergut District. Succeeding Tours—Switzerland, Holland, Italy. References exchanged. Programmes from Miss BISHOP, 27, St. George's Road, Kilburn, London.

FABRICIUS.—BIBLIOTHECA GRÆCA, ed. Harless, 1700-1809. 12 vols. in 6. Lately and strongly bound. Scholar wishes to DISPOSE OF.—SIGMA, 123, Mayfield Road, Edinburgh.

THE DAUGHTER of a well-known Literary Man is desirous of meeting with a LADY and GENTLEMAN to SHARE her HOUSE; or would take Boarders. Rooms furnished or unfurnished. The House is situated on South Norwood Hill, five minutes from Norwood Junction Station, close to the Stanley Halls (where Concerts, Lectures, &c., are continually given), near the Public Library, and within a walk of the Crystal Palace, or One Station from it. Norwood is regarded as one of the healthiest places round London, and was at one time a well-known health resort. A good train service to London Bridge and Victoria.—Address C. M., Box 1562, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Typewriters, &c.

TYPE-WRITING.—All kinds of TYPE-WRITING, SHORTHAND, and DUPLICATING WORK UNDERTAKEN. Sermons and Meetings Reported. Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1,000 words. Special Terms for Contracts and large quantities.—Miss MORGAN, Bush Lane House, Cannon Street, London, E.C. Telephone: 12137 Central.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Alledale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.C.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street Adelphi, W.C.

Catalogues.

CATALOGUES.—Vale Press Shakespeare, 39 vols. as new, 7s. Ruskin's Works, Library Edition, 37 vols. good as new, 30s. CLEARANCE CATALOGUE OF BOOKS, History, Science, Sociology, Early Printed Works, and General Literature, post free. Genuine Bargains in First Editions and scarce items. Parcels sent on approval if desired.—Address J. BALDWIN, 14, Osborne Road, Leyton, Essex.

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols. 2s. 10s.; Trigg's Art Garden Design, Italy, 3½ guineas, for 21s.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3s. 3s.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices. SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

BERTRAM DOBEL, SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER, 77, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C. A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

MAGGS BROS., 109, Strand, London, W.C. DEALERS IN RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, PRINTS, and AUTOGRAPHS. CATALOGUES sent post free to all parts of the World. Export Orders Solicited. Telegraphic and Cable Address: "Bibliolite, London." Telephone: "Gerrard 4664."

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner, Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace Richmond, Surrey.

Authors' Agents.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGESS, 24, Paternoster Row.

M. R. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Lerner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

Printers.

FAMILY RECORDS, PEDIGREES, MEMOIRS, &c., PRINTED under Expert Supervision, and Searches made where MS. is incomplete. Write for Estimates and all Particulars.—GERRARDS, Ltd. (The Westminster Press), Producers of Printing of Distinction, at 411A, Harrow Road, London, W.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Sales by Auction.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On THURSDAY, June 3, PORCELAIN, DECORATIVE FURNITURE, and TAPESTRY from various sources.

On THURSDAY, June 3, PICTURES by OLD MASTERS.

On FRIDAY, June 4, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS.

On MONDAY, June 7, and Three Following Days, and TUESDAY, June 15, and Two Following Days, a PORTION of the valuable LIBRARY of BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS formed during the early part of the last century by HENRY B. H. BEAUFOY, Esq., and now sold by order of the Beaufoy Trustees on the removal of the remaining portion of the Library to Coombe House, Wilts. The Collection includes beautiful Examples of Illuminated Manuscripts—French Illustrated Books of the Eighteenth Century in fine contemporary bindings—Books of Prints—Military Costumes—Scarce Books on America—Armorial Bindings, including Marie Antoinette, Madame de Pompadour, &c.—Publications of the Aldine, Elzevir, Bodoni, Lee Priory, Baskerville, and other Presses, many in fine bindings—Bibliographical Works by De Bure, Dibdin, Mattiere, and Panza—Books of Voyages and Travels—Several Hundred Volumes on Antique Gems, Coins, and Medals—Incunabula and Early Printed Books.

On THURSDAY, June 10, and FRIDAY, June 11 (by order of the Executors), the important COLLECTION of MODERN PICTURES and WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS of the ENGLISH and CONTINENTAL SCHOOLS, and Works of the Early English School, of Sir JOHN D. MILBURN, Bart., deceased, late of Guyzance, Ackington, Northumberland. Catalogue, containing 11 illustrations, price 5s.

STEVENS'S AUCTION ROOMS. Established 1760.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, June 8 and 9, at half-past 12 o'clock.

A wonderful COLLECTION of WEAPONS, IDOLS, WOOD CARVINGS, &c., from Java, India, and other Parts—Pictures, Prints, China, &c., from a Private Collector—about 150 Lots of Dwarf Japanese Trees—and the usual varied Collection of Curios.

Mr. J. C. STEVENS will SELL the above Property by AUCTION at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. Catalogues on application.

Engravings, the Property of the late Mr. URBAN M. NOSEDA, of King Street, St. James's, S.W.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION (by order of the Executors), at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 2, and Two Following Days, the STOCK of ENGRAVINGS of the well-known Printseller the late Mr. URBAN M. NOSEDA, of King Street, St. James's, S.W.; also the COPPER PLATES of his PUBLICATIONS.

May be viewed on SATURDAY, May 29 (10 to 1 p.m.), also on TUESDAY, June 1. Catalogues may be had.

Engravings and Drawings.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 7, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS, DRAWINGS, &c. (Framed and in the Portfolio), comprising Theatrical Portraits by J. R. Smith, R. Dunkerton, T. Park, R. Houston, J. Ogborne, F. Bartolozzi, and others—Portraits in Mezzotint and Stipple by J. R. Smith, W. Ward—Lady Gertrude Fitzpatrick, by C. Wilkin, and Lady Gertrude Villiers, by the same—George Washington on Horseback, after A. Campbell, a Mezzotint—a Complete Set of Lodge's Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain, Engraver's Proofs on India Paper, &c.—Fancy Subjects of the English School by E. Bartolozzi, P. W. Tomkins, L. Schiavonetti, A. Cardon, T. Burke, W. Nutter, G. Vendramini, P. Simon, and others, a few printed in colours—Naval Engagements—Sporting Prints—Caricatures—Book Illustrations—Modern Etchings by Seymour Haden, J. M. Whistler, D. Y. Cameron, R. W. Macbeth, A. H. Haig, W. Strang, and others, including fine First States of Seymour Haden's Windsor (Drake 183), and Greenwich (Drake 184)—Engravings, Etchings, and Woodcuts by A. Dürer, Rembrandt, and other celebrated Old Masters—Arundel Society, Drawings in Water-colours; and a few Drawings by Old Masters and Oil Paintings.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Autograph Letters and Historical Documents.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 9, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, including Burns, Keats, Lord Byron, Sir W. Scott, Dr. Johnson, C. Dickens, Edmund Kean, David Garrick, and others—numerous Letters and Documents relating to the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars—a fine Series of Letters from Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton to Wm. Haslewood, his Executor—Correspondence of the Right Hon. W. Windham and of John Robinson, Secretary of State to George III.—an interesting Collection relative to Mirabeau, the Orator of the French Revolution—important Documents with the Great Seals, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable Collection of Japanese Colour Prints the Property of JOHN STEWART HAPPER, Esq., of New York City, U.S.A.

SECOND AND FINAL PORTION.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 14, and Four Following Days at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable COLLECTION of JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS the Property of JOHN STEWART HAPPER, Esq., of New York City, U.S.A.

May be viewed on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, June 10, 11, and 12. Catalogues may be had; illustrated Copies, 5s. each.

Modern Publications and Remainders—Miscellaneous Books, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on FRIDAY, June 4, at 1 o'clock, MODERN PUBLICATIONS and REMAINDERS, chiefly New, in Cloth—Popular Novels and Juvenile Books, &c.—also Miscellaneous Books in all Classes of Literature. To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 9, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising Incunabula from the German, French, and Italian Presses, some with Woodcuts—Sixteenth-Century English Literature in Black Letter—the Writings of the Dramatists—Early Works relating to America—Specimens of Bindings—Folio Architectural, Topographical, and Antiquarian Books—Hogarth's Works, early impressions—Books on Gardening and Natural History—Library Editions of Standard Historical Works—the Century Dictionary, 8 vols., &c.

Catalogues on application.

The Library of the late Rev. Dr. HASLEWOOD, removed from Chislet Vicarage, Canterbury.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., DURING JUNE, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising Topographical and Genealogical Works—Sets of the Archæologia Cantiana, 1859-1907, 28 vols., Sussex Archæological Collections, 52 vols., and Suffolk Institute of Archæology, 13 vols.—Howard and Crisp's Visitations, 15 vols.—Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica, 18 vols.—Standard Books in Theology and Classical Literature, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 17, and Following Day, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including a SELECTION from the LIBRARY of the late Prebendary MEAD, removed from Balcombe; the LIBRARY of the late Prof. OGER, removed from Kensington, and other properties (by order of Executors), comprising Standard Works in all Branches of Literature, valuable First Editions—Books with Coloured Plates, by the Cruikshanks and Rowlandson—a fine copy of Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery with Proof Impressions—Martial Achievements—a Collection of Works relating to the Fine Arts—Encyclopædia Britannica, 36 vols with Case, &c.

Catalogues in preparation.

For Magazines, &c., see p. 658.

GALICIA THE SWITZERLAND OF SPAIN

By ANNETTE M. B. MEAKIN.

With 105 Illustrations and a Map. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"Wonderfully comprehensive and valuable."—Glasgow Herald.

"Miss Meakin shows a complete mastery of her subject."—Glasgow News.

"It is a fascinating country, and Miss Meakin's is a fascinating and extremely well-written book."—Observer.

"Here we have the practised author, able to detect at a glance the materials fit for her purpose."

Yorkshire Daily Post.

"Miss Meakin is at her best when she is telling us what she saw, and then her best is decidedly good."

Times Literary Supplement.

"There is a very fine, a very original, and a very accurate chapter upon Pedro de Mezonzo's Salve Regina, the like of which has not appeared in any other work."—Morning Post.

"The book, well planned and well written, and enriched by pictures and map, is a generous one, wherefrom the archaeologist, the artist, the social and political economist will severally derive interest and profit."—Daily News.

"Her book appeals equally to archaeologists, sportsmen, farmers, and the ordinary tourist."—Manchester Guardian.

"A book which every Spaniard acquainted with the English language, and every Englishman fond of beauty and truth ought to have in their respective libraries."—Anglo-Spanish Trade Journal.

"She conveys much solid and interesting information in a charming style, and her book is deserving of the honour it has obtained of a dedication accepted by the Queen of Spain."—Scotsman.

METHUEN & CO. 36, Essex Street, London, W.C.

ENGLISH REVIEW

CONTENTS FOR JUNE

1. LA PAIX ET LA GUERRE
CAMILLE PELLETAN
2. MODERN POETRY
Four Poems JOHN GALSWORTHY
Three Poems GERALD GOULD
Two Poems EDEN PHILLPOTTS
One Poem EZRA POUND
3. SOME INNKEEPERS AND BESTRE
WYNDHAM LEWIS
4. AGATHA BLOUNT
ELLA D'ARCY
5. A MAN OF IMPULSE
ST. J. HANKIN
6. SOME REMINISCENCES. (Part Two.) III.
JOSEPH CONRAD
7. THE FOG
H. M. TOMLINSON
8. A CERTAINTY
OLIVE GARNETT
9. THE HOLY MOUNTAIN, III.
STEPHEN REYNOLDS

THE MONTH will contain articles by CAMILLE MAUCLAIR, H. BELLOC, M.P., EDWARD THOMAS, and others, while THE EDITORIAL will deal with the Budget and Current Events.

HALF A CROWN MONTHLY

Half-Yearly Subscription from July to December, 15s.

DUCKWORTH & CO. Henrietta Street, W.C.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

In 2 royal 8vo vols. price £2 2s. net.

The Scottish Grey Friars.

BY

WILLIAM MOIR BRYCE,
Searcher of Records.

With Photogravures, Plates, and Illustrations throughout the Text.

Vol. I. HISTORY.

Vol. II. DOCUMENTS.

WILLIAM GREEN & SONS,
2 and 4, St. Giles Street, Edinburgh.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

DARWIN AND MODERN SCIENCE. Essays in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Charles Darwin and of the fiftieth anniversary of the publication of 'The Origin of Species.' Edited by A. C. Seward, Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge.

Royal 8vo
With 2 portraits and 3 plates
18s net

"Editor and committee alike are to be congratulated on the handsome and instructive volume, which cannot fail to be of solid service in letting us know exactly where we stand in relation to Darwin and his doctrines. A score of first-rate home authorities and half as many from the universities of the Continent and America have sent a series of substantial contributions—wisely adapted to the educated layman rather than to the expert—on the various phases of Darwin's work and the influence exerted by his doctrines in almost every department of thought. The importance of such a work can hardly be over-estimated."

Glasgow Herald

MENDEL'S PRINCIPLES OF HEREDITY. By W. Bateson, M.A., F.R.S., V.M.H., Professor of Biology in the University of Cambridge.

Royal 8vo
3 portraits
6 coloured plates and 33 figures
12s net

"Mendel's work has been too much neglected, and any book which serves to confirm its enduring value and extend the application of its principles deserves a welcome from all earnest students of science. Prof. Bateson's exposition of Mendelism, a work everywhere well founded in original researches upon the lines laid down by the great Austrian naturalist, is such a book. It gives a succinct, yet full, account of discoveries in regard to heredity made by the application of Mendel's methods of research."—Scotsman

"Prof. Bateson's treatise... will rank as one of the most important biological publications of the year, for it constitutes the only authoritative work that aims at something approaching a comprehensive and complete outline of the most absorbing problem of modern biology."—Standard

THE CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND. A course of lectures delivered by F. W. Maitland, LL.D.

Demy 8vo
12s 6d

"We agree with the editor, Mr. H. A. Fisher, when he says, 'there is no book which provides so good an introduction to the study of English Constitutional Law or which is likely to be more highly valued by practical teachers of the subject at our universities. This suggestive book should be read not only by every student of law, but by every citizen who takes an intelligent interest in the national life.'"

Law Journal

THE ROMAN LAW OF SLAVERY. The condition of the slave in private law from Augustus to Justinian. By W. W. Buckland, M.A.

Royal 8vo
18s net

"The author of this learned book aims at stating in systematic form 'the principles of the Roman Law of Slavery as a whole.'... So great is the care, skill, and accuracy with which his object has been carried out that we think it will be long before any other writer, either at home or abroad, attempts to produce a rival work on this branch of law. Mr. Buckland combines the exhaustiveness of German research with the minuteness and precision of Cambridge scholarship."

Law Quarterly Review

THE DIGEST OF JUSTINIAN. Translated by C. H. Monro, M.A., Barrister-at-Law.

Vols I and II
Royal 8vo
12s net each

[VOL. I]—"It is difficult to express too high commendation for the scholarly rendering of the text.... Nowhere is there collected a greater mass of erudite information, of clear exposition, and of logical reasoning."—Law Times

[VOL. II]—"This volume carries on the rendering from the seventh book to the fifteenth, and brings to the service of students of the civil law the same exact learning and linguistic care as marked its predecessor. Too often it happens that a man needs to qualify himself as an expert in Roman law who has little taste for Latinity. Such students will find it difficult to overestimate the value of this version; while the most accomplished civilians will find it helpful in the interpretation of the many doubtful passages that impede the progress of one considering this monument of jurisprudence in its original language."—Scotsman

ITALY FROM 1494 to 1790. By Mrs. H. M. Vernon.

Crown 8vo
5s 6d net

"This volume assumes special value from the very judicious way in which the author has dealt with her subject.... Mrs. Vernon has been well advised to deal comparatively briefly with the earlier period [1494-1559], of which the events are fully narrated in many well-known works of easy access, and to devote herself more particularly to the later [1559-1790], about which it is difficult for the ordinary reader to obtain information. This excellent scheme has been ably worked out, and has resulted in the production of a work which the general reader will find most satisfactory."—Glasgow Herald

A GRAMMAR OF THE OLD TESTAMENT IN GREEK
ACCORDING TO THE SEPTUAGINT. By H. St. John Thackeray, M.A.
Vol. I. INTRODUCTION, ORTHOGRAPHY, AND ACCIDENCE.

Crown 8vo
8s net

The Septuagint, in view both of the period which it covers and the variety of its styles, ranging from the non-literary vernacular to the artificial Atticistic, affords the most promising ground for the investigation of the peculiarities of the Hellenistic or "common" language. It has been the aim of the author to produce a complete Grammar, the first portion of which is here published.

THE PRONUNCIATION OF ENGLISH: PHONETICS AND PHONETIC TRANSCRIPTIONS. By Daniel Jones, M.A., Lecturer on Phonetics at University College, London.

Crown 8vo
2s 6d net

This work is primarily designed for the use of English students and teachers, and more especially for students in training-colleges and teachers whose aim is to correct undesirable pronunciation in their scholars. At the same time it is hoped that the book may be found of use to lecturers, barristers, clergy, and all who desire to read or speak in public. The book is divided into two parts, Part I dealing with phonetics proper while Part II consists of phonetic transcriptions of passages selected from well-known English authors.

London, Fetter Lane: CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS: C. F. Clay, Manager

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

1909 ISSUE JUST PUBLISHED.

The Statesman's Year-Book.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1909. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

Oxford Lectures on Poetry.

By A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D., formerly Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.
COMPLETE IN 1 VOL.

The Golden Treasury of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language.

Selected and Arranged by F. T. PALGRAVE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Artemis to Actæon, and other Verse.

By EDITH WHARTON, Author of 'The House of Mirth,' &c. Extra crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

Greek Architecture.

By ALLAN MARQUAND, Ph.D. L.H.D., Professor of Art and Archaeology in Princeton University. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. net.
[Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities.]

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

THE WHITE SISTER.

A Story of Rome.

By the late F. MARION CRAWFORD.

Gervase.

By MABEL DEARMER, Author of 'The Alien Sisters,' &c.

NEW BOOK BY THE WRITER OF
'CONFESSION MEDICAL.'

Faith and Works of Christian Science.

Extra crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

The Psychology of Thinking.

By IRVING ELGAR MILLER, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

CHEAPER RE-ISSUES.

Arethusa.

By F. M. CRAWFORD. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

A Lady of Rome.

By F. M. CRAWFORD. 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S SEVENPENNY SERIES.

Comprises some of the Best Books of some of the most Popular Modern Writers.

Size 6½ by 4½ in. with Frontispieces by MR. WILLIAM SEWELL.

Bound in blue cloth, with gilt lettering. 7d. net each.

THE FOREST LOVERS.

By MAURICE HEWLETT.

A ROMAN SINGER.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.

THE FIRST VIOLIN.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

ELIZABETH AND HER

GERMAN GARDEN.

THE HOUSE OF MIRTH.

By EDITH WHARTON.

DIANA TEMPEST.

By MARY CHOLMONDELEY.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE.

By JAMES LANE ALLEN.

A WAIF'S PROGRESS.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

JOHN GLYNN: a London Story.

By ARTHUR PATERSON.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Messrs. MacLehose's NEW BOOKS.

IDEALISM AS A PRACTICAL CREED.

Being the Lectures on Philosophy and Modern Life delivered before the University of Sydney. By HENRY JONES, M.A. LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, 6s. net. [This day.]

ROUND THE LAKE COUNTRY.

By the Rev. H. D. RAWNSLEY, Honorary Canon of Carlisle. Crown 8vo, with 8 Illustrations, 5s. net. [This day.]

A SON OF KNOX,

and other Studies Antiquarian and Biographical. By JAMES FLEMING LEISHMAN, M.A., Minister of Linton. Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 3s. 6d. net. [This day.]

LIFE OF ROBERT HERBERT STORY, D.D. LL.D.

Late Principal and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Glasgow. By HIS DAUGHTERS. With Portraits and Illustrations. 1 vol. demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"A notable addition has just been made to the number—not too great—of markedly 'human' biographies.....There is nothing to skip—everything is so full of human as well as historical interest."—British Weekly.

SERMONS.

By the late WALTER C. SMITH, D.D. LL.D., Author of 'Olrig Grange,' &c. With Portrait. 1 vol. crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"His depth of religious conviction, his faith in the Divine goodness, his human charity, his exaltation of all that is pure and lovely and of good report, and condemnation of every false and crooked way; above all, his power to inspire and encourage, to uplift and console, give his pulpit utterances a spiritual value independent of all theological changes."—Glasgow Herald.

REGINALD PECOCK'S BOOK OF FAITH.

A Fifteenth Century Theological Tractate. Edited from the MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge, with an Introductory Essay, by J. L. MORISON, M.A., Professor of History in Queen's University, Kingston, Canada. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF KANT EXPLAINED.

By JOHN WATSON, LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in Queen's University, Kingston, Canada. Post 8vo, 10s. net.

"Anything that can make the meaning and significance of that philosophy clearer to the student ought to be warmly welcomed, and this present work does more than any other with which we are acquainted to accomplish this great end. The book is a great boon to the student of philosophy."—Aberdeen Free Press.

ESSAYS ON LITERATURE.

By the late EDWARD CAIRD, D.C.L. LL.D., formerly Master of Balliol. Second Edition. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

JAMES MACLEHOSE & SONS, Glasgow.

Publishers to the University of Glasgow.

London and New York: MACMILLAN & CO., LTD.

Books of Note

DEDICATED BY GRACIOUS PERMISSION
TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

THE STORY OF THE HOUSE- HOLD CAVALRY, 1661-1902.

By Capt. Sir GEORGE ARTHUR, Bart., late Second Life Guards. With Photogravure Portraits and other Illustrations including 6 Coloured Plates. 2 vols. super-royal 8vo. Édition de Luxe, limited to 40 copies, 10l. 10s. net. Ordinary Edition, 3l. 13s. 6d. net.

"Sir George Arthur has earned the gratitude of all his companions in arms for the manly and spirited fashion in which he has told his stirring story."—Daily Telegraph.

RADIOACTIVITY AND GEOLOGY.

An Account of the Influence of Radioactive Energy on Terrestrial History. By J. JOLY, M.A. Sc.D. F.R.S., Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"A most fascinating book."—Liverpool Post.

CHAPTERS ON SPANISH LITERATURE.

By J. FITZMAURICE KELLY. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"A delightful volume, full of sympathy, learning, and judgment."—Observer.

"We have no hesitation in saying that this volume forms the most valuable English contribution to Spanish letters since the same author gave us his history of Spanish literature."—Athenæum.

"I have never met with such an illuminating work on Spanish literature."—Mr. R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM in the Nation.

ENGLISH HERALDIC BOOK STAMPS.

Figured and Described by CYRIL DAVENPORT, F.S.A. About 300 Illustrations. Super-royal 8vo, 25s. net. [This day.]

This is the first English book on the subject. A detailed Prospectus can be had from the Publishers.

THE DOMINION OF DREAMS.

By FIONA MACLEOD. New Edition, Pocket size. Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net. [Shortly.]

THE NOVELS AND POEMS OF GEORGE MEREDITH.

Full List on application.

THE NEWEST NOVELS. PRISCILLA AND CHARYBDIS.

By F. FRANKFORT MOORE, Author of 'The Jessamy Bride.'

"This most entertaining social comedy."—Times.

"For good, festive, but not facetious novels, it would be hard to beat him."—Observer.

THE STORY OF THYRZA.

By ALICE BROWN, Author of 'Rose Macleod.'

"A strengthening tale builded of charity, human kindness, and the humour which has tears behind it."—Daily Chronicle.

THE PERJURER.

By W. E. NORRIS, Author of 'The Square Peg.'

Mr. Norris has never written a more delightful story.

THE ACTRESS.

By L. C. HALE.

[Next week.]

THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE REVIEW

MIDSUMMER NUMBER.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

Contents.

[Next week.]

G. K. CHESTERTON.

Milton and His Age.

LT.-COL. ALSAGER POLLOCK.

The Officer's Training Corps.

Major P. A. B. SILBURN, D.S.O.

The Possible Secession of South Africa.

M. M. PATTISON MUIR.

The Prose Romances of William Morris.

A. G. D. CRAWSHAY.

An Armenian Household.

R. P. HEARNE.

The Universities and Aeronautics.

CURE DE CAMPAGNE.

A Sunday Dinner-Table.

S. C. KAINES SMITH.

Mr. Rackham and the Fairies.

C. B. BULL.

Some Aspects of Oxford Athletics.

Book Reviews, &c.

This Review appears during each Academic Term.

A Specimen Copy may be had on application.

Annual Subscription 8s. 6d. net.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO. LTD.
10 Orange Street London W.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
RICHARD SAVAGE	637
SEMITIC MAGIC	638
MAJOR DAVIES IN YÜN-NAN	639
THE SPRINGS OF HELICON	640
NEW NOVELS (Barbary Sheep; The Quest; Davina; A Queen of Hearts; The Bargain; A Sense of Humour; Joan of the Hills; Cloister to Court)	641-642
THE SCHOOL OF METERNICH	642
CLASSICAL BOOKS AND TRANSLATIONS	643
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Sir Henry Brackenbury's Memories; Pages d'Histoire contemporaine; Indian Dust; Willowdene Will; De Quincey's Literary Criticism; Macmillan's Sevenpenny Series; Burdett's Hospitals and Charities)	644-645
GEORGE MEREDITH	645
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	646
LITERARY GOSSIP	648
SCIENCE—THE FLUIDS OF THE BODY; BEHIND THE VEIL IN BIRDLAND; THE BIOGRAPHY OF A SILVER-FOX; RESEARCH NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	649-652
FINE ARTS—ART PRICES CURRENT; THE NATIONAL GALLERY: ALLGEMEINES LEXIKON DER BILDENDEN KÜNSTLER; THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB; OTHER EXHIBITIONS; THE CUTHBERTSON SALE; GOSSIP	652-654
MUSIC—PELLÉAS ET MÉLISANDE; LA TOSCA; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	654-655
DRAMA—THE BANCROFTS' RECOLLECTIONS	655
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	656

LITERATURE

Richard Savage. By Stanley V. Makower. Illustrated. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THE impiety of the present age, believing neither in gods nor men—that, and the steady impoverishment of our vocabulary which keeps pace with the ostentatious enrichment of our dictionaries—has lately put out of fashion the once-respected term “providential.” We regret the fact, since it forbids us to say that it was a providential chance (or, in a more privileged tongue, θεία τυχή) which brought Samuel Johnson up from Lichfield in time to make the acquaintance of Mr. Richard Savage. Certainly chance—mere chance—could have begotten no stranger conjuncture than this companionship of a wastrel and a moralist under the midnight sky of London; nor could careful providence have arranged any event, required by poetic justice, more precisely in the nick of time. In 1737 Savage's turbulent and contested career was already in its ominous penultimate stage, the doom of banishment even then preparing in the minds of well-wishers who, above all else, wished themselves well rid of him. In a little while the man would have been gone, and his story forgotten; or (since there were some poor shreds of biography, and certain of his writings had the merit of scandal) would have received their portion of recollected oblivion among the curiosities of literature. It was this final ignominy that Johnson's timely arrival averted from his strange, disreputable, and defeated friend. ‘The Life of Savage’ caught a perishing interest and a disappearing name in the very act of decease, and placed them high and safe in the firmament of letters. Henceforth every challenger of Savage's claims had to deal not only with the man as he lived, but also with his life as it was written.

The first challenger of any note, curiously enough, was Boswell—partly influenced, we may suppose, by jealousy, and partly by his curious vein of propriety. Happily, though he so far ventured as to have his doubts, he shrank from the extreme misbehaviour of reversing the judgment of Johnson. “The world,” says he evasively, “must vibrate in uncertainty as to what was the truth.” The next challenger was better prepared, and came to a bolder conclusion. In Mr. Moy Thomas's articles (Notes and Queries, 1858) every available record was ransacked, and either there was no evidence, or it told against the claimant. The effect of the investigation was seen in the investigator himself: who wrote his first two articles with an open mind, but closed the last with the words, “I have not, I confess, any doubt that Richard Savage was an impostor.”

The impeachment has never been answered. Perhaps the sentence (who knows?) was just. Enough that the shade of Johnson barred and still bars the execution. We cannot discharge from our minds the prepossessions which the ‘Life of Savage’ placed there. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that Johnson was deluded; that his manly faith was no better than another's raw credulity, and that his fearless championing was wasted on a rogue. So the matter stands much as it did, only more a mystery now by the addition of a curious brief. The romance has become a riddle as well as a pity and a wonder; and, as a riddle, will provoke attempts to read it.

Before we speak of the extremely interesting attempt now under review, it may be worth while to formulate what seem the reasonable grounds for a refusal to regard the articles of 1858 as having settled the question, especially for a refusal to accept the damnatory final dictum. Broadly, the investigation established two things: that all trace of the Countess of Macclesfield's illegitimate son was lost soon after birth; and that Savage's account of himself was vague, contradictory, and sometimes at variance with known truth. As to the latter point first. The justice of his cause is separable from his veracity in detail. The mythopoetic faculty which, in the poet and the child, is frequently exercised in filling the blanks of biography, is likely enough to have sometimes had its own way with poor Savage. Living with a sense of wrongs which he was powerless to get righted—baffled and in the gutter—he was almost committed, for consolation, to the process of imagining supplementary wrongs: attempts to kidnap him, legacies malevolently turned aside, and so forth. How much, or precisely what, was due to this source we may not pretend to say; but a good deal may be credited to such reverie in one who, nevertheless, was honestly convinced that he was the missing son of the Countess of Macclesfield and Earl Rivers. And the disappearance of that child (to revert to the other point) is no proof of death. Here is the weak point in the chain of Mr. Thomas's argument. He does not claim that the “Richard Portlock” who died in 1698 was the child who was “fetched” by the Portlocks from Hampstead some months earlier on the pretence that it was theirs. He inclines to hold that the Portlocks were only momentarily implicated, that they were made use of merely to break the scent, and that the child was passed swiftly from them back to the Ousleys, those reputable associates and aids of the guilty parents. But grant this, and nothing forbids us to assume that the child who was whisked from point to point so mysteriously was with as much mystery safely placed out by those useful confederates. How long they kept him in sight we do not know, any more than we know when or whether he died. One thing is fairly clear: that from a very early stage his mother was well content to lose sight of him. Nor is that fact so difficult to explain or believe as Mr. Thomas seemed to find it. All the adroit spiriting of the forbidden babe from stranger to stranger had failed of its purpose. Her husband had brought his petition, the extreme exposure had ensued, she was a divorced woman—probably now cured of her liking for Earl Rivers, and resenting the existence of the fruit of that mistake. Add the fact that within two years she was married and, as Mrs. Brett and at last a lawful mother, had good reason (was perhaps compelled) to sink every relationship that would have perpetuated the unlucky past. All this is as fair surmise as anything adduced in the whole case. If it be granted, then the subsequent fortunes of the child may be easily guessed. They would involve such an upbringing, at once watched and neglected, as seems to lie behind Richard Savage.

This suggests a very pertinent question which, so far as we know, has never yet been raised. If Savage was not the missing child, who was he? Had he been the regularly begotten and normally reared son of ordinary folk, these folk would have been somewhere. They might have been kept in the background for a time; but sooner or later some rumour of them would have appeared. Yet they are traceless: Richard Savage appears upon the scene as suddenly as Melchizedek. Again, had he been brought up in a normal way, a number of people would have been able to vouch for his antecedents. He was a topic; and there was doubtless money to be made by exploding his claims. But nobody ever pointed to his past: nobody ever said that this Sir Roger Tichborne was that Arthur Orton. The more one considers this fact, the more remarkable it appears. The reasons adduced for Mrs. Brett's silence are valid solely on the assumption that her defence could only have taken the form of a protestation that this man was not her illegitimate son, because that child had died. But it might surely have taken the form of pointing out whose child he was or what were his known antecedents.

There should have been those at hand who could supply that information, and it should have been precious to her in the day of obloquy: especially after Savage was dead and the story of his wrongs was immortalized in a book which everybody was reading, a book by that new star of literature, the author of 'London.'

But apparently the information which would have served her turn was forthcoming from no quarter. When we bear in mind that she survived him nearly ten years, and then died, as she had lived, with sealed lips, we have warrant for assuming that the whilom Countess more than half believed that Savage was her son: a son whom she may for a time have believed to be dead, and whose reappearance brought turmoil into a life that had outlived the attachments and relationships to which he belonged. In support of this view is the fact of Lord Tyrconnel's acceptance of Savage on the vague footing of a kinsman, which was the relation of Harry Esmond to Lord Castlewood. Indeed, we incline to the view that it may have been at the instance of his aunt (not, as Mr. Makower opines, in contempt of her) that Tyrconnel took the remarkable step of admitting Savage as an inmate of his house.

Savage, therefore, was certainly a child of mystery, whether he mistook his parents or no. Everything points to his having been a "by-blow" (be it of Earl Rivers or another rake) brought up under conditions that were not those of family life. His faults and his virtues alike support the idea. With imperfect education and imperfectly realized powers, he has a singular independence of mind, as of a unitary being. He was as void of meanness as he was destitute of forethought, like one who had escaped the evil and the good of domestic discipline. He wasted his life like one who had had no preparation for the adventure of living, because nobody had been interested in forming him for success. On the other hand, his virtues lay close to his faults, and may have been equally the issue of an upbringing which while making him solitary, left him free. In what we consider the best and truest of his poems—that in which for once the man amid the chaos of qualities speaks out clear—he says:—

Say I knew well, while in a state obscure,
Without the being base the being poor.

It was a just claim. His avoidance of the many ways of baseness which were then open to a man who could write—and which must have appealed eloquently to one who was sometimes poor even to hunger and homelessness—is the declaration of a spirit to which the term "impostor" does not readily adhere. We recognize it as the spirit which Johnson communed with in their walks together, and which to him, when all faults had been allowed for, was yet the real Savage. So the world is likely to vibrate in uncertainty still: admitting in the last resort nothing more sinister than a disastrous misprision—how originated we know not—and concluding with no comment less charitable than the words of Henley:—

Since it was his to call until the end
Our greatest, wisest Englishman his friend,
'Twere all-too fatuous if we cursed and scorned
The strange, wild creature Johnson loved and mourned.

Mr. Makower's striking study sets an example which we should be sorry to see become a fashion. The making of biographies is a burden of to-day; but it is doubtful whether exhausted nature would be able to survive a deluge of works in which the biographer took over, as part of his professional apparatus, the subjective intimacy, not to say omniscience, of the modern novelist. The author's aim, and the success achieved, justify the experiment in this case, as they also justify his method of dealing with his sources. He would have done well, however, to explain in a brief preface what his aim was, and what his method. This would have given point to attention and obviated misunderstanding. For want of such a cue, the critical reader has a sense of unreality, if not of displeasure, when he first finds himself reading what he recognizes as a paragraph of Johnson's marmorean and decisive diction transmuted into the friable plausibility of modern style.

But there was no other way for it, if the thing was to be done at all. Every scrap of record had to be turned to account to form the first text for a study, or "reconstitution," executed without argument, citation of sources, or quotation marks. On the other hand, Mr. Makower has not permitted himself to invent an incident or impute a line of dialogue. He has drawn upon his knowledge of the time just sufficiently to suggest the visible scene and the historic hour, and to characterize, without any indulgence in elaborate portraiture, the secondary personalities whose characters are known. He has also drawn (though only the closer student will detect this) deeply and skilfully upon the poet's own writings for probable hints as to his thought or feeling in various crises. Finally, our author has drawn, for the means of interpretation, very largely upon himself: upon his own equipment of imagination, judgment, and sympathy. This, after all, is only what the conventional biographer does whenever he tries to interpret his subject instead of transcribing its records. He seldom does it so profitably for his subject or for literature as Mr. Makower has here done.

With his general view we are in agreement. Here and there we should differ, especially in some places where the accent of modernity, not only in the literary, but also the mental idiom of the writer, is perhaps too pronounced. He sometimes, but rarely, refines too much, and plausibly enough resolves where it would have been better to leave things uncertain. Upon the whole, however, Mr. Makower is to be thanked for an achievement which gives to the strange life and character of Richard Savage a new and ample visual presentment and a new soul of imaginative and sympathetic interpretation. The book has been wrought with love and knowledge, and contains many impressive passages in which the sense is as deeply thought and felt as it is admirably phrased. The portraits are unusually well produced, but unfortunately no portrait of Savage has yet revealed itself.

Semitic Magic: its Origins and Development. By R. Campbell Thompson. (Luzac & Co.)

THIS interesting book does not deal with Semitic magic as a whole, but treats only of certain aspects of it illustrated by the cuneiform texts, derived for the most part from Assurbanipal's library at Nineveh, as compared with certain parallel beliefs implied rather than fully described in the Bible. Starting with an introduction in which he deals with such sources as the well-known Shurpu, Maklu, and Utukki Limnuti series of tablets, and quotes many similar documents from the magical literature of Greeks, Jews, Malays, and especially the Arabs of the present day, Prof. Campbell Thompson goes on to describe in succession Semitic ideas as to Demons and Ghosts, Demoniac Possession and Tabu, Sympathetic Magic, the Atonement Sacrifice, and the Redemption of the First-born. We are not sure that he has preserved in his own mind any rigid divisions between these overlapping subjects, and it is significant that the first chapter (that on Demons and Ghosts) far exceeds in length and fullness the other four. But when all is said, he has got together a large mass of facts which can—and probably will—be used by hundreds of scholars who are unable personally to consult the rather recondite sources from which they are drawn.

The manner in which he treats the first division of his subject appears from his own summary, in which he puts forward the proposition that "the Semitic idea of spirits differs hardly, if at all, from the superstitions of all other peoples." A priori this might be conceded, and it would certainly be curious if the Semitic race—the least original or most assimilative of all the varieties of mankind yet discovered—had succeeded in forming a different idea of the invisible world from that conceived by their contemporaries. Yet the author gives us some curious and unexpected lights upon this resemblance when he points out that the Seven Evil Spirits of Assyrian legend may be considered as the souls of the dead, who, not finding anything whereon to subsist in the next world, have come back to the earth to plague the living. We are not sure that the texts quoted are equal to the weight here laid upon them; but Prof. Campbell Thompson has earned the right to speak with authority on the subject, and his former work on 'The Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia' (see The Athenæum, Nos. 3969 and 4004) shows that the contention is not lightly advanced. If its correctness be admitted, his conclusion would seem to follow that the desire for posterity common to all Semites—which surpasses, it would appear, that of other peoples—is to be attributed in the first instance to the wish for the due celebration of the rites which will allow the dead to rest quietly in their graves. Another point which he makes in this connexion is the constant association in the Semitic mind of this idea with the accompanying of spirits of either kind with human beings of the opposite sex, as shown by the supposed nocturnal visits of Lilith, and by the plain references to the subject in the Legend of Tobit. That it was this idea, first coming into the beliefs of Christendom from the free circulation of the Scriptures after the German Reformation, which caused the most terrible excesses of the witch mania, those versed in the subject can hardly doubt. It is curious, however, to learn from Prof. Campbell Thompson that religious prostitution existed “down to quite modern times” among the Moslems in Egypt and Palestine, and that the Dragon of the Apocalypse who stands before the woman in travail “for to devour her child as soon as it was born” is to be attributed to the Lilith belief, as are the phylacteries which the modern Jews suspend in the birth-chamber to preserve the new-born child from the assaults of jealous spirits. Sometimes, indeed, he seems inclined to push his theory too far, as when he states without qualification that Yahweh was the real parent of Isaac and perhaps of Samson, as well as of the mythical Aholah and Aholibah of Ezekiel. In all three cases the texts are open to another interpretation. Passing on to the question of Demoniac Possession, the author states his conviction that the origin of disease was by all Semites attributed to the possession by evil spirits, whom primitive man represents to himself as always lying in ambush for the unwary, and that the tabu came in the first instance from the contagion arising from the taking possession by the survivor of the bedding or clothing of the dead. Some curious survivals of this are shown. For example, the Palestinian Jew, when he is being treated for epilepsy or madness, may not pray or mention holy words, while all holy books are removed from his chamber, no doubt for fear of unnecessarily offending the evil spirit whom it is sought to conjure. Most of the evidence on which the author relies is, however, drawn from the cuneiform texts which he speaks of as “comparatively unedited,” and as to which he says, with some reason, that the translations available at the present day are, owing to the rapid progress of Assyriology, far more trustworthy than was the case some years ago. He is certainly right when he tells us that these are a great deal nearer to the foundations of Semitic beliefs or their subjects than any other evidence at our disposal; but perhaps he is a little inclined to push this theme also too far, as when he compares the use of the Host in Roman Catholic exorcisms to that of water and flour in an Assyrian charm. It seems plain that the use of the Host has here no connexion with Assyria or Babylonia, but is due to the conviction that the Real Presence must naturally be most terrible to the infesting demon.

On the question of Sympathetic Magic, Prof. Campbell Thompson has not much that is new to offer, unless it be that the use of the net in Assyrian magic may be due to the “affluence”—as he puts it—of knots with which it is decorated. The use of the knot in magic is universal, and readily explicable when we consider how extraordinary it must seem to primitive man that a cord twisted in one way should hold fast, while another twisted in what seems to him at first sight an exactly similar way should not. Here again, too, the very ancient use of the wax figure as a means of destroying an enemy is abundantly illustrated from cuneiform sources, and the Babylonian practice of thus “bewitching” an enemy of the State before battle finds some curious parallels in the Syriac and Ethiopic legends of Alexander the Great and the drawing “on a tile” of a city and its siege-works inculcated in Ezekiel.

The chapters on the Atonement Sacrifice and the Redemption of the First-born we consider together, because it is here that the overlapping alluded to above becomes most evident. The author’s theory seems to be that all “piacular offerings had their origin in the custom of providing a substitute to absorb the evil action of supernatural agency,” and that the ideas summed up in the Hebrew word Kipper or atonement were derived from a common source with those of the Assyrians, who used a similar word in the same sense. Thus he explains the sins “unwittingly committed,” which find frequent reference in both Assyrian and Hebrew religious texts, as a breach of the tabu imposed on certain acts; and he is probably right when he says that in pre-exilic days the Hebrew worship knew nothing of the Day of Atonement, although a similar custom is common to several primitive peoples. The notion that disease is caused by a breach of tabu is well worked out, and he supports M. Fossey in the convincing attack which he has lately made on Prof. Prince’s theory of the scapegoat. He will have nothing to do with Dr. Jeremias’s notion of a secret human sacrifice among the Babylonians, who, as he sensibly remarks, had no reason to be “secret” on such a subject; and he inclines to the theory that

“the sacrifice of children was in primitive times as much a sharing of a meal with the deity as any other sacrifice, which, traced to its logical conclusion, would show the primitive Semitic savage to be a cannibal.”

He shows from Mr. Doughty with effect that the Arabian nomads suffer constantly from hunger during a great part of the year, and thinks that this was the original cause of cannibalism. There is a good deal to be said both for and against this proposition, but to deal with it effectually would take us outside the limits of this review.

Generally, it may be said that Prof. Campbell Thompson might have done better had he spread his net wider. He speaks of the geomancy practised by modern Arabs without noting that this was one of the favourite practices of the Byzantine “wise men,” from whom the Arabs may well have learnt it. So, too, he does not seem to be aware that the story of the Devil being deceived by bargaining for crops that grow alternately above and under the soil, which he gives as peculiar to the folk-lore of Mosul, is told, among others, by Rabelais in his legends of Papefiguière. The “Hermes Abootat” who builds treasuries in the Sahid according to Ibn Abubekr is clearly the Egyptian god Thoth; and the use of the words “Anuk Adonai” (“I am the Lord”) in the Græco-Egyptian magical papyri must be attributed to the habit, described by Porphyry as special to the Egyptian sorcerers of his time, of pretending to be some deity of greater power than the demon they were conjuring. So, too, the reason why the Levitical law prescribed a treatment for the firstling of an ass different from that assigned to the first-born of any other animal, may be that the ass was, as many think, the totem or sacred animal of the Hebrews.

There are occasional infelicities of diction which rather surprise us in what is evidently a well-thought-out book; but there are extremely few misprints, that in which “Nature” is put for “water” being the only one of any consequence that we have detected. Such blemishes are, therefore, fairly negligible, and should not seriously diminish our appreciation of a very honest as well as a very ably-written book.

Yün-nan, the Link between India and the Yangtze. By Major H. R. Davies. (Cambridge, University Press.)

THE Chinese province of Yün-nan is likely to be much talked of in the coming years, for railway schemes that have been under consideration for more than a generation are now entering the phase of practical realization. On one side, the French railway has actually crossed the borders of the province; on another, the Indian Government has at last decided to make a forward move, also in accordance with its treaty rights. Yün-nan for the sake of its mineral deposits, and still more, perhaps, as the portal to richer provinces beyond, such as Ssu-chuan, must fill a considerable place in the story yet to be recorded of the pacific development of China’s resources. The opening-up of China will probably be effected piecemeal, and the practical measures for making a beginning in Yün-nan are now far advanced. In these circumstances the details accumulated by Major H. R. Davies during several visits to South-West China possess a direct value which makes this volume indispensable for all who wish to watch and follow the development of the district.

Major Davies devotes his three opening chapters to the question of the best railway routes, and many of the chapters that immediately follow relate to tours in the border districts between Burma and China. The most striking feature noted in the Shan and Kachin districts was the caution shown by the chiefs and headmen in having any relations with the English travellers, notwithstanding that they came armed with a Chinese passport in good form issued at Peking. This fear of the Chinese authorities is very reasonable, for sometimes the local officials have suffered severely through having been too hospitable to foreigners. Perhaps the most fruitful cause of apprehension was due to the fact that the advent of even a single traveller was magnified by local rumour into the approach of an invading army. Major Davies gives a striking description of one of these Shan chiefs dwelling on the Chinese side of the frontier :—

“The first of these chiefs is a very remarkable figure to meet with in this part of the world—a man of about 40 with a bald head, a red complexion, and a beard of enormous length. Dressed as he was in a long robe tied round the waist by a cord, one would most certainly take him for a French priest. It would not enter one’s head that he was a Shan. He had a most genial manner, always spoke at the top of his voice, and was the greatest friend with every one. Of his beard he was immensely proud, and in the early morning he would thrust it into a black silk bag to protect it from the dew. It cost him very dear a few years ago. He told us the story himself of how Ting, a Chinese general who had risen from a very low station of life, was consumed with jealousy when he saw the sawbwa’s beard. He asked him how he, a mere aboriginal chief, dared to come into the presence of a Chinese general with a beard of such length, and ordered him to shave it off or pay a fine of two thousand taels. The money was paid without hesitation.”

We have quoted this passage because it is one of the few lighter “asides” in which the author indulges. He is too engrossed in the serious matter of supplying useful information for his successors, whether they are mere explorers or railway contractors, to give any of his space to the amusing or interesting experiences that most travellers in strange lands meet with. He therefore supplies ample particulars of the chief towns of the province—Yün-nan-fu, the capital; Tali-fu, the former Mohammedan capital; and Yung-chang-fu, a commercial centre in the Mekong valley with a future before it—in preference to giving his reader some of those delightful sketches of Chinese life which abound in Mr. R. F. Johnston’s work travelling over much of the same ground. At the present time Yün-nan is not very prosperous, and its population is estimated at not more than nine millions; but evidence is adduced to show that its mineral resources have not been exaggerated, whilst, despite very primitive methods, several gold mines are reported to be paying handsomely.

As is well known, Yün-nan is the centre of much French activity, both official and missionary. French missionaries claim and possess official rank which enables them to sit in court on an equal footing with Chinese functionaries, and to look after the interests of their converts. The Protestant missionaries refrain from meddling in any way with the secular affairs of the State in which they carry on their work. Major Davies discusses the two systems, and concludes that while the French plan makes their missionaries more feared, it may also make them more hated. To some extent this was proved in the Boxer rising; but when there is a great anti-foreign movement such as that, it may be doubted if a Chinese mob will ever be self-restrained enough to differentiate between Europeans. Major Davies’s journey ended just after the outbreak of the Boxers, and he describes the alarm among Europeans at Chung-king, the river port of Ssu-chuan, when news arrived of Admiral Seymour’s retreat to Tientsin. He pays a well-merited compliment to the three Viceroys who preserved tranquillity throughout the Yang-tze valley during the summer of 1900. There is also a tribute to Capt. Watts-Jones, the able and successful explorer, who fell a victim to the Boxers in Shansi.

The second half of the volume relates to a tour in Northern Yün-nan and Western Ssu-chuan, when Major Davies, who had been joined at Batang by Capt. C. H. D. Ryder and Major C. C. Manifold, made an attempt to get back to India through Assam. In this undertaking opposition came not from the Chinese officials, but from the Tibetans, who at that moment under imperative orders from Lhasa were most hostile to everything English. They were wholly indifferent to Chinese requests or orders, and showed in the most unequivocal manner that they would resort to force in barring the travellers’ way. The first and final collision occurred at the Da-chu rope bridge across the Mekong. Here the Tibetans on the west bank refused to throw over the slings required to traverse the bridge. By a device, Major Manifold succeeded in securing some, and the greater number of the party, which included some Goorkha sepoy, got over; but it was found impossible to convey the mules across. The expedition was thus divided into two parties, but no overt opposition was anticipated. However, the Tibetans were bent on mischief, cut the rope of the bridge, and began stone-throwing. In the scuffle that ensued one sepoy was severely injured, and Major Manifold, who had captured the leading lama, was forced to release him. Still Major Davies did not give up the hope of getting his mules across the next day; but during the morning two hundred Tibetans crowned the hills and began firing. It became clear that there was no prudent alternative except to abandon the attempt. As soon as this intention was made evident, the Tibetans came down from their heights and assisted the encroaching party to recross the bridge into China. In circumstances of considerable provocation and great personal disappointment Major Davies seems to have shown much self-control, but, as he puts it, he did not like “to begin the killing.” Since that date the whole situation has changed. The Chinese asserted their power in 1904, and punished the lamas of the border districts; and it is the Viceroy of Ssu-chuan, and not the Dalai Lama, whose orders these turbulent and muscular priests have now to obey.

Major Davies has added to his clear and carefully written narrative a set of brief chapters and tabular statements dealing with the commercial, industrial, and ethnical aspects of the Yün-nan province. There are also details of the proposed routes for the railways. The volume is illustrated by numerous photographs taken on the spot, and in the cover there is the best map of the province that has yet been prepared.

The Springs of Helicon: a Study in the Progress of English Poetry from Chaucer to Milton. By J. W. Mackail. (Longmans & Co.)

THE subject of Mr. Mackail’s volume as well as his treatment of it raises a good many interesting questions. What are we to take an idea such as that of the progress of poetry to mean? Mr. Mackail refers us to Gray’s Ode for an answer. The meaning Gray attached to the idea is clear enough; and no one who follows it in broad outline will quarrel with it. The Muse visits Greece, Italy, England, in succession. In the majesty of her advance, we willingly forget how different is the Italy she forsakes for England from that for which she forsook Greece; yet for the purposes of criticism it seems relevant to ask whether a sequence obtained by ignoring the interval between Virgil and Dante is likely to be particularly illuminating. However, Mr. Mackail is thinking of the progress of poetry in a different context; his attention is confined to England, and the period from Chaucer to Milton. In what sense, then, can poetry be said to have progressed within that period? Mr. Mackail’s book provides no clear answer to this question; and, if he really wished to answer it, would he be right in singling out, as he has done, three great names and concentrating his attention on the vital quality of their work? If poetry is to be conceived as progressing from age to age—a doubtful contention, at the best—is its progress to be followed, as Mr. Mackail implies, by gauging the heights of successive mountain peaks? Or, granted this is to be the method, is it best pursued by omitting to notice the topmost peak of all? Gray’s larger, vaguer scheme included Shakespeare; Mr. Mackail’s, for reasons unexplained, does not.

Perhaps he intended no more by his title than to introduce us to the idea of a pageant or procession, in which the spirit of poetry was to be seen embodied in successive figures—Chaucer, Spenser, Milton. But to attack the matter thus would, surely, be to confuse criticism with poetry. For unless, in a critical work, the whole weight of exposition were thrown upon the order in which the figures passed before us and the principles on which they were grouped or chosen, the idea of a progress must be irrelevant. So, frankly, in Mr. Mackail's treatment, it seems to us to be. He speaks of the vital energy of the poet as the theme he is mainly interested to pursue: this vital energy is the quality of all others which enables the poet to transcend his age, which makes him timeless and individual, which most dissociates him from this idea of progress. It forms, naturally, a more alluring theme than the problems of external tendency, relativity, development, which criticism connects with the progress of the Muse. So far as these points are concerned, Mr. Mackail's volume contains little, if anything, that is not familiar; but we can only be glad that he has allowed himself to be guided by his taste and refused to let his title run away with him.

His gift is for detailed appreciation; it is because his book is not concerned with the progress of poetry that it is worth reading. We could not sincerely say that we find Mr. Mackail's discrimination or his sense of tone impeccable (he quotes Browning's "he who paints a fresco steals a hair-brush" to illustrate a remark on Spenser's 'Epithalamium'), but it is here that by his refinement of scholarship and delicacy of feeling he naturally enlists our sympathies. The praise of 'Troilus and Creseide,' the treatment of the Spenserian stanza, the root idea governing the essay on Milton—that pursuit of perfection which, as Mr. Mackail points out, separated him entirely from the poetic movement of his age—are all given in memorable passages, in the lucid, accomplished style which, when it does not overreach itself in simplicity or betray its accomplishment by some slight touch of pedantry or waywardness, belongs to the best products of humaner letters as they are cultivated to-day.

NEW NOVELS.

Barbary Sheep. By Robert Hichens. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. HICHENS has once more chosen the desert for the scene of his story; but, unlike 'The Garden of Allah,' this book is short, and comparatively simple in treatment, nor is it overloaded with a superfluity of descriptive matter. The main issue that he sets out to elucidate is, in effect, the foregone conclusion that "East is East, and West is West"; and this he illustrates with his usual deftness and ability. Nevertheless, we cannot but find the whole situation, together with the characters involved, rather unreal. The folly and frivolity of the conventional young Society woman who deceives an adoring husband by indulging in a surreptitious flirtation with an Arab (an officer in the Spahis) are almost incredible, especially as the husband's only foible appears to be an extravagant love of sport. All, however, falls out for the best. Sir Claude's suspicions are awakened in time; the lady's saner instincts assert themselves at the critical moment; while the Arab, who is the most ably drawn character in the book, is opportunely dispatched by a mad Marabout.

The Quest. By Justus M. Forman. Illustrated by W. Hatherell. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

MR. FORMAN is a story-teller, and a very skilled and pleasant story-teller. He is content to be that when he might perhaps be something more. He began, if we remember aright, as a deft follower of Anthony Hope, and he has kept on similar lines ever since. This story is written with ease; it flows along without any effort on the part of the reader, and seemingly little on the part of the narrator. It has incident enough, but its canvas is not too crowded; it contains fair women and one or more brave men. Finally, it is sympathetic, and has the trick of persuading the reader that it might have happened, or that he would like it to have happened. So Mr. Forman's latest tale will probably prove as popular as its predecessors, and with justice.

Davina. By Frances G. Burmester. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THE plot of this story is mainly concerned with the motives which lead to the marriage of the hero Joe Lawson with a deaf girl whom he does not love, but for whose infirmity he is, through an accident, held responsible, and with the results of this marriage upon a small group of people. The development of the story is thoughtful and interesting, but accomplished with the least possible amount of action. So laudably anxious is the author to avoid exaggeration that her character-drawing errs by being too neutral in tint. Joe, a strong, upright, generous character, lacks the touch of humanity which should arouse the keenest sympathies of the reader for the victim of an unscrupulous plot; whilst a full measure of charm is denied to Davina, the youthful heroine, whose nature is even stronger than that of Joe. For Joe's wife, with all her faults and secretiveness, it is difficult to feel any other sentiment than compassion, but the book finds an eminently suitable conclusion in the ultimate happiness of Joe and Davina.

A Queen of Hearts. By Evelyn Everett-Green. (F. V. White & Co.)

WHEN we first make acquaintance with the heroine of this story, we are inclined to pronounce her a dear little girl, and her adventure with an escaped prisoner—on far different lines from the similar incident in 'Great Expectations'—is mildly interesting. But when the "Queen of Hearts" develops into a full-grown young lady with a beautiful soul and conscientious objections to motor-cars, bridge, and cigarettes, she ceases to attract us, and we are not much excited by the subsequent proceedings of the ex-convict, who returns, of course, to claim her love and prove himself the innocent victim of a conspiracy.

We have no doubt that the story will appeal to girls in their teens, the class of readers for whom the author specially writes, and we therefore regret certain defects of style which we do not remember in her former works.

The Bargain. By T. Wilson Wilson. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THOSE who recall the vivid characterization of 'Bess of Hardendale' will read Miss Wilson Wilson's latest story with a sense of disappointment. 'The Bargain,' in which Bess reappears as a minor figure, is not nearly so attractive a book. The plot depends upon a misunderstanding which in real life could not divide two rational beings more than a quarter of an hour. Ara de Montfort believes that her father entered into a death-bed arrangement by which she was to marry her guardian, a kind-hearted, middle-aged Indian judge. The only basis for her belief is the not uncommon fact that an uncle and nephew have the same name. Ara makes rather a pleasing picture of girlish sensitiveness and vivacity, and the guardian has some nice touches of humour; but none of the character-drawing is intimate or strong enough to atone for the lack of movement in the story.

A Sense of Humour. By Beryl Faber and Cosmo Hamilton. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THIS is an excellent piece of fun, all the more enjoyable because the authors themselves have evidently enjoyed the making of it. The rapidly told tale—all the incidents take place within twelve hours—relates the jealousy-inspired manoeuvres of two married couples in a country house. Mrs. Hay, with the object of arousing her husband from the state of matrimonial apathy into which he has degenerated, pretends to flirt with Sir William Hutton; Lady Hutton, watching her friend's stratagem with "a sense of humour," enters into a retaliatory compact with Mr. Hay. An ingenious game of cross-purposes is merrily kept up until a rather daring situation ends it suddenly. The story, if uncommonly hard to believe, is delightfully easy to read, and has been dramatized.

Joan of the Hills. By T. B. Clegg. (John Lane.)

MR. CLEGG takes his hero, a barrister, from Gray's Inn to Australia, and enlists a good deal of sympathy and interest before the curtain falls on an uneven tale. The most romantic character is the barrister's son by an unfaithful woman who, after deserting him, leaves their child, when he has blossomed into a thief, at her husband's door. The reformation of this child constitutes a pleasing study in parental wisdom—a wisdom which, for the enrichment of the plot, is lacking in the hero's protracted abstention from proceedings in the divorce court. Peter Honey, an Australian storekeeper with whose daughter the hero falls in love, is comparable, not disadvantageously, with the David Harum of American fiction. The Australian incidents include a bush-fire which is treated with pathos and power.

Cloister to Court. Frances M. Cotton-Walker. (Longmans & Co.)

PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF BOURBON, who became the third wife of William the Silent, is a romantic figure, and this careful historical novel has at least done justice to the monastic part of her life. The author is gushingly pious, but contrives to invest her description of life in the nunnery of Jouarre with deep interest. Ermentrude the abbess, who accepts the heresy of her deceased lover, is a genuine creation. The Duc de Montpensier appears in an unlovely light, but the Princess Charlotte's married sister is depicted in ideal wedlock. It is difficult to idealize a lover who married four times before he was fifty, and the author contents herself with a slight treatment of the courtship of Charlotte by William the Silent.

THE SCHOOL OF METTERNICH.

IN this country we keep State secrets some hundred-and-ten years or so, and, when history has gone wrong for good and all, we publish the missing facts. By the Dropmore volumes the policy of 1800 is now revealed. The Record Office bundles of 1815 papers have also become usable, with some reserve, and some precautions—borrowed from Russia, but forgotten there in similar cases. Search for truth in Foreign Office papers is, however, less hampered by the rules than by the sequestration, if not destruction in the past, of similar documents to those revealed in the Grenville papers.

In France we get the secrets "hot and hot." Those which came to us recently in telegrams, based on M. Mévil's new book, concern our own hidden policy of 1904 and 1905, and bear on our policy of 1908. Published, however, with a purpose, they do not command the complete credence given to the results of wide comparisons of foreign archives by real students of historic facts.

To which of the Great Powers leagued against Napoleon—"the Four," as they were styled during the Congress of Vienna—should his descent from Elba on the France of the Restoration be ascribed? Was Lord William Bentinck's United "Italy friendly to us" the policy of Castlereagh at the moment when it was denounced by his colleagues and publicly censured by himself? These questions upset history; but the Dropmore volumes have already given Pitt's private view of his Austrian allies, and in 1815 Metternich had better grounds than historians think for suspecting Castlereagh of a policy as double as was his own.

In reviewing on the 19th of December last the first volume of Commandant Weil's Joachim Murat, Roi de Naples: La dernière Année de Règne (of which we now have the second), and that author's 'Le Revirement de la Politique autrichienne...et les Négociations secrètes,' we called attention to the extraordinary interest of the revelation of a policy concealed at the time from Talleyrand himself. Explaining that, in the days of Bonaparte, Metternich and Castlereagh had imitated their enemy in carrying on diametrically different policies at the same time, and writing letters intended to be seized, and others intended to be copied before receipt, we drew a parallel between the European statesmen of 1814 and those of the Italian Renaissance. M. Mévil supplies another.

It was in the case of Italy that Austria and Great Britain were both of them most tortuous; and at Elba Napoleon was connected in the minds of all men rather with Italy than with France. Whether, as we believe, he had all along intended to land in France, or whether the general opinion of the time was sounder—that he originally meant in the first place to complete what seemed the easier task of raising Italy by the help of Murat, with the crown of France as a more distant hope—no one foresaw the actual course of events. Metternich, and perhaps Castlereagh, stood to win in any event. Napoleon might be killed. If he partially succeeded, Austria held his Empress and his son. The interest of Austria was to keep Italy in fragments, but was not opposed to the destruction of the Bourbon throne, regarded at the moment by Metternich as a more dangerous embarrassment than that of Murat. The revelations of the archives of Turin, where, more than in any other capital, the truth is stored, have been utilized by Commandant Weil sufficiently to upset all settled views, and to open all possible conjecture. It may be that there exist elsewhere the essential documents to complete the story. Those whose curiosity is awakened will find how poor is all other material previously in their hands. The memoirs of Lord Castlereagh and the papers laid before our Parliament to defend his policy against Whig attacks are now seen to make clear, not the real policy either of Castlereagh or of Metternich, but that which the virtual, though not the nominal ambassador of Austria in Paris called "la politique ostensible." Gentz, the secretary of the Congress at Vienna, was, as Commandant Weil points out, not in the secrets of Metternich at the time, but found out enough to sum up the whole matter in the presence of the better-informed Saint-Marsan: "That he should be able to write three histories of the Congress—one of its avowed results, one of the secret negotiations known to few, and one which would destroy all the ideas presented by the two others,—dévoilant la turpitude de la politique."

Lord William Bentinck was the central figure in the struggle between Castlereagh and Metternich for Italy. Of that Viceroy's rule in India at the end of his strange life, as of Bentinck's administration of Sicily, and military campaigns in Spain, Lucca, and elsewhere, we have full accounts. Of the most important period of his political activity, namely, between his departure from Sicily and the return from Elba, we know next to nothing except mere external facts. A dispatch from Castlereagh to Bentinck asking him to explain his policy of the winter of 1814-15 was written for Parliament, and Bentinck's public answer was doubtless the subject of other correspondence between these statesmen, not given in either the State Papers or the Castlereagh Memoirs, and not in the Record Office. Bentinck's so-called private letter of January 15th, 1815, was no more personal than the dispatch. Is it, indeed, the case, as stated by Sir Alexander Arbuthnot in his sketch of Bentinck's life that the collected papers of that statesman have "disappeared"—so far as 1815 is concerned?

The second volume of the work of Commandant Weil, of which the most important passages are not by any means all anticipated by his Turin pamphlet, is published, as was the first, by Albert Fontemoing of Paris. We heartily congratulate him on a considerable achievement, and have heard with satisfaction that important papers in Rome and Naples have now been placed at his command. This learned and painstaking author does not attempt to write history in the grand manner. He knows the importance of the documents sufficiently to print the right ones, and generally leaves them to answer for themselves. In matters so full of doubt we believe this to be at present the best method, even though it should lead to others coming later to reap the fruit of his labours in material reward.

The book of secrets concerning the present time, bracketed by us with Commandant Weil's dealing with a date earlier by ninety years, suffers from a bad title, De la Paix de Francfort à la Conférence d'Algésiras. M. Mévil defends, with information evidently official and generally correct, the policy of M. Delcassé against both the policy and the history of M. Hanotaux. The matters dealt with are of far greater interest to ourselves than would be gathered from the title-page. The volume constitutes an indictment of recent German policy, and its author explains the work of M. Delcassé at the French Foreign Office as that of a plain honest man, thwarting a resuscitation of the ways of Metternich by Bismarck and Count Bülow. Next to the German, M. Rouvier is "the enemy." With that French Minister, thrust into the first place on account of his supposed mastery of finance, we are not concerned. It is the incidental allusions to British policy that are important, if true, and are beyond all doubt new to most men. In the main we are inclined to trust this exponent of the Delcassé entente. Parting company with most journalists of all countries, he accepts the view constantly maintained in our columns as the only sound opinion upon known facts, namely, that Germany has never seriously intended war. Why should she, if by prudent violence she wins on each occasion at a cheaper price? The moments have been so well chosen that there was not even risk.

Mr. Lee, M.P., will be astonished to find that one of the most important events in modern history is hung upon his speech of the 2nd (called "the 3rd") of February, 1905, at Eastleigh. M. Mévil suggests that our friends of the French Government of the time thought it imprudent for a member of the Board of Admiralty to state that we were watching the North Sea with a fleet "redistributed" to face a danger on that side, and to suggest that we should "strike first, before the other side had time to read that war had been declared." It was the opinion of the French Government that the announcement of the German Admiralty, on the 15th of February, of a rapid increase of the German fleet was a direct consequence of the speech of Mr. Lee. The development of Wilhelmshaven is dated by M. Mévil from three days later (February 18th), and the sudden action of Germany in Morocco had been taken on the 11th, while the German Emperor's intended journey to Morocco became public on the 4th of March. The promise of England to see France through her trouble is given with some reserve, but always with the profound belief that there was no risk of war and no need why France should have dismissed M. Delcassé, inasmuch as Germany was determined not to fight, and her Kaiser a great politician, but a "hesitating, sometimes timid" warrior.

Among the secondary points made clear by M. Mévil is the German, rather than Italian, origin of the intervention of Austria at the Conclave against "the candidature of Cardinal Rampolla, whose Francophile opinions were notorious." It now appears that Austria had given France a formal assurance that she would not oppose the Cardinal's election, and the intervention of Austria "on the request of the Government at Berlin" becomes "a new proof of German perfidy." Another important matter dealt with concerns the explanation of the policies of the French ambassador at Rome, and of the Quirinal.

There is only one other point we need pick out for notice: the assurance twice given by the Emperor of Russia to France that "in no circumstances would Russia declare war upon Japan." First offered in September, 1901, to M. Loubet at Compiègne, this pledge was renewed after the French agents in Japan had pointed out the danger of delay in the Russian reply to the statement of the Japanese terms leading to violent action by Japan. The explanation of the facts which concern the Emperor of Russia is to be found in the volumes of General Kuropatkin, and was named in our review.

The weak point in M. Mévil's defence of M. Delcassé is exposed by passages intended to show that this statesman would have prevented the creation of "German hegemony in Europe." There is a good deal to say for the opposite opinion widely entertained in France, that the action of the Foreign Offices of France and Great Britain, based as it was on the weight of Russia in Europe, was certain to break down on a revelation of Russia's weakness. The articles in a French provincial newspaper of high authority in which the Delcassé policy was defended at the time are attributed by M. Mévil to the pen of the present Prime Minister of France, M. Clemenceau. Our criticism of the policy does not affect the evidence given by the author of a diplomacy at Berlin as tortuous as that of Metternich.

CLASSICAL BOOKS AND TRANSLATIONS.

Homericæ: Emendations and Elucidations of the Odyssey. By Thomas L. Agar. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—Scholars are already familiar with many of the emendations proposed in Mr. Agar's pages, but the book contains a great many new ones, and a unity of idea is now seen to run through them. The author is able to state some general principles which he detects in the corruptions assumed. He holds, for instance, that the palæographical errors in Homer are few; that the chief sources of corruption are "the assimilation of antique forms and obsolete words to later Greek usage, and the intrusion of later metrical rules and grammatical canons, and to some extent also of new ideas of what is right and proper." The instance he gives of the last, when he assumes that κακή γλήνη meant the evil eye, is not happy; but the principle is one not to be forgotten, since it has caused, if not corruptions, at least modifications of statement even in the Synoptic Gospels. He also holds that all cases of hiatus ought to be emended; he will admit none. And then, bold man, he claims to be a conservative critic! He is bold also in the very first words of his preface, when he says that the Homeric dialect is not an artificial poetical medley, but that it "fairly represents the speech of the Achæan people." As to its essentially spoken character we think there should be no doubt: one who has heard the whole of Homer twice read through aloud will never doubt that. But we think that Mr. Agar goes too far if he means that the poems changed step by step with the speech of the Achæan people. The modern Greek ballads are proof enough that this need not be so. Many of these ballads are extremely ancient; they can always be understood, yet they often contain what is archaic in words or forms.

Mr. Agar's own style is racy and pleasant to read, not in the least like the wooden style of the commentator. Thus, although the book is not by any means light reading, the reader is always meeting with a pretty quip or turn that enlivens his task. In this Mr. Agar reminds us of Mr. Rogers and the inimitable Henry. His knowledge of the text is exhaustive, and to our mind the most valuable of his notes are those that collect and examine the uses of this or that expression. Take, for example, the discussion of the verb ῥαίω (p. 14), in the criticism of i. 403, κτῆματ' ἀπορραΐσειε. In all instances of ῥαίω and διαρραίω the sense of "break" is as clear as it is impossible in this passage, and unlikely in xvi. 428. Mr. Agar suggests ἀπορρήσειε, which would later be pronounced ἀπουρήσειε. He traces other parts of the verb under various disguises, and certainly makes out a good case for it in i. 403, even if we attach less weight than he does to a supposed sense of delicacy, the audience being assumed to be offended by association with οὐρεῖν. We do not think the offence likely to have been so great as he does: it is clear that in these matters the ancients were less prudish than we are. On the base of a marble pillar in the agora of Ephesus is carved, in fine large letters, ἐνθάδε μηδεὶς οὐρεῖτω· εἰ δὲ μὴ, αὐτὸν αἰτιάσεται, where the real delicacy is shown in the threat, the most delicate and gentlemanly of threats, so different from "Eine Mark Strafe" for walking on the grass at Dresden. Another instance in which Mr. Agar's thorough method throws light on forms is the discussion of λούω, earlier λόφω, Lat. lavo (iv. 252, vi. 210). In the aorist it occurs at least 39 times in the active, and 16 in the middle; of these only three do not admit of λοε- for λου-, and these three may be emended with more or less of ingenuity. The later form must have gradually ousted the earlier when the earlier ceased to be spoken; the wonder is that it did so little damage. Take again ἀλέξω (xvii. 364) ἄνωγεν (xx. 139), and many others: whatever one may think of the writer's theories, much may be learnt from such discussions as these.

We cannot consider the question of the hiatus as settled by this book; too many alterations are made necessary by the denial of hiatus licitus to render it likely that scholars will at once renounce the traditional licence. Time is necessary, that we may ponder the evidence at large, and accept or reject according as reason leads us. But no one can fail to be glad that the question has been raised, and in so confident a tone. Mr. Agar is convinced: many scholars would be glad to be convinced also.

The consideration of other points must be left to journals specially devoted to classical scholarship: these points being so many that it would be out of place to go into detail here. Each must be weighed and criticized by itself; but it must be admitted that the cumulative impression of the book is strong. Mr. Agar has brought together a body of evidence which must advance the knowledge of Homer, and we should not be at all surprised to see opinion coming round to his side.

Herodoti Historiæ. Recognovit brevique adnotatione critica instruxit Carolus Hude, Ph.D. Scriptorum Classicorum Bibliotheca

Oxonienis. 2 vols. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—A new text of Herodotus has been much wanted, and this, which is cheap, handy, well printed, and the work of a competent scholar, is as good as could be wished on conservative lines. Mr. Hude has been precluded by the rules of the series from any reconstruction of the traditional text; his business has been to restore the tradition as nearly as possible to the earliest stage that is testified by the MSS. He has therefore not altered it consistently in correspondence with inscriptions, although he has done something in this direction. We do not know how far Herodotus followed a spoken dialect, and how far his style was artificial: this question meets us with all the Greek literary dialects except the choicest Attic, in which the artificial or bookish element was very small, if indeed there were any. Herodotus approaches more closely to the style of the Ionic poets than to any dialect known from inscriptions; and it is fair to assume that he did not write exactly as he spoke, as far as the forms of accident were concerned. His literary style is another thing; that echoes the living voice in every phrase, and is the most perfect example of the Greek story-teller. But the manuscript tradition leaves many points uncertain: one is the ending of the genitive plural of feminine participles, pronouns, and the like; another the decision between εο and ευ. Spellings like δν' δν probably do not denote a difference of pronunciation from the Attic δφ' δν, but are only a fashion of writing; and perhaps the same may be said of εο-ευ.

The critical notes contain "nearly all" (pæne omnes) the variations of A B R, with a selection of the others. It is obvious that there must be selection in such a book, whilst it is equally obvious that nothing less than a complete collation will do for the critic who has to construct a text. Mr. Hude has examined most of the MSS. himself, and doubtless has his collations. Some readings of C hitherto unknown have been printed for the later books. The spelling has been improved in some instances, as μεικτοί for μικτοί, against the MSS. Other alterations are such forms as τρηχέαν for τρηχέην, ἀνδρηώτερον for ἀνδρείότερον, ἀποθανεῖν for ἀποθανεῖν, θωμάζω for θουμάζω, διδούσι for διδόασι, and χρᾶσθαι for χρέσθαι. All these and many others are against the authority of all the chief MSS., but the editor does not indicate where the forms are given, if anywhere. We do not know what to make of ἀμαθέα (i. 33).

Cæsar's Commentaries on the Gallic War. Translated by T. Rice Holmes. (Macmillan & Co.)—The volume before us is a kind of companion volume to the translator's 'Cæsar's Conquest of Gaul' and 'Ancient Britain and the Invasions of Julius Cæsar'; the three volumes mutually supplement one another, and it is frankly and naturally assumed that the reader of the translation possesses the other two. We have tested the translation thoroughly, and find it adequate in every sense of the word. It is good reading, clear, direct, terse, as we should expect a version of Cæsar's vigorous original to be. We agree with the translator that "it is a mistake to try to modernize the antique by translating words denoting concepts that are no longer real by familiar terms that are not equivalent." Who would not admit that, in the reverse process of putting modern concepts into Latin prose, it is a mistake to translate such concepts by familiar Latin phrases that are not really equivalent? At the end of his preface Dr. Rice Holmes justly pleads once more for the adoption of the 'Commentaries'—Gallic, or Civil War—as a set book for candidates for Woolwich and Sandhurst. As his remarks have an important bearing on the present position of classical studies, we venture to quote somewhat at length:—

“Many years ago this suggestion was made on my behalf to a Royal Commission; and one of the members, a distinguished classical scholar, sarcastically asked whether a knowledge of Cæsar was likely to benefit a British officer in South Africa. But might it not be worth while to consider the opinions of Turenne, Napoleon, and Lord Wolseley? Would it not be better to read Cæsar than to read about Publius Syrus, better to study the one writer of the first rank who is a really original authority for Roman military history, and whose work boys of ordinary ability, if they are properly taught, will read with keen interest, than to be crammed with cut-and-dried criticisms of Plautus, Statius, Florus, Manilius, and the rest,—writers whom the pupil has no time to read, and of whom a lad who is going into the army can afford to remain ignorant? Since he has only time to read a little Latin, let him read the best and read it thoroughly.”

This last word “thoroughly” is a word in season. If the Public Schools are to continue to justify themselves, they must keep clearly before them in the present bewilderment of curricula the idea that examinations which penalize thoroughness ought to be forthwith reformed. One subject really apprehended, the sarcastic scholar should have been reminded, is a prolific source of inspiration and suggestion; but reading about writers and cramming up second- or third-hand criticisms is the sort of training that makes sophists and humbugs. There is no doubt that the mention of Cæsar is enough to elicit sarcasm from many a teacher in secondary schools. They have probably been badly taught, and have not found the opportunity of starting de novo with the ‘Gallic War,’ and appreciating for themselves the interest of the great general’s narrative. When a few more teachers have followed Dr. Rice Holmes’s lead and attempted to put reality into the study of the ‘Gallic War’ by means of diagrams, maps, plans of battles, photographs, travel, taking pains, and enlisting the co-operation of pupils, authorities will be more ready to encourage the thorough study of first-class work. Let any teacher who has known Cæsar only in fragments, and as a sordid drill-ground for analysis of Latin sentences, read this translation from cover to cover and confess that such a perusal is bound “to knock windows into the mind in all directions.”

To Mr. D. A. Slater belongs the honour of producing the first English translation of The Silvæ of Statius (Oxford, Clarendon Press). Why have we had to wait so long for a translator? Mr. Slater himself supplies two good reasons. Until recently the text has been perpetually changing; but now the appearance of Vollmer’s commentary (1898) and of three fresh recensions—the Teubner, the new ‘Corpus,’ and the Oxford text—marks a distinct epoch in the literary history of the volume. We may reasonably suppose that the Oxford text, which is followed in the present translation (with a few indicated divergences), is in the main the text that will serve for at least two or three generations. The other reason for the diffidence of translators is the style of Statius, which is essentially artificial: “His meaning [is] at times so hard to grasp, that it is usually difficult, and often impossible, to produce a rendering that shall be at once idiomatic and faithful to the original.” Mr. Slater is to be congratulated alike on his courage in facing the task and on his success in his undertaking. He has now done for Englishmen what French, German, and Italian scholars have done for their countrymen. In earlier days English scholars contributed not unworthily to the study of Statius. Thomas Stephens produced at Cambridge in 1651 a commentary which still has to be reckoned with alongside of Vollmer; and Markland’s work, chiefly on the text, appeared in 1728. In the pages before us are frequent quotations from the suggestive and animated study of Statius by M. Nisard. Possibly English scholars, including the younger generation at Public Schools and Universities, will now be tempted to give to Statius some of the attention he undoubtedly deserves. If only from the point of view of his metrical technique, closely modelled on that of Virgil, Statius should be read by students.

But Statius has other qualities to recommend him. He has a brilliant and finished style; he has an almost Christian piety and religious devotion, which at times shine through his pagan conventions; he has a devout enthusiasm for Virgil; he has imagination and nobility; and even M. Nisard is inclined to concede that, given liberty, he would have had genius. No doubt his limitations are obvious. As was the case with his brilliant contemporary Martial, originality was absolutely precluded by the tyranny of his time. One tires of his endless conceits and exaggerations; and the appearance of gods and goddesses on the slightest provocation is apt to jar on our nerves. Says M. Nisard justly enough: “Stace mêle des dieux à tout: il n’y a pas d’action si insignifiante, pas de personnage si petit, qui ne puisse faire sortir un dieu de l’Olympe.” The ‘Silvæ’ are professedly light, fugitive pieces: for their inspiration what need to call in the aid of Apollo, when the help of local Naiad-queens or river nymphs will amply avail? Some of them, like the short poem on sleep, are masterpieces, full of the charming thoughts and words with which the poet has skill to dress out even a commonplace theme. His muse is descriptive, pure, refined. And if these things are not ample compensation for the frigid mythology imposed upon Statius by the literary conventions of his age, we have his style, which is the style of a master, able to wield the metre of Virgil with a vigour and tunefulness second only to those of Virgil himself. The ‘Silvæ’ are the characteristic work of Statius. Mr. Slater quotes a whole-hearted appreciation of them by Politian in the fifteenth century, and ably rebukes Prof. Tyrrell for writing contemptuously and casually on the subject.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

We have received from Messrs. Blackwood a readable and pleasant volume entitled Some Memories of my Spare Time, by Sir Henry Brackenbury, the well-known general and writer. It appears that it was in 1904 that he began to set down his recollections, entertaining chapters from which have appeared in Blackwood’s and perhaps elsewhere. There is an account of Sir Henry’s contributions to The Athenæum and of a rule as to inserting “General” or “Mr.” as the case might be, before the names of living men, resented by our author, who attributes to Norman Maccoll what was more probably a printers’ practice to which editors do well on the whole to yield. It is honourable to a writer who thought “the rhythm of all” his “sentences destroyed” that the correspondence between him and the “new editor, a very young man”—in 1870—was courteous to the last. A sweet courtesy, indeed, runs through the book, and forms one of its chief attractions. There are many literary allusions in it, as, for example, those to Col. Henderson containing an extract from a letter on military books in which it is explained by Henderson that soldiers with a turn for writing history do not receive much encouragement from the military or general public. “The volunteers, however, are noble creatures: they actually buy military books, and spend their money freely in educating themselves.” Sir Henry Brackenbury shows his sympathy with this doctrine, and pays tribute to the abilities of his brother General Charles Brackenbury, who was perhaps the favourite among military writers with the amateur soldiers, if not with all the real ones. The account of the work of Sir Henry Brackenbury in France during the war is familiar to us; but his chapter on adventures during the Commune of Paris is less well known. We doubt whether it is the case that “the one and only offensive effort by the Communists had been made on Sunday, April 2nd.” There was fighting on April 3rd and April 4th between Clamart station and Meudon heights, where the operations of the Paris troops involved an attempt to storm the heights and march upon Versailles more strictly “offensive” in form than the attempted coup de main of the 2nd.

General Brackenbury mentions the presentation to him in 1872, with a dedication in the hand of Napoleon III., of a pamphlet published under the name “Comte de la Chapelle.” This curious tract was written by the Emperor himself, and constitutes the heaviest charge against him for neglect to inform himself before the war of the real facts as they became known to him too late. Sir Henry Brackenbury describes a book which he wrote during the war, and refrained from publishing on account of Bazaine being put on his trial. The whereabouts of the few copies spared when the volume was suppressed may set book-hunters searching for a rare treasure. Nothing could be more honourable than the manner in which the author paid his money to avoid interference with the fate of a foreign general whose guilt he had established by conclusive proof.

The distinguished French Senator Richard Waddington is well remembered as an officer in our Royal Horse Artillery. It is a less well-known fact that at the worst moment of the war M. Waddington (now dealing with the French army for the Senate in reports of the highest value) raised a corps of artillery, with which he served himself in a campaign in the North of France.

Among incidental matters the War Office nickname of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman—“Gallio”—is explained; and a difficulty regarding the Geneva Convention, sometimes raised in the columns of The Athenæum, is illustrated by Sir Henry Brackenbury’s refusal to place English stores under the control of the Prussian Knights of St. John. It is shown that their stores were sometimes used by “Prussian troops who were neither sick nor wounded.” The facts, however, bear a wider application than that here given. All hospital comforts marked with the Geneva Cross, and treated as neutral under the Convention, are liable at times to be seized for non-neutral use; and the provisions of the Convention can be evaded, without obvious violation, by a hint that the stores may be looted by the men.

BARON PIERRE DE COUBERTIN publishes under the title Pages d’Histoire contemporaine, through MM. Plon-Nourrit, a reprint of his short articles from the Figaro on foreign affairs. The author is courageous in leaving them as they stand, especially in cases where the humiliation of Russia in the unexpected war against Japan, and the dismissal of M. Delcassé and final triumph of the policy of the Central Powers, have vitiated prophecies first printed before these events occurred. Nevertheless, while it is easy to point out contradictions, we cannot but read these careful studies with admiration for the largeness of view and the eloquence with which M. de Coubertin champions good causes, some of them not popular in his country. The finest passages are, perhaps, those which deal with the hopes of the Greeks, shared by this French admirer of the Hellenic spirit—to him the same now as it was in the Greece of history. The pleasantest of M. de Coubertin's short chapters are those in which he triumphs over the prophets of the past who foretold the death of Great Britain. Our author quotes Mirabeau as having in the eighteenth century laughed at the forerunners of these prophets, without preventing constant repetition in France and elsewhere of their wishes, hopes, or fears. The article on the entente cordiale, while it recites many early ententes, denies alliances in terms far too strong. That they have existed, the secret treaty of January, 1815, and the Crimean War are enough to prove; and a suggestion that they have not been "thought of" leads us to recall Shakespeare in 'Henry V.'; Henry VIII. on two memorable occasions; and Pitt and Grenville in 1800.

"The Court of St. James" is a correct expression. Is our accomplished author right in his use of a Continental newspaper form—"the Cabinet of St. James"?

ONE of the nine stories in Indian Dust, by Otto Rothfeld (Alden & Co.)—which also contains a poem, a sketch, and an essay on Laurence Hope—is sufficiently strange and thrilling to be remembered longer than many charming novels of everyday life. We refer to 'On thy Head,' a story illustrative of the prestige attaching to the hereditary bards of Rajput chiefs. It relates how a headless boy, whose decapitation had been ordered by the Mogul Emperor to test the truth of an incredible report of the physical power of dead Rajputs, slew one Mohammedan noble after another, and was only prevented from slaying the Emperor by a bard's threat of suicide, which in essence, was a threat of damnation to the boy's soul. Two other stories deal effectively with the native usurer, and another ('Behind the Pardah') shows that, even under the shadow of Hinduism, a wife may murder her spouse. The essay on Laurence Hope includes the absurd claim that she gave "artistic expression" in English literature for "the first time" to the life of the East.

MANY admirers of Mr. Halliwell Sutcliffe's highwayman, Willowdene Will (Fisher Unwin) will welcome the inclusion of the book in "The Adelphi Library," this constituting the third edition.

De Quincey's Literary Criticism (Henry Frowde) is a useful compilation. The selections are fairly representative, including two complete essays—'Pope' and 'On the Knocking at the Gate'—and a third—'Rhetoric'—slightly condensed towards the beginning. Something might, however, have been given from the criticism on Coleridge, of which, when all errors and wild conjectures have been eliminated, there remains a residue both sound and astute. Room could have been made for this by the compression of Mr. Darbishire's Introduction (36 pp.) On the contrary, Prof. Raleigh's Prolegomena (14 pp.) to 'The Heroine' are so good that one is led to wish them half as long again, or even twice as long, as they are.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have joined the pioneers who publish novels in cloth at sevenpence. The little books they send us are attractively produced, and should have a wide success in view of the excellent quality of the writers represented. Diana Tempest has, we believe, rapidly gone out of print in more than one previous form: The Forest Lovers, The First Violin, Misunderstood, and The Choir Invisible have all long since attained the happy position of favourite books. The upper circles of New York and the lower circles of London are vividly depicted in Mrs. Wharton's The House of Mirth and Mr. Paterson's John Glynn.

Burdett's Hospitals and Charities, 1909 (Scientific Press), is a model book of reference which we are always glad to have. The statistical matter is very useful, and has been compiled with great care.

GEORGE MEREDITH.

GEORGE MEREDITH stands out in literature as a creator of characters complex, original, and fascinating, and as the inventor and vivifier of a new style. Novelist, poet, and philosopher, he combined the first and last characters as few have done; he accomplished miracles of expression and metrical harmony, yet he was not only a lord, but also a tyrant, over language. He was frequently compared with Browning, but the validity of the comparison rests mainly upon the abstruseness resulting from their complexity of style. Browning excelled in criminal portraiture, complex or simple, and had the curiosity which lingers musingly over the records of human error. Meredith was the pathologist, not of crime, but of sex in its modern evolutions, of half-meanings, of unspoken hints which say so much more than directness. Browning is a great actor whose real self and personal message elude us, and are revealed rather by instinct than science to the multitude of Christians and Theists who nourish themselves on his hopefulness and moral courage. Meredith, however, never forgets that he is personally humane and sensitive. He is not an actor, but deliberately and ostensibly an author, with a parental feeling for his best characters which impels him to surround them with the creatures and comforts of Victorian civilization. His congregation contains no memorable type of villainy. He finds inexhaustible amusement and instruction for thoughtful readers in the mental processes of egoists and sentimentalists, touching indeed, in the latter respect, with an unerring hand on one of the growing weaknesses of the English of to-day. In his mature work, e.g., 'Diana of the Crossways' and 'One of our Conquerors,' he touches physical pain with extraordinary delicacy and tenderness. It is noteworthy that in the last revision of 'The Ordeal of Richard Feverel' some chivalrous feeling for suffering induced him to excise the humorous passage in which the dyspepsy fancied that he ought to live with the "bulbous part" downwards, like a crocus. Physical malady, and even death, however, are relatively unimportant in Meredith's novels. His subject is the soul's encounter with ideas; he dramatizes psychic friction. His power and pen are at their greatest in visualizing and presenting the moments, "sure tho' seldom," when "the spirit's true endowments" are revealed, and "this or that poor impulse" seems the great thing in a life.

His heroines, like those of Shakespeare, transcend their age in bravery and wit, and a resoluteness worthy of their powers. They have the fine courage of Rosalind, not the tepid weakness of Early Victorian Amys. They are justly famous, and are to be sought not only in his novels, but also in the rapture of 'Love in the Valley' and the piteous 'Modern Love.' By mere music and association the first of his memorable sequence of heroines becomes a visible personality:—

Heartless she is as the shadow in the meadows
Flying to the hills on a blue and breezy noon.
No, she is athirst and drinking up her wonder:
Earth to her is young as the slip of the new moon.
Deals she an unkindness, 'tis but her rapid measure,
Even as in a dance; and her smile can heal no less:
Like the swinging May-cloud that pelts the flowers with hailstones
Off a sunny border, she was made to bruise and bless.

But it is by their intellects that Meredith's women impress us. They include women whose faculties are not dulled by their prepossessions, and who can recognize the face of an enemy, even if it is also the face of an accepted lover. They may be far from the empyrean, but they are too near the sun to be caged by an abhorrent promise or shackled to their foe by a ring. Their sensations take the place of polemics, and one forgets all that they felt before their release. But one remembers that they help to populate several of their creator's works, and one perceives a philosophical purpose in the multiplication of shadows and portents of "the marriage tomb." And one does not forget two utterances of tragic women out of the gloom with which Meredith surrounds a marriage prolonged by bigotry, and a marriage effected by the passion for respectability. One is the voice of dying Mrs. Burman, terminating the hollow civilities of her last interview with her husband and his mistress with the words, "Victor, Natalia, we will pray." The other is the voice of Dahlia Fleming pricking the heart of her scrupulous sister with the questions, "You are not deceitful?... You are not inhuman?... Oh! what am I tied to? It's on me tight like teeth."

No man has drawn women with more appreciation of that charm which seems to escape the formalizing influence of reflection. Hence his female domestics are delightful. And for those of his own class he has the eye which observes them in moments of beauty when they are as natural as flowers, yet full of the subtlety which is the penalty of human intellect. Witness these passages:

"Her features had the soft irregularities which run to rarities of beauty as the ripple rocks the light; mouth, eyes, brows, nostrils and bloomy cheeks played into one another liquidly; thought flew, tongue followed, and the flash of meaning quivered over them like night-lightning" [of Renée in 'Beauchamp's Career'].

"She smiled for answer. That smile was not the common smile; it was one of an eager exultingness, producing as he gazed the twitch of an inquisitive reflection of it on his lips..... That is the very heart's language; the years are in a look, as mount and vale of the dark land spring up in lightning" [of Chloe].

Meredith's belief in laughter, the one element usually lacking in the modern philosopher, is apostolic in its solemnity. "The laughter of reason refreshed is floriferous like the magical great gale of the shifty Spring deciding for Summer," he says in 'The Egoist.' In that symbolic fantasy 'The Shaving of Shagpat' laughter is the prescription for disenchanting men who have been turned into birds. And in his vision of Demeter remitting the curse which sterilizes the earth and starves its tenantry he relates that

She laughed: since our first harvesting heard none
Like thunder of the song of heart: her face,
The dreadful darkness, shook to mounted sun,
And peal on peal across the hills held chase.
She laughed herself to water; laughed to fire;
Laughed the torrential laugh of dam and sire
Full of the marrowy race.
Her laughter, Gods! was flesh on skeleton.

The magnificence of a god's sense of humour is hardly imitable, but Meredith shows his inspiration to come from the earth goddess, by a versatility in humour which is astonishing. In 'Evan Harrington' and 'The Shaving of Shagpat' he produced books which were organically humorous—one the burlesque of secret shame, the other the burlesque of public dignity. Despite a curious parallel in 'Nicholas Nickleby' (there are reminiscences of Dickens also in 'Harry Richmond'), nothing English exceeds in comic effect the passage in which Evans's titled sister hysterically names, one after the other, the abhorred objects which assist in the production of clothes. Shagpat "season'd by celestial hail of thwacks" till he is equal to the task of robbing Excess or Property of its illusion, Shagpat, the annihilator of snobbery, seems to offer his vanity to Heaven as a plaything for the angels. Never weary is Meredith of the irony which decrees that the impotent shall wax proud; never weary of exhibiting the coxcombry which flourishes aloft transient, mortal gifts. The noble Empedocles cannot plunge into Etna without his observing the irrelevance of heels in air. His humorous eye misses the tail of primeval man; he needs it to express the conscious rectitude of the righteous.

His philosophy is implied in his laughter. Well he knows that man is predatory as the tiger and the shrike, and in his core he feels that he belongs to the earth.

That captain of the scorned;
The coveter of life in soul and shell,
The fratricide, the thief, the infidel,
The hoofed and horned;—

He singularly doomed
To what he execrates and writhes to shun;—
When fire has passed him vapour to the sun,
And sin relumed,
Then shall the horrid pall
Be lifted, and a spirit nigh divine,
"Live in thy offspring as I live in mine,"
Will hear her call.

'Earth and Man.'

Not till the fire is dying in the grate
Look we for any kinship with the stars.

is Meredith's assertion in 'Modern Love,' for he knows that the predatory and the alimentative aspire only in beggary.

Perhaps the masterpiece which most surely and inimitably embodies Meredith's artistic ideal in fiction is 'The Adventures of Harry Richmond.' Brilliant as are the wit and analysis of 'The Egoist,' lovable as are Clara Middleton and that magical wild cherry-tree which elicits vulgarity from the wonderful Willoughby and girlish poetry from her, the comedy slides at the end into extravaganza. The fact is that, with all his subtlety, Meredith was too romantic to sacrifice his heroine, and too loyal to his conception of a good man to diminish the moral altitude of the latter for her sake. Hence he trifled with an egoist's instinct for self-preservation, and might have expiated his offence by the substitution of the indefinite for the definite article in his title. 'Harry Richmond' has, however, no fundamental weakness. Its picture of a megalomaniac of genius, pompously advertising his bastardy, at enormous expense to a family whose head regards him with the bitterest contempt, is unmatched in ironic literature. The book seems peculiarly to satisfy one's thirst for wine in romance. In the German episode, where every movement towards success on the impostor's part is a funambulatory feat, the reader seems to live among the characters and submit his morality to the tests which the Englishmen undergo.

Meredith seems, by his scope and originality, his tropical richness and his irreverence to established modes of expression, to display the power conferred by an early separation from one's native land and an early appropriation of a new linguistic idea. Richter might account for his agility in the discovery of metaphors suitable to his prose; the German language might account for his belief in the willingness of his countrymen to encounter difficulties in their mother tongue.

His mannerism is more than a mere strangeness of language which the reader has to face. It is such desperate brevity as the packing in one sentence of three metaphors which can each only be suggested by a word that makes Meredith difficult. Like Shakespeare, he is mastered by his "thick-coming fancies": they struggle for room, and lurk in corners. When the pen is in its full flow, we get a collection of similes of twenty-two lines with no full stop. The 'Essay on Comedy' speaks of "a corrective of a too-incrusted scholarly style, into which some great ones fall at times." Here Meredith was great and guilty. A student of Greek and Latin as well as German, he ventures on a larger vocabulary on the ornate side of our language, than any of his contemporaries. He speaks of "ephemerioe," of "infrigidating," of "super-terrestrializing." His fine command of the adjective has led to a reckless search after its use for paradox and surprise by his disciples. His wonderfully vivid and sensuous use of language is mainly a result of scholarship working on the quickest of wits. It is not exactly new in English. What can be more Meredithian than the description of "the sumptuous Dalila floating this way" by the greatest of our scholar poets?

A dose of philosophy in novels was, of course, a shock for the ordinary reading public, which demands, as ordinary critics do, according to the author in 'Sandra Belloni,' that a novel should "give us copious sugar and no cane." Meredith pretends in this same book to submit grudgingly to a Philosopher who peremptorily takes the pulpit, and talks of passion, and that variety of madness which is the Hippogriff:—

"And right loath am I to continue my partnership with a fellow who will not see things on the surface, and is, as a necessary consequence, blind to the fact that the public detest him. I mean, this garrulous, super-subtle, so-called Philosopher, who first set me upon the building of 'The Three Volumes,' it is true, but whose stipulation that he should occupy so large a portion of them has made them rock top-heavy, to the forfeit of their stability. He maintains that a story should not always flow, or, at least, not to a given measure. When we are knapsack on back, he says, we come to eminences where a survey of our journey past and in advance is desirable, as is a distinct pause in any business, here and there. He points proudly to the fact that our people in this comedy move themselves,—are moved from their own impulsion,—and that no arbitrary hand has posted them to bring about any event and heap the catastrophe. In vain I tell him that he is meanwhile making tatters of the puppets' golden robe—illusion: that he is sucking the blood of their warm humanity out of them. He promises that when Emilia is in Italy he will retire altogether; for there is a field of action, of battles and conspiracies, nerve and muscle, where life fights for plain issues, and he can but sum results. Let us, he entreats, be true to time and place. In our fat England, the gardener Time is playing all sorts of delicate freaks in the hues and traceries of the flower of life, and shall we not note them? If we are to understand our species, and mark the progress of civilization at all, we must. Thus the Philosopher."

With that Philosopher Meredith acknowledges himself to be in partnership, and has ever an eye to the "acute and honourable minority which consents to be thwacked with aphorisms and sentences and a fantastical delivery of the verities."

Of the modern Englishman, his faults, limitations, and largely latent virtues, there is no such picture elsewhere as Meredith gives us. The literary artist and humorist is generally on the side of the Conservatives, but Meredith is ever breaking new ground, the strongest ally of feminism before the word was respectable, the outspoken critic of sacred British institutions, of cant and humbug in the press as elsewhere. With the historic sense (which is present in every fine artist, and idealizes the past—old wines, old scholarship, graces and courtesies of a bygone day) he combines keen study of life as it is, and life as it should be here and now. But, as in Shakespeare, his ordinary creatures by virtue of their creator's transcending pen, take on wit which does not belong to them, while his professed epigrammatists adopt a language which seems deliberately to challenge the intellectual to labour.

Those who have achieved that labour know how well it was worth their while. As philosopher and novelist, poet and humorist, artist and optimist, Meredith combines a rich diversity of gifts which no rival possessor could boast among the great writers of his age.

It is chiefly in verse, in which he attempted virtuosity without constancy of inspiration, that Meredith may be fairly called obscure. Yet even in verse he was sometimes limpid and perfect. In that medium he uttered, as in his revolutionary odes, large and majestic harmonies, and compelled his reader, as in his poems of earth, to recognize in him the prophetic voice of which the very darkness is eloquent. He loved the earth, and believed that his future after death was in Demeter's hands. Therefore

Call to him, cry to him, wind and rain,
Breath of the clover, o'er him again
Pass, and tarry if he should wake;
Earth be moved for his sleeping sake.

32, Rosemont Road, Acton, W., May 24, 1909.

SOME reference has been made in the press as to the comparative scarcity of portraits of the late George Meredith. It may interest your readers if I quote from a letter he sent me twenty-three years ago on the subject. I had urged him to be photographed, and had sent him a portrait of Burne-Jones by my old friend Fredk. Hollyer, hoping it would interest him sufficiently to overcome his unwillingness to sit to the camera:—

Box Hill, March 16th, 1886.

DEAR SIR,—I return to you herewith Hollyer's photograph of Burne-Jones, which is admirable..... I will bear in mind your complimentary wish to have a copy, when the thing is done. For myself, I do not see the importance of it; and I have never shared the enthusiasm of certain acquaintances for a sight of themselves on the carte. The human waves roll like the seas, with a momentary difference in the features, and that small, and not distinctly significant. I like to see the portraits of our greatest, and of beautiful women. Not being the one or the other, I fancy it will require accident or the police to subject me to the operation.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE MEREDITH.

Fortunately something more potent than either police or accident apparently intervened, and the well-known Hollyer photograph resulted from my, I hope not too insistent, endeavours to own a portrait of our greatest writer of philosophic fiction.

FREDERICK H. EVANS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Dawson (Joseph), Job and his New Theology, 6/ net.
Hardwich (Rev. J. M.) and Costley-White (Rev. H.), Old Testament History from the Creation to the Crossing of the Red Sea, 2 vols., 2/
Henderson (Rev. H. F.), Calvin in his Letters, 1/6 net.
Isaacson (C. S.), Records of Mercy: the Mercy of God illustrated by Narratives of Divine Grace, 3/6
Kane (Rev. R.), The Sermon of the Sea, and other Studies, 5/ net. Discourses written under the influence of nature.

Place of Jesus in Modern Religion, and other Essays, by R. A. Armstrong, Brooke Herford, and others, 2/ net. Previously issued as Unitarian tracts.
 Resurrectio Christi, 3/6 net. An apology written from a new standpoint, and supported by some new evidence.
 Smith (Goldwin), No Refuge but in Truth, 2/6 net. The letters collected in this volume appeared, with others, in The New York Sun.
 Stevens (G. Barker), The Teaching of Jesus, 4/6 net.

Laws.

Cockburn (J. H.), The Law of Private Railway Sidings and Private Traders' Traffic, 7/6
 Death Duties, with Notes by W. G. Dobson, 9/
 Statutes of Practical Utility passed in 1908 (Chitty's Statutes), by W. H. Aggs, 15/

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Anderson (W. J.), The Architecture of the Renaissance in Italy, 12/6 net. With 70 collotype and other plates, and 110 illustrations in the text. Fourth Edition, revised and enlarged.
 Bode (Wilhelm) and Marks (Murray), The Italian Bronze Statuettes of the Renaissance, 2 vols., 350/ net. With plates, illustrations, and text.
 Dalton (O. M.), Catalogue of the Ivory Carvings of the Christian Era, 42/. With examples of Mohammedan art and carving in bone.
 Inns of Court, described by Cecil Headlam, painted by Gordon Home, 7/6 net. Contains 20 illustrations in colour.
 Konody (P. G.), Brockwell (M. W.), and Lippmann (F. W.), The National Gallery, Part XII., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.

Poetry and Drama.

Bradley (A. C.), Oxford Lectures on Poetry, 10/ net. Lectures delivered during the author's tenure of the Chair of Poetry at Oxford.
 Chittenden (Larry), Bermuda Verses, 6/
 Edwardes (Marian), A Pocket Lexicon and Concordance to the Temple Shakespeare, 2/6 net. Contains a glossarial index, and quotations from the chief authorities in interpretation of the more obscure passages.
 German Lyrics of To-day, 1/ net. A selection of lyrics from contemporary German poetry, done into English verse by Daisy Broicher.
 Gibb (E. J. W.), A History of Ottoman Poetry, Vol. VI., 21/ net. Contains the Turkish originals. Edited by Edward G. Browne.
 Grindrod (C. F.), Three Poems, 1/ net.
 Krehbiel (H. E.), Chapters of Opera, 14/ net. Historical and critical observations and records concerning the lyric drama in New York, with over 70 illustrations. Second Edition, revised.
 Lee (T. H.), Saint Katharine's Day, and A Spoiled Romance, 3/6. Two plays.
 Little Songs of Shade and Sunshine. By G. J., 2/6 net. Illustrated by Kwasson and Shoso.
 Moore (William), Galenstock, and other Poems, 3/6 net.
 Ram (Francis), Needy Science, 6d. A short versified appeal for the endowment of science.
 Stephen (James Kenneth), Lapsus Calami, and other Verses, 5/ net. A new edition.
 Sword and Blossom Poems from the Japanese, Vol. II., done into English Verse by Shotaro, Kimura, and Charlotte M. A. Peake, 3/6 net. Illustrated by Japanese artists.
 Thain (Leslie), Timotheus, and other Poems.
 Tudor Facsimile Texts: Heywood's John the Husband, Tyb his Wife, and Sir John the Priest, 1533; The Pardoner and the Frere, the Curate and Neybour Pratte, 1533; A Play of Love, 1534; and the Play of the Weather, 1533.
 Witherby (Gertrude H.), Phantasies, 1/ net.

Music.

Fellowship Hymn-Book, 2 vols., 2/6 net. With notes on the hymns and tunes. Designed for use by Adult Schools, Brotherhood, &c.
 Lorenz (Edmund S.), Practical Church Music, 5/ net. A discussion of purposes, methods, and plans.
 Scarlatti (Alessandro), Parts VI. and VII., 5/ net. Edited by J. S. Shedlock.

Bibliography.

Green (J. A.), Thomas De Quincey, 2/. A bibliography based upon the De Quincey collection in the Moss Side Library.
 Ricci (Seymour de), A Census of Caxtons.

Philosophy.

Jones (H.), Idealism as a Practical Creed, 6/ net. Lectures on philosophy and modern life delivered before the University of Sydney.
 McCabe (Joseph), Modern Rationalism, 1/ net. A sketch of the progress of the Rationalistic spirit in the nineteenth century. Revised Edition.

Political Economy.

Day (Russell), Co-Partnership, 6d. A paper read before the Chartered Institute of Secretaries on April 21.
 Gibson (A. H.), Human Economics: Books I. and II. Natural Economy and Cosmopolitan Economy, 10/6 net. The first portion of this book, Natural Economy, was published nine years ago, when the claims of his profession left the author little chance to complete the second.
 Seager (H. Rogers), Economics, 6/6 net. Briefer course based on the author's larger introduction to the subject.

History and Biography.

Annual Register for 1908, 18/
 Arthur (Capt. Sir George), The Story of the Household Cavalry, 2 vols., 73/6 net.
 D'Auvergne (Edmund B.), Lola Montez, 12/6 net. An adventuress of the forties, with 7 illustrations.
 Gonnard (Philippe), The Exile of St. Helena, 10/ net. Deals with the last phase of Napoleon in fact and fiction, with illustrations.
 Harper (G. McLean), Charles-Augustin Sainte-Beuve, 6/ net. In the French Men of Letters.

"Mannor and Court Baron" (Harleian MS. 6714). Edited by Nathaniel J. Hone, with preface by J. Samuel Green. One of the Manorial Society's Publications.
 Records of Elgin, 1234-1800, Vol. II. Compiled by William Cramond, and edited by Rev. Stephen Ree.
 Robinson (J. H.) and Beard (C. A.), Readings in Modern European History, Vol. II., 6/6. A collection of extracts chosen with the purpose of illustrating some of the chief phases of the development of Europe during the last two hundred years.
 Selfe (Lieut.-Col. Sydney), Notes on the Characters and Incidents depicted by Tom Hughes in 'Tom Brown's School-days,' 1/
 Thursfield (J. R.), Nelson, and other Naval Studies, 12/ net. All these essays except one have appeared during the last few years in serial publications.
 Youvatshev (I. P.), The Russian Bastille; or, The Schlus-selburg Fortress, 7/6 net. Translated by Dr. A. S. Rappoport, with 16 illustrations.

Geography and Travel.

Francis (A.), Americans, 6/ net. The earlier chapters of this book were written in America, the later in England.
 Garnett (Lucy M. J.), The Turkish People, 10/6 net. Describes their social and domestic life, religious beliefs and institutions, with 21 illustrations.
 Ordnance Survey: Sheet 16, Shrewsbury, 2/ net. With layers.
 Rawnsley (Rev. H. D.), Round the Lake Country, 5/ net. With 8 illustrations.
 Richings (Emily), Through the Malay Archipelago, 6/
 Stokes (A. G. Folliott), From Land's End to the Lizard, 1/ net. An account of the cliffs, coves, moorland, prehistoric monuments, and some of the birds and flowers, with map and a short glossary of Cornish words. Illustrated by J. C. Douglas, Alex. Begbie, and E. Lane.
 Tibbits (Mrs. Walter), The Voice of the Orient, 3/6 net. Studies in Indian life.

Sports and Pastimes.

Cook (T. A.), The Fourth Olympiad, 6/ net. The official report of last year's Olympic Games.
 Hunt's Universal Yacht List, 1909, 6/
 Tennant (Eleanor A.), Bridge Up-to-Date, including Auction Bridge and the Rules and Laws of the Game, 1/

Education.

Graham (J.), The Education (Scotland) Act, 1908, 7/6 net.

Philology.

Theophrasti Characteres, 3/. Edited by H. Diels. One of the Scriptorum Classicorum Bibliotheca Oxoniensis.
 Zachrisson (R. E.), A Contribution to the Study of Anglo-Norman Influence on English Place-Names. The author's object is to elucidate some questions concerning the influence with French, or rather Anglo-Norman, has exercised on English place-names.

School-Books.

Jessop (C. M.) and Havelock (T. H.), Elementary Mechanics, 4/6
 Lester (E. C.) and Tordoff (B.), A Public School Chemistry for Beginners, 3/6
 Stewart (R. W.), An Elementary Text-Book of Physics; Part II. Sound, 2/6 net.

Science.

Balfour (Andrew), Third Report of the Wellcome Research Laboratories at the Gordon Memorial College, Khartoum. With illustrations, plates, and maps.
 Besant (Annie) and Leadbeater (C. W.), Occult Chemistry, 5/ net. A series of clairvoyant observations on the chemical elements.
 Brauns (Dr. R.), The Mineral Kingdom, Part VI. 2/ net. Translated, with additions, by L. J. Spencer, with illustrations. For notice of Part I. see Athen., May 1, p. 533.
 Eggeling (Otto) and Ehrenberg (F.), The Freshwater Aquarium and its Inhabitants, 8/ net. A guide for the amateur, with many illustrations from nature. In the American Nature Series.
 Finn (F.), Wild Beasts of the World, Part XV. 1/ net. With illustrations in colour by L. Sargent, C. E. Swan, and W. Austen.
 Gordon (H. Laing), The Modern Mother, 6/ net. A guide to girlhood, motherhood, and infancy.
 Hunt (Edmond J.), The Rise and Destiny of Man according to the Teachings of Science, 6d.
 Jones (Daniel), The Pronunciation of English Phonetics and Phonetic Transcriptions, 2/6 net.
 Journal of Morphology, April.
 Kaye (H. W.), The Climate of Strathpeffer, 2/6
 Lockyer (W. J. S.), A Discussion of Australian Meteorology, 5/. A study of the pressure, rainfall, and river changes, both seasonal and from year to year, and a comparison of the air-movements over Australia with those over South Africa and South America.
 Mathematical Questions and Solutions, New Series. Vol. XV., 6/6. Edited by C. I. Marks.
 Praeger (R. Lloyd), A Tourist's Flora of the West of Ireland, 3/6 net. Illustrated.
 Ram (Francis), Ether Islands, 6d. Scientific conjectures.
 Wright (H. J. and W. P.), Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them, Part XIV., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.

Fiction.

Applin (Arthur), The Stage Door, 6/. Deals with the theatre from the point of view of the playwright and theatrical manager.
 Begbie (Harold), The Cage, 6/. A mystery of birth and an ill-assorted marriage.
 Conyers (Dorothea), The Conversion of Con Cregan, and other Stories, 6/. A volume of a humorous and sporting character.
 Courlander (Alphonse), Henry in Search of a Wife, 6/. A fantasy of sentiment.
 Crawford (F. Marion), A Lady of Rome, 3/6. New Edition—Arethusa, 3/6. With illustrations by Gertrude Demain Hammond. New Edition.
 Curtis (Marguerite), Marcia, 6/. A transcript from life, dealing with the development of a dual personality.

Francis (M. E.), Galatea of the Wheatfield, 6/. An idyll of the open air, though the heroine finds her way to London and is introduced in fashionable society.
 Glyn (Elinor), Elizabeth visits America, 6/. A series of letters, with illustrations by the author.
 Goring-Thomas (A. R.), Mrs. Gramercy-Park, 6/. An account of a rich American's introduction to English society.
 Harris (J. Henry), Penelope Ann, 6/. A Cornish romance, with photographs by C. F. Grindrod.
 Hours spent in Prison, by Gorky, Andreyeff, and Korolenko, 2/ net. Sketches translated from the Russian by Marya Galinska.
 Kinross (Albert), The Love-Brokers, 6/. Based on our marriage laws and our marriage lawyers, especially the latter. Has a frontispiece by P. B. Hickling.
 Macmillan's Sevenpenny Series: Allen's Choir Invisible, Broughton's Waifs Progress, Cholmondeley's Diana Tempest, Crawford's Roman Singer, Elizabeth and her German Garden, Fothergill's First Violin, Hewlett's Forest Lovers, Montgomery's Misunderstood, Pater-son's John Glynn, and Wharton's House of Mirth. See p. 645.
 Norris (W. E.), The Perjurer, 6/. The perjurer is an altruistic half-pay colonel.
 Peple (Edward), The Spitfire, 6/. Introduces a modern Petrucchio.
 Vogol (Harry B.), Gentleman Garnet, Bushranger, 1/ net. Popular Edition, with frontispiece.—The Tragedy of a Flirtation, 6/. The tragedy ends happily for the married pair.
 Wright (Peter), A Three-Foot Stool, 6/. Experiences of ranching, with stories told over the fire, and some verses.

General Literature.

Atkinson (W. Walker), Mental Fascination, 2/6 net.—The Secret of Mental Magic, 2/6 net. A course of seven lessons.
 Burns (Dr. Dawson), Local Option, 1/. New Standard Edition.
 Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine, Vol. LXXVII., 10/6
 Day (S. J.), Fresh Fields and Legends Old and New, 5/
 Douglas (James), Adventures in London, 6/ net. Articles on the varied life of London, sport, work, the stage, politics, &c.
 Kirmess (C. H.), The Australian Crisis, 6/. Deals with the dangers of overcrowding in Asia and thin population in Australia.
 Magnus (Laurie), English Literature in the Nineteenth Century, 7/6 net. An essay in criticism.
 Masternian (C. F. G.), The Condition of England, 6/. An attempt to estimate some of the "realities" in the life of contemporary England.
 Nevinson (Henry W.), Essays in Freedom, 6/ net.
 Northamptonshire Notes and Queries, Vol. II. No. 16, New Series. An illustrated quarterly, edited by Christopher A. Markham.
 Silburn (P. A.), The Colonies and Imperial Defence, 6/
 Twain (Mark), Is Shakespeare Dead? 3/6
 Yovanovitch (Vladimir), The Near-Eastern Problem and Pan-German Peril, 6d. net.

Pamphlets.

Hardie (J. Keir), My Confession of Faith in the Labour Alliance, 1d. One of the Independent Labour Party publications.
 Independent Labour Party, Report of the Seventeenth Annual Conference, Synod Hall, Edinburgh, 3d.
 Mowbrays' Guide to Oxford, 1d. With plan and illustrations.

FOREIGN.Theology.

Egger (F.), Absolute od. relative Wahrheit der hl. Schrift? 8m.
 Mausbach (J.), Die Ethik des hl. Augustinus, 2 vols., 15m.
 Posselt (W.), Der Verfasser der Eliu-Reden, 3m. A section of the Biblische Studien.
 Schaefer (E.), Theozentrische Theologie, Part I., 4m.

Laws.

Binder (J.), Die Plebs: Studien zur röm. Rechtsgeschichte, 15m.
 Spiegel (L.), Die Verwaltungsrechtswissenschaft, 5m. 50.
 Swjatowski (W. v.), Grundbesitzwechsel in Russland (1861-1908), 3m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Chevillard (V.), Itinéraire artistique de Paris, 5fr.
 Mülinen (E. Graf von), Beiträge zur Kenntnis des Karmels. With 2 maps and 122 illustrations. Reprinted from the Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästina-Vereins.

Poetry and the Drama.

Béranger (P. J. de), Œuvres inédites, 8fr. Contains three pieces written for the theatre by Béranger as a young man.

Philosophy.

Verweyen (J.), Das Problem der Willensfreiheit in der Scholastik, 6m. 80.

History and Biography.

André (C. S.), Madame du Barry, 5fr.
 Dejean (E.), Un Prêlat indépendant au XVII. Siècle: Nicolas Pavillon, 1637-77, 7fr. 50.

Philology.

Böhtlingk (A.), Shakespeare u. unsere Klassiker: Vol. I. Lessing u. Shakespeare, 3m.
 Leskien (A.), Grammatik der altbulgarischen Sprache, 5m. The first volume of the Sammlung slavischer Lehrbücher.
 Levy (E.), Petit Dictionnaire provençal-français, 7m. 40. In the Sammlung romanischer Elementarbücher.
 Rosenmeyer (L.), Questiones Tertullianæ ad Librum adversus Praxean pertinentes, 3m. One of a series of select Dissertationes Argentoratenses.
 Thurneysen (R.), Handbuch des Alt-Irischen, 15m. Part of the Indogermanische Bibliothek.
 Westermann (D.), Handbuch der Ful-Sprache, 8m.

Science.

Schiefferdecker (P.), Muskeln u. Muskelkerne, 10m.

Fiction.

Morane (Henry), La Voix de l'Oiseau, 3fr. 50. The idea of Wagner's 'Siegfried' adapted to modern days, in the love of a young American for a singer at the Opéra.
 Nicollaud (C.), L'Expiatrice, 3fr. 50.
 Seralo (Matilde), Evviva la Vita! 4 lire. In the Biblioteca della Nuova Antologia.
 Vaudoyer (J. L.), La Bien-aimée, 3fr. 50.

General Literature.

Mézières (A.), De Tout un Peu, 3fr. 50. A collection of various articles by the veteran scholar.
 Van Dyke (H.), Le Génie de l'Amérique, 3fr. 50. Translated by E. Sainte-Marie Perrin.

* * * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

MR. BUXTON FORMAN has in hand a volume of letters of Edward John Trelawny. The unpublished material of which it mainly consists covers virtually the whole of Trelawny's long life after the period dealt with in the racy impressionistic autobiography known as 'The Adventures of a Younger Son.' Mr. Forman would be glad to hear from any of Trelawny's correspondents who have preserved his letters. If sent to "H. Buxton Forman, Esq., C.B., 46, Marlborough Hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.," all such letters will be carefully and promptly returned after being copied for use.

DR. EDWIN A. ABBOTT will publish early in June, through Messrs. A. & C. Black, a treatise entitled 'The Message of the Son of Man.' Its aim is to show that "the Son of Man" was not originally a Messianic title, but that it meant, in accordance with a development of Biblical doctrine, the man controlling the beast and drawing near to the likeness of God—a conception influencing the whole of the Gospel.

MESSRS. NISBET & Co. have arranged to include among their autumn books two volumes of special interest to those concerned with naval matters. 'Reminiscences,' by Miss Agnes Weston, of the Royal Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth, will appeal strongly to all who know the lady's admirable work among sailors; while Mr. Carlyon Bellairs, M.P., is to publish a book on 'Admiralty Policy and Naval Reform.'

THE same firm will publish the Life of the well-known Harrow master Bosworth Smith, which is being written by Lady Grogan, and a volume of 'Reminiscences' by Mr. Eugene Stock.

MR. MURRAY will shortly publish a volume of 'Letters from the Peninsula,' which were written home, during the years 1808 to 1812, by Lieut.-General Sir William Warre, the uncle of the late Head Master of Eton, who has acted as the editor.

IN connexion with the celebration of the Quatercentenary of Brasenose College, Oxford, four volumes of considerable general interest are in the press, and will be shortly published by Mr. Blackwell of Oxford. Two of these will contain monographs dealing with the site, the name and arms, the estates, benefactions, plate and pictures of the College, with a profusely illustrated architectural history of the buildings (vol. i.), and a series of studies of successive periods of the College history (vol. ii.). The other two volumes will contain an annotated Register of all members of the College from 1509 to 1909, with lists of their works, edited by the Principal. The first volume of the monographs and the first of the Register will be issued next Tuesday, when the foundation stone of the new buildings will be laid by the Visitor of the College in the presence of the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor of the University.

MR. E. H. NEW is also issuing at the same time a bird's-eye view of Brasenose as it will be when the new buildings have completed the High Street front. It is taken from the south, and is on the lines which characterize Loggan's view of 1675.

MESSRS. BOWES & BOWES of Cambridge are just issuing in pamphlet form the first-fruits of the unofficial movement for reform within the University of that town.

IN a few days Messrs. Phillimore & Co. will issue to the subscribers the first volume of Middlesex Marriage Registers, dealing with Acton and other parishes in the western part of the county, and also the first volume of Oxfordshire Marriage Registers, which begins with the important Register of Chipping Norton.

THE dinner of the eighty-second anniversary of the Printers' Corporation, held at the Hotel Cecil yesterday week, was a great success. The Prince of Wales, who was in the chair, made an interesting speech, reviewing the advance of the press; and the list of subscriptions amounted to 13,210l.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE will sell by auction, on June 7th and three following days, and June 15th and two following days, the valuable library formed during the early part of the last century by Henry B. H. Beaufoy. The collection is exceptionally rich in illuminated manuscripts, early printed books, bibliographical works, rare sets of auction catalogues, and voyages of note.

A MEMORIAL to James Clarence Mangan, erected by the National Literary Society of Ireland, was unveiled in St. Stephen's Green Park on the 22nd inst. by Dr. George Sigerson, President of the Society. The monument, the work of Mr. Oliver Sheppard, consists of a bronze bust of the poet on a white pedestal, in which is set an ideal head in white marble symbolizing the Dark Rosaleen.

WE offer our congratulations to Mr. Neil Munro on being presented with the freedom of his native burgh of Inverary. He has given us some admirable records of his own people.

THE death, at the age of seventy-three, of Prof. de Goeje, one of the greatest Orientalists of the day, is announced from Leyden. Next week we shall devote a special article to his work.

IN spite of the ridicule cleverly directed by a writer in Le Mercure de France against the Italian lady inhabiting Salonica who appeared as a "claimant" of the literary honours of Madame Marcelle Tinayre, biographical notices of the former are being published by Paris newspapers. It appears that the lady, whose name is given, is a French Huguenot by paternal descent, but Spanish and Catholic also through her father, who is in the consular service of Spain. By marriage she belongs to the royal navy of the Italian Kingdom. Salonica appears to be more excited by her supposed literary powers than by the Young Turk revolution or the presence of Abdul Hamid.

M. RENÉ DOUMIC's lectures on George Sand are now collected in a volume; but, while they are worthy of that Academician's celebrity as a critic, we fear that on this side of the Channel the dead time of literary history in the forties is unlikely to be revived, as have been the thirties by the Duchesse de Dino's pen. Political personages intriguing in high places are a greater attraction to the general public than Bohemian coteries of two or three generations ago.

'LES SEPT FEMMES DE LA BARBE-BLEUE, et autres Contes merveilleux,' by Anatole France, is announced in Paris as to appear shortly.

AT the end of June M. Raphaël Symptor will publish a book entitled 'Jeanne d'Arc n'a jamais existé,' which is said to be the result of several years of research. To argue the newly beatified heroine out of historic existence will, we fancy, be a more difficult business than the consignment of that devout and turbulent English hero, Robin Hood, to legend.

THE numerous prizes in the gift of the French Académie des Inscriptions were announced last Saturday. The Grand Prix Gobert, of the value of 10,000fr., is divided into two, M. Delachenal obtaining 9,000fr. for his 'Histoire de Charles V.,' and M. Caillet 1,000fr. for his 'Histoire de la Commune de Lyon au quinzième Siècle.' The Prix Saintour (3,000fr.) is divided into four, the chief portion going to the Abbé Roussel for his translation of the 'Râmâyâna.' The Prix Bordin (3,000fr.) is also divided among several, M. Edmond Doutté getting a third of it for his 'Magie et Religion dans l'Afrique du Nord.'

AT the monthly meeting of the Board of the Booksellers' Provident Institution held on the 20th inst. 100l. was voted for the relief of members and their widows; six new members were elected; and under the terms of the will of Mrs. F. Elizabeth Layton 46l. was ordered to be divided amongst ten applicants.

THE only Parliamentary Paper of interest to our readers this week is one which gives the Code of Regulations for Continuation Classes, Scotland (2½d.).

SCIENCE

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Mercers' Company Lectures on the Fluids of the Body. By Ernest H. Starling. (Constable & Co.)—These lectures were delivered by Prof. Starling partly at University College, London, and partly at the Belle Vue Hospital, New York. They contain many observations valuable alike to the physiologist and to the physician.

The first lecture attempts to explain the physical properties of protoplasm by the light of our present knowledge of colloidal solutions; but as the physical aspect of colloids is not yet known intimately, it is impossible to make more than the broadest generalizations about the much more complex problem of the nature of protoplasm. The original living material seems to have inhabited the sea, and J. B. Macculum in 1904 brought forward reasons for supposing that the present composition of our blood plasma is identical with that of seawater just before the Cambrian period, when animals possessing a coelom or body cavity first made their appearance. Seawater at that time must have been much less concentrated than it is at present, since the constant carrying of the saline constituents of the soil by the rivers to the sea, and the removal of water by evaporation, must have led to a steady increase in the saline concentration of ocean water. Prof. Starling points out how great a step in evolution was taken when the organism secured for a majority of its cells a medium of uniform composition by the formation of this coelom or body cavity, and the consequent enclosure within itself of a fluid which did not differ widely at first from the surrounding sea-water. The evolution of a coelom was followed by the appearance of circulating organs designed to maintain the composition of the internal medium constant at all parts of the organism under varying internal conditions.

Prof. Starling deals in his third lecture with the intake of fluids, and shows that the absorption of fluids takes place in the intestine, and not, as was held formerly, in the stomach. It is not a mere process of filtration, but is due to the special activity of the columnar cells which line the intestinal tract. These cells utilize a certain amount of the energy set free within them by the oxidation of their foodstuffs to pump water from the side lining the intestine to the deeper part which is in close relation with the tissues of the body.

Prof. Starling maintains the position, which he has long sturdily defended, that lymph is formed mechanically, and is not a secretion by cells, as is still held by many physiologists. The fourth lecture is devoted to a consideration of this question, and is especially interesting because Prof. Starling not only recapitulates his former arguments, but also gives his matured ideas upon the subject. The lecture on lymph and the exchange of fluids in the body is followed naturally by a consideration of the absorption of the interstitial fluids, and there is little difficulty in showing that the fluids can be directly re-absorbed by the blood, though they may also pass back into the circulating medium by way of the lymphatics and thoracic duct. It is satisfactory to find that some old facts stand in so iconoclastic a science as physiology, and a careful examination of the mechanism of the secretion of urine leaves the older theories almost unchanged.

The truth underlying most popular beliefs and practices is curiously revealed in regard to bleeding. Prof. Starling states, when considering the fluid balance of the body, that "we are literally correct when we speak of the rejuvenating effects of a holiday spent in the mountains. Before the application of steam and other agencies to the facilitation of methods of transit, which has occurred during the last century, this rejuvenating effect was obtained by the practice of bleeding, the beneficial results of which had been discovered empirically. The blood-letting in the spring and at the fall called into play those recuperative processes of the organism which we now seek to stimulate by a trip to Switzerland or to the Rockies. It is probable that with the recognition of the physiological effects of loss of blood the practice of occasional blood-letting may be restored to the position of honour which it held in medical practice before it had been discredited by its employment as a panacea for all forms of disorder."

The last chapter of the book is devoted to a consideration of the causation of dropsy. It was delivered as one of the Arris and Gale Lectures before the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1896. It is now republished, with the additions and alterations rendered necessary by recent work. The subject is difficult, and although the subordinate factors can be marshalled, it is not yet possible to determine the actual cause of this malady.

Behind the Veil in Birdland. By Oliver G. Pike. (Religious Tract Society.)—Twenty-four of Mr. Pike's choicest photographs go to make up a striking presentation album. The great majority of them have already appeared once, or more than once, in the humbler guise of the quarter or half-plate, but now assume more imposing proportions, with a mount to correspond. In some of these revelations of nature's secrets we again have captive kites and eagles translated by the photographer's magic to their native haunts, as well as other examples—not always successful from a pictorial point of view—of the combination printing which Mr. Pike now affects.

Mr. Pike contended in his last book that he was "careful never to alter the bird itself in the slightest," but it is clear that in the case, at least, of the chough he has departed from his rule. This freak, with its one light-coloured leg, tells its own tale when compared with the same picture as originally published. And it is all so unnecessary. No one could wish for better photographs, for instance, than those of the badger (four favoured mammals have gained admission to the birds' gallery), the raven, fulmar petrel, and Richardson's skua, and these, we believe, are all new. Mr. Paton's pen sketches serve more or less as a foil. They too have been seen before, and are scattered about the book in indiscriminate fashion. The letterpress is rather trivial, though a few interesting items may be here and there gleaned.

MR. E. THOMPSON SETON needs no recommendation as a past-master in the lore of the woods. He has proved his right to that distinction over and over again. The Biography of a Silver-Fox; or, Domino Reynard of Goldur Town (Constable & Co.), is the life-history of one of those freaks of the red-fox family to which has been given the name of "silver." It starts with the litter to which he belonged, and follows him to a triumphant and peaceful maturity. Yet he passes through terrible vicissitudes, and the last hunt makes one catch one's breath as it tells how the hounds closed on Domino, and how Hekla and he went adrift on the ice-floes of the river. It is a stirring, sympathetic narrative, and has the merit of being taken conscientiously from nature. Moreover, it is well written.

RESEARCH NOTES.

THE question of liquid crystals, which some scholars consider the greatest discovery of the nineteenth century, has been much to the fore of late. In addition to Dr. Tutton's demonstration at the recent soirée of the Royal Society, Prof. Otto Lehmann (of Karlsruhe), who has done so much important work on the subject that he may almost be called its inventor, lectured last month at the Sorbonne before a large audience, with all the magnificent resources for the exhibition of microscopic and other effects that the University of Paris could put at his disposal. His main thesis was that a crystal, instead of being, as formerly thought, a homogeneous solid bounded by straight lines, was capable of existing in a curved, soft, or even liquid form analogous to that of the cells of living organisms, while preserving its anisotropism and its general behaviour in the presence of light. That crystals can spontaneously move, grow, divide, and perhaps conjoin, has long been known, and the cause of this he attributes to what he calls the force of crystallization, which creates work at the expense of the chemical energy without loss or fall of temperature, and which seems to correspond to the muscular force of living organisms. He further showed that certain crystals possessed the property of so directing their molecules as to make them parallel to others, and this faculty he considers may be due to an action of the electrons revolving within the atom. As he expressed it, "the molecules of liquid crystals behave like astatic magnetic systems freely suspended, which, by reason of their own directive force, continually arrange themselves, even while fluid, in a crystalline network."

Not less important than this, perhaps, is the study of diastases or soluble ferments, upon which M. Gabriel Bertrand, of the Institut Pasteur, has lately addressed the Association française pour l'Avancement des Sciences. He defined diastases as peculiar reagents by means of which living beings accomplish the greater part of the chemical transformations necessary to their existence, or which they sometimes use as a means of defence. He showed how the gastric juice extracted from the stomach of a dog will dissolve or digest nitrogenous matter such as the coagulated white of an egg, while having no effect upon starchy or fatty substances. He further showed that sprouting barley, when macerated in water and filtered, will furnish a ferment which will dissolve several thousand times its own weight of starch, and can immediately after be recovered from the liquid in an entirely unaltered state, and without appreciable loss of weight; and he went on to demonstrate that the action of both these diastases was in effect the same. He then demonstrated that the gastric juice could be analyzed into a mineral acid and a precipitate, either of which was inert when used separately, but effective when mixed; and he contrasted with these soluble ferments the action of others which, instead of acting as solvents, cause precipitation, like those which coagulate milk or blood. He then referred to the less-known diastases called lipolytic, or solvents of fatty matters, and showed how the products of digestion in all the three cases mentioned, on passing into the living body, produced heat and energy by the process of oxidation. Finally, he went at some length into the similarities and differences between the action of these digestive diastases and the destructive ones, such as the poison of snakes and other venomous animals and the toxins generated by bacilli, and argued that all the chemical transformations of which the living body is the scene can be produced in the laboratory, the difference between this and the natural process being that in the first-named case the use of different reagents from those adopted by nature is imposed upon us. The whole lecture is extremely interesting as well as instructive, and deserves to be read at length. A good report appears in the Revue Scientifique for the 15th inst.

In the Comptes Rendus of the Académie des Sciences for the last week in April, M. A. Chaveau contends that he has obtained proof of the existence of pathogenic microbes which are invisible in any microscope. The inoculations of vaccine lymph in progressive dilutions show, according to him, the existence of quasi-solid elements which play the part of virulent reagents, while diffusion experiments show that no colloid has any share in the phenomenon. He therefore considers that these invisible agents of inoculation, together with a long list of similar bodies which he enumerates, should be recognized as parasitical living beings. It is a little difficult to follow his argument without diagrams or a more detailed account of his experiments than is given in his paper, and it would seem that his proof is very much a question of terms. If he only means that some bacilli or bacteria are so infinitesimally small as to escape detection in the microscope, a good many people will be inclined to agree with him.

In connexion with the diastases mentioned above, the action of the special Bulgarian ferment for milk introduced by M. Élie Metchnikoff has been examined with much care by MM. Gabriel Bertrand and Duchacek, and the result of their inquiry is given at considerable length in the Comptes Rendus of the 17th inst. They think that the first action of the beneficent microbe contained is probably the same as that of certain chemical reagents, such as the alkalis; that is to say, that the fermentable sugars are transformed by it into a mixture of exactly equal parts of right-handed and left-handed acid. But while, they go on to say, the mixture settles down in an artificial medium, a part of the left-handed acid, or perhaps of both acids, but with the left-handed preponderating, disappears in the natural medium. The microbe, they think, perhaps finds in the extract of the germ of peptonized malt a substance more nutritive than in the lactic acid; and after having profited by the energy liberated in the decomposition of the sugar, it makes use of this substance in preference to the organic acid. As to the saccharo-hydrolytic diastases, the authors add that the Bulgarian ferment produces neither sucrase nor maltase, so that it can attack neither saccharose or cane-sugar, nor maltose (malt-sugar), while it only produces lactose, or milk-sugar, in the endocellular form. On this subject, too, may be noticed the communication, in the same number of the Comptes Rendus, of M. H. Agulhon, who gives proof that the supposed paralyzing or inhibitory effect of boric acid upon the diastases is, except in one case named, very small, and that upon most of them, especially upon sucrase, it has rather a stimulating effect than otherwise. By these facts he thinks that the slightness, which he assumes to be well-known, of the antiseptic effect of boric acid, is explained.

In the Philosophical Magazine for this month Prof. Rutherford gives an account of his experiments in the condensation of radium emanation, which seem to have been carried out contemporaneously with, but independently of, Sir William Ramsay's investigation summarized in these Notes on April 24th. The phenomena which he describes in his paper are in most points on all fours with those observed by Sir William Ramsay. He remarks on the difficulty of judging when the emanation is in the liquid and when in the solid state, and declares that its volume, when cooled, as in the experiment, in liquid air, is only one five-hundredth of that which it occupies in its gaseous form at normal pressure and temperature. Finally, he puts the atomic weight of the emanation (which, in agreement with Sir William Ramsay, he considers a monoatomic gas) at 222, and its density when liquid at not less than 5. M. Debierne also deals with the condensation of the same emanation in the Comptes Rendus of the 10th inst. The non-condensable portion of the gas, he asserts, gives the spectrum of pure helium; but he has never yet been able to note in it that of neon. He also announces a new phenomenon in the fact that the small capillary tubes used in the condensation experiment give, when filled with emanation at atmospheric pressure, a succession of small sparks at the rate of about one per minute, brilliant enough to be easily visible in daylight. He attributes this to the accumulation, in the glass walls of the tube, of the charges of the Alpha and Beta rays.

Another source of radiation is announced by Herr W. Knoche in the April number of the Physikalische Zeitschrift. Some experiments lately made by him on board the SS. Thuringia in mid-Atlantic, the Straits of Magellan, and Corral Bay, lead him to conclude that the conductivity of the air is always increased by its contact with seawater. From this he gathers that the ocean, or at least that part of it in which his observations were taken, always contains a trace of highly radio-active emanation, and he attributes this to the presence of gases from submarine or other volcanoes. The argument would be more convincing did he offer any distinct proof that any of the highly radio-active minerals occur frequently in the neighbourhood of volcanoes, or are otherwise the product of volcanic action. With this announcement may perhaps be coupled the experiments described by M. Louis Frischauer in the Comptes Rendus of the 10th inst., wherein he finds that radium emanation appears to promote the formation of crystals in liquid sulphur.

In the last-mentioned Comptes Rendus, M. de Broglie publishes a photograph of the Brownian movements in illuminating gas, which he succeeded in taking with a microscope provided with a camera. By the use of a lateral beam of light from an arc lamp, he managed to obtain on the plate an image magnified to about forty diameters. The enlarged print of this given in his paper looks rather like a photograph of cirrus clouds, but the author says that the path of each of the particles taking part in the Brownian movement is in effect shown by a short wavy line which becomes more distinct as the movement slackens or changes direction. F. L.

SOCIETIES.

ROYAL ASTRONOMICAL.—May 14.—Sir David Gill, President, in the chair.—Prof. A. Fowler read a paper on a spectroscopic comparison of α Ceti with titanium oxide. The spectrum of α Ceti was taken by Mr. Slipher at the Lowell Observatory, and that of titanium oxide at South Kensington. It was shown that the two spectra were for the most part identical, and the comparison makes a contribution to the analysis of spectra of the third type, proving the titanium-oxide origin of numerous bands in the red end of the spectrum, the details of which had not been recorded by Vogel and Dunér.—

Mr. A. R. Hinks read a paper on the solar parallax as derived from photographic observations of Eros. The paper formed No. 7 of his series of solar-parallax papers, and gave the general solution from the photographic right ascensions of the planet during the opposition of 1900. The resulting value of the solar parallax was $8''.807$.—Sir David Gill gave a brief account of the proceedings at the meetings of the Astrophotographic Congress at Paris, from which he had recently returned. The decisions of the Congress were unanimous, and important matters were arranged, in reference to a scale of photographic magnitudes, the selection of a fresh system of fundamental stars, and other subjects. It was decided that Eros should be observed as continuously as possible till 1930.—Mr. W. E. Cooke, Director of the Perth Observatory, Western Australia, showed an easily constructed form of sundial which he had introduced among the farmers and planters. There was an adjustment to reduce local to standard time, and a further adjustment for the equation of time, so that the time could be read off at once on the dial to within half a minute or so, without the use of tables.—M. Deslandres, of the Meudon Observatory, gave an account of his researches on the solar atmosphere, and showed a series of his spectrograms of the sun's surface.

GEOLOGICAL.—May 12.—Prof. W. J. Sollas, President, and afterwards Dr. J. J. H. Teall, V.P., in the chair.—Messrs. G. A. Burton, J. J. Burton, R. Cardiff, G. MacDonald Davies, S. Fox, Macmillan Heron, J. Martin, and Carl R. Sticht, were elected Fellows; Dr. Feodor Cernysev (St. Petersburg), and Prof. René Zeiller (Paris), were elected Foreign Members; and Dr. Daniel de Cortázar (Madrid), Prof. Maurice Lugeon (Lausanne), and Prof. Ralph S. Tarr (Ithaca, New York), were elected Foreign Correspondents.—The following communications were read: 'The Hartfell-Valentian Succession around Plympton and Pont Erwyd, North Cardiganshire,' by Mr. Owen T. Jones.—and 'The Geology of the Neighbourhood of Seaford, Sussex,' by Mr. J. Vincent Elsdon.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—May 13.—Dr. C. H. Read, President, in the chair.—Mr. Philip Norman, Treasurer, read a paper describing the later vicissitudes of the London Steelyard. He pointed out that the history of the Hanseatic merchants in London by no means ended when, on the 25th of July, 1598, they were turned out of the Steelyard by order of Queen Elizabeth, and the Lord Mayor and Customs officials took possession of it. During the next few years it was used as a storehouse for the Navy, but in 1606 King James I. gave it back to its previous owners. From that date onwards during many years attempts were made—sometimes by private individuals, sometimes on the part of the English Government—to impugn the title to the property, the Germans in their turn defending themselves with skill and vigour. They weathered the troubles of the Civil War, and their accounts show that during the Commonwealth they had dealings with Thurloe, Milton (then Latin Secretary to the Government), and other leading men. Always anxious to be on good terms with the winning side, they took part in the festivities at the Restoration. The Great Fire almost completely destroyed the buildings of the Steelyard, but, mainly through the efforts of the then house-master, Jacob Jacobsen, and his brother, they were re-erected. After this the Jacobsens were left for years in almost undisturbed management of the property. In the eighteenth century, however, serious difficulties having arisen between their nephews who succeeded them and the Hanseatic League in Germany, legal proceedings were taken in the English courts, the case being finally decided in 1748, when the Hanse towns were ordered to pay the Jacobson family 3,000*l.* in settlement of all claims. This gave the League undisputed possession, and their title was never again called in question. During the early part of last century the Steelyard was ably administered by Patrick and his son James Colquhoun. The son of the latter, Sir Patrick Colquhoun, diplomatist, author, and oarsman, was in 1840 appointed Hanse agent, to conclude commercial treaties with Turkey, Greece, and Persia. The conditions of riverside property having altogether changed through the advent and development of railways, the Steelyard estate was on April 4th, 1853, sold by the then remaining Hanse towns (namely, Lubeck, Bremen, and Hamburg) to Mr. Charles Morrison of London and Mr. John Pemberton Heywood, a banker of Liverpool, who resold it shortly afterwards. The buildings were pulled down in the autumn of 1863, and on May 11th, 1865, the fee simple of the whole estate passed into the hands of the South-Eastern Railway Company. Cannon Street Railway Station covers approximately the whole of the site.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.—May 20.—Sir Henry H. Howorth, President, in the chair.—Mr. Leopold Messenger exhibited a "second brass" coin of Vespasian of the "Judæa Capta" type, and having on the obverse the head of the Emperor with the legend IMP. CÆSAR VESPASIAN. CONS. VIII. The peculiar fabric of the coin and the legend CONS. VIII. for COS. VIII. rendered it probable that it was a Cinque-cento adaptation made in Italy.—Mr. H. Alexander Parsons described a penny of Henry I. of the beaded cross and quatrefoil type, with the legend BRVN. ON. DERBIDEI, which may be attributed to Derby. Hitherto no coins of Henry I. have been associated with that mint.

The Rev. A. W. Hands read a paper on a 'Phœnician Drachm with the Name of Iahve.' This unique coin, which is in the British Museum, and has been frequently described and discussed by numismatists and Oriental scholars, has for the obverse type a bearded helmeted head, and for the reverse a bearded divinity holding an eagle and seated in a car with a winged wheel; on the right is a human head, and above three Phœnician forms of the Hebrew letter yod, he, row, which have been read as "Iahve," i.e. Jehovah. The coins weighs 50.7 grs. Its chief interest is that we have the figure of the pagan Zeus associated with the name of the "Jehovah" of the Semites. The coin has been attributed to Sidon or Gaza—places in which there existed a strong Semite influence. The combination of the name of Jehovah and the figure of Zeus appears to have been an attempt on the part of the die-engraver to assign to the chief of the Greek gods the name of the God of the Semites. The winged chariot is not infrequently met with in Greek art, and Mr. Hands supplied an illustration from a Greek vase representing a car of precisely the same form as that on the coin, but bearing the god Triptolemus. The helmeted head on the obverse showed how entirely Greek and heathen the type of the coin was intended to be.

ZOOLOGICAL.—May 11.—Prof. E. A. Minchin, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. R. H. Burne exhibited a series of specimens, from the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, of adaptive structures for the respiration of air in some aquatic invertebrates and tropical freshwater fishes.—Mr. R. I. Pocock exhibited the skin of a monkey representing a new subspecies of Cercopithecus, brought by Capt. Boyd Alexander from Lake Chad. This he proposed to name C. tantalus alexandri.—Mr. W. F. H. Rosenberg exhibited a rook in which the upper mandible had overgrown the lower to a remarkable extent. This abnormality was evidently caused by an injury to the tip of the lower mandible having deprived the upper of the opposing surface necessary to check its growth.—Prof. W. Ridgeway read the following papers, communicated by the Secretary (a) 'On Hitherto Unrecorded Specimens of Equus quagga'; (b) 'Differentiation of the Three Species of Zebras'; (c) 'On a Portion of a Fossil Jaw of one of the Equidae'; and illustrated his remarks with a series of lantern-slides.—Mr. R. Lydekker described a female deer skin obtained by Capt. Malcolm McNeil from Sze-chuen, which he regarded as representing a race of the hangul distinguished by its very pale colouring; for this the name Cervus cashmirianus macneili was suggested.—Mr. E. C. Chubb presented a paper on 'The Batrachians and Reptiles of Matabeleland,' based upon specimens in the Rhodesia Museum, Bulawayo.

ROYAL METEOROLOGICAL.—May 19.—Mr. H. Mellish, President, in the chair.—Col. H. E. Rawson read a paper on 'The Anticyclonic Belt of the Northern Hemisphere.'—A paper by Mr. A. Walter, of the Royal Alfred Observatory, Mauritius, on 'Errors of Estimation in Thermometric Observations,' was read by the Secretary.

PHILOLOGICAL.—May 7.—Sir J. A. H. Murray, President, in the chair.—The Treasurer read his Report and audited cash-account, which were adopted.—Thanks were voted to the Council of University College for the use of their rooms for the Society's meetings.—The officers elected for the ensuing session were: President, Dr. H. Bradley; Vice-Presidents, Sir J. A. H. Murray, Dr. H. Sweet, Rev. A. H. Sayce, Prof. Skeat, and Prof. Napier; Ordinary Members of Council, Mr. S. D. Brown, Dr. W. A. Craigie, Dr. T. Ely, Mr. D. Ferguson, Provost Foster, Prof. I. Gollancz, Dr. F. Heath, Prof. Ker, Prof. Littledale, Dr. H. Oelsner, Dr. J. Peile, Prof. Postgate, Prof. Rippmann, Prof. J. G. Robertson, Miss C. E. F.

Spurgeon, Mr. W. H. Stevenson, Prof. Thomas, Prof. Weekley, Mr. J. S. Westlake, and Mr. H. B. Wheatley; Treasurer, Mr. H. A. Nesbitt; Hon. Secretary, Dr. F. J. Furnivall.

Sir James Murray then made his report on the progress of his work on the Society's Oxford Dictionary since last year. He regretted that that work made it impossible for him to attend the Society's meetings oftener. Last May he hoped he should finish P by the present time; but the disablement of his chief assistant, Mr. Sweetman, and the deaths or illness of other helpers and friends, had prevented this. Still, he had sent in copy to 'Pustulous'; he had proofs to 'Pusney,' revises to 'Pumpable,' press-returns to 'Pulsific,' and finals to 'Pulpit'; but the whole of P will not be in type till the end of June, and will not be cleared till the middle of August. Every sheet is read twenty times by different folk, the work being divided among helpers. But illness or death has stopped many of our workers: Messrs. C. B. Mount, C. B. Winchester, FitzEdward Hall, E. L. Brandreth, Jas. Bartlett, Beckett, Brushfield, W. Browne, Elworthy, Erlebach, Anderson, Gregor, Hulme, Jacob, Lawley, Löwenberg, Peto, Potts, Schrupf, Sheppard, Woods, Whitley Stokes, Miss Brown, Miss Westmacott, Lord Aldenham, &c. Of our many sub-editors only two are left, Mr. Jas. Brown, who has Un- to Uncong, and the Rev. W. R. Wilson of Dollar, who, having just finished Ti-, is working To- over again. Profs. Skeat and Weekley, Miss Edith Thompson and her sister, Mr. Jas. Platt, Mr. Amours, Mr. Cleland, Mr. Whitwell, and many other friends still help; while others, of whom Dr. Furnivall is the chief, collect material, which is much needed for the Supplement to the Dictionary. Sir James Murray has to rise at 5.30 or 6 every morning, and work till late at night, to clear his allotted day's work. For "put" the quotation-slips numbered 7,500; the bundle was 2½ ft. thick, and the slips, set end to end, would have measured three-quarters of a mile. Its groups and senses run to 80, with about 240 subdivisions. Put meant first thrust, push, knock down, but gradually weakened, and took the place of don, seen in don, doff your coat, while thrust, push, place, set, lay, took its place. The relation of putt or put the stone, or at golf, to the ordinary put is difficult; and the origin is obscure, though we have an O.E. putunge. The derivations of pull and push are difficult: they are perhaps Dutch. Put, Sir James Murray thinks, is onomatopœic, of the sound made by pushing or putting a substance on a table, mod. Dan. putta. In some of our dialects put is used for the butting of animals with horns or heads. S is the largest letter in the Dictionary; C is the second; and P the third, nearly as large as C, though in Old English it contained only a score of words. French, Latin, Greek, and barbarous languages have added many terms. Pseudo- takes up three pages, and is divided into three parts. It first appears in Wyclif, and gets common after 1600. The triple part now in hand will finish P.

Many other interesting words were dealt with briefly by the reader, and the hearty thanks of the meeting were voted to him for his long and devoted service to the Dictionary, which his energy, learning, and skill, combined with the generosity of the Oxford Press Delegates, and the voluntary efforts of over a thousand helpers, have rendered a credit and honour to our language and our country.

ROYAL ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—May 18.

—Prof. W. Ridgeway, President, in the chair.—Dr. W. L. Hildburgh read papers on Tibetan and Burmese amulets. He first referred briefly to the general principles underlying the employment of amulets, and then touched on the beliefs in demons or evil spirits as producers of certain diseases, and on the use of protections against such diseases and against others not necessarily caused by similar influences. He also outlined the principal reasons guiding primitive peoples in their choice of amulets. Passing to Tibetan amulets, the author divided them, for convenience of reference, into religious, secular, and natural amulets. The religious amulets consist principally of the well-known printed paper charms, of which a considerable number were exhibited, small images of deities or the like, and relics and other articles with which religious ideas are associated. The secular amulets are such as are formed artificially, though the intercession of supernatural beings is not immediately concerned. Such are twisted metal bracelets against strains in the arms, or charms of plaited cords. The natural amulets consist of substances in which the protective or curative virtues are inherent, frequently so because of supposed sympathetic connexion; for instance, parts of the tiger, the elephant, the musk-deer, and other animals, especially such parts as the teeth, claws, bones, or hairs. The medicinal use of such objects was also mentioned.

The paper on Burmese amulets covered the ground in much the same manner. Amongst the principal Burmese amulets referred to by the author were rings made of genuine or imitation elephant hair, ornaments of elephant-nail, parts of various animals, coral, amber ornaments, representations of animals, and objects which had been subjected to magical ceremonies. A small number of Nepalese amulets were also exhibited and their objects explained. Collections of amulets were used to illustrate the other papers.

HISTORICAL.—May 20.—Archdeacon Cunningham, President, in the chair.—K. N. Gopal Pillai was elected a fellow; the United Universities Club was admitted as a Subscribing Library.—Prof. Firth read a paper on 'Later Tudor Ballads,' especially dealing with those on the Rising in the North, 1569, and its consequences, and with the Armada. The President, the Secretary, and Prof. Pollard spoke shortly on the subject.

The Alexander Medal is awarded to Miss N. Neild for an essay on 'The Social and Economic Condition of the Unfree Classes in England in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries.'

FOLK-LORE.—May 19.—Miss C. S. Burne, President, in the chair.—Miss A. Werner read a paper entitled 'The Bantu Elements in Swahili Folk-lore.' By taking the folk-tales in Bishop Steere's and other collections and comparing these with other variants, Miss Werner succeeded in showing that, contrary to what might have been expected from a casual perusal of the tales, Arab and Bantu elements existed side by side in Swahili folk-lore. Miss Werner dealt chiefly with the "hare" series of tales, especially that one relating to the finding of water by the animals, of which she gave several versions. The influence of Islam was traced throughout the versions, and the gradual substitution of Arab for the original characteristics was commented upon. Miss Werner showed that the animal fables exhibited a distinct tendency to shade off into simple Märchen with human characters, a fact which seemed to disprove the assertion that the animal fables and the Märchen indicated a distinct difference in culture. Traces of native belief were also shown to exist in other tales, notably that of 'The Story of the Children and the Zimwi' and that of 'The Story of the Carpenter and the Amulet.' Miss Werner alluded to the custom of eating the new crops with a special kind of flour, and suggested that this was a survival of the Bantu harvest custom by which the eating of the firstfruits was forbidden until they had been tasted by the chief. A survival of totemism was found in the custom of every family having certain food—animal and fish—which its members were not allowed to eat, the real meaning of the tabu having been lost under Arab influence. The initiation ceremonies contain a strong Bantu element in the figure of grass and leaves which is carried about by a man, ostensibly to frighten the boys. In the discussion which followed the paper Mr. Nutt referred to the resemblance which existed between one of the legends mentioned by Miss Werner and that of Balder in the Eddaic mythology. Mr. Wright gave a folk-tale parallel from Jamaica; and Dr. Gaster, Mr. Calderon, and the President also spoke.

Before the paper Mr. Wright exhibited a military mail cap picked up on the battle-field of Omdurman, and carrying several interesting amulets.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- TUES. Royal Institution, 3.—'Biological Chemistry,' Lecture I., Dr. F. Gowland Hopkins.
- WED. Archaeological Institute, 4.30.—'A Note on some Early Crucifixes, with Examples from Roydon, Ipswich, and Marlborough,' Nina F. Layard; 'Exhibition of an Early Bone Crucifix lately found at Clare Market,' Mr. F. W. Reader; 'A Note on Fonts at Barnard Castle and Sedgfield, Co. Durham,' the Rev. H. Bedford Pim.
- Entomological, 8.—'On the Colonization of New Nests by Myrmecophilous Coleoptera,' Mr. H. St. J. Donisthorpe.
- THURS. Institute of Actuaries, 5.—Annual Meeting.
- Royal Institution, 3.—'A Modern Railway Problem: Steam v. Electricity,' Lecture I., Prof. W. E. Dalby.
- Linnean, 8.—'On the Alcyonaria of the Sealark Expedition,' Prof. J. A. Thomson; 'On the Cephalochorda of the Sealark Expedition,' Mr. H. A. S. Gibson; Report on the Porifera Collected by Mr. C. Crossland in the Red Sea, Mr. R. W. Harold Row.
- Chemical, 8.30.—Wolcott Gibbs Memorial Lecture, Prof. F. Wigglesworth Clarke. Papers: 'The Molecular Weight of Tetraethylammonium Bromide and the Atomic Weight of Carbon,' Mr. A. Scott; 'The Rate of Formation of Azoderivatives from Benzenoid Diamines,' Mr. V. H. Voley, and others.
- FRI. Geologists' Association, 8.—'The Fossiliferous Lower Keuper Rocks of Worcestershire,' Mr. L. Johnston Wills.
- Royal Institution, 9.—'Researches in Radioteleggraphy,' Prof. J. A. Fleming.
- SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Vitality of Seeds and Plants: (1) A Vindication of the Vitality of Plants,' Dr. F. F. Blackman.

Science Gossip.

PROF. F. WIGGLESWORTH CLARKE of Washington will deliver the Wolcott Gibbs Memorial Lecture to the Chemical Society next Thursday evening.

MESSRS. WHITTAKER & Co. will publish immediately, under the auspices of the Seventh International Congress of Applied Chemistry, now being held in London, a volume on 'The Rise and Progress of the British Explosives Industry,' which has been compiled by members of that section of the Congress. It will contain numerous illustrations and portraits.

THE death at the age of sixty-five is reported from Berlin of Dr. Wilhelm Engelmann, Professor of Physiology at the University of that town, and an authority on muscular and nervous anatomy. He held a professorship at Utrecht before he was appointed to Berlin.

BARTHOLOMAEUS VON CARNERI, author and critic, whose death in his eighty-eighth year is announced, was a close adherent of Darwin's theories, on which he based his own philosophical system. Among his works are 'Sittlichkeit und Darwinismus,' 'Der moderne Mensch,' and 'Empfindung und Bewusstsein.' Though almost forgotten now, he at one time took an active part in Austrian politics, and till 1891 sat in the Abgeordnetenhaus as a member of the Liberal party.

THE annual Visitation of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, will be held next Saturday, the 5th prox.

THE sun will be vertical over the equator about 2 o'clock in the morning (Greenwich time) on the 22nd prox., which will therefore be the day of summer solstice in the northern hemisphere, and of winter in the southern. The moon will be full at 1h. 25m. on the morning of the 4th, and new at 11h. 28m. on the night of the 17th, being nearest the earth on the afternoon of the 12th. An eclipse of the moon will take place on the night of the 3rd, the total phase lasting from 2 minutes before 1 until 2 o'clock in the morning of the 4th at Greenwich, where the moon will set at 4 minutes before 4, nearly half an hour before she is clear of the penumbra; the whole phenomenon will be better seen further west. This will be followed by an annular eclipse of the sun on the 17th, the central line of which will pass from Siberia, over the North Pole (where the eclipse will probably be just total), to Greenland. An occultation of γ Virginis will take place on the evening of the 24th: disappearance 9h. 15m.; reappearance 9h. 59m. Mercury will be at inferior conjunction with the sun on the 14th, and will scarcely be visible next month. Venus moves during June from Taurus into Gemini, passing south of Castor on the 25th, and of Pollux on the 28th; she sets a little later each evening, and will be nearly west of the crescent moon on the 19th. Mars is in Aquarius, and will enter Pisces on the 14th prox.; he rises earlier each morning, and about midnight at the end of June. Jupiter, nearly in the middle of the constellation Leo, sets about midnight. Saturn is visible in the morning, situated in the eastern part of Pisces; he will be in conjunction with the moon on the 13th.

WE have received Bulletins Nos. 15 and 16 of the Kodaikanal Observatory. The former contains an interesting paper by Mr. Evershed on radial movements in sun-spots, giving a series of line shifts in spot spectra observed last January; the latter is an investigation by Mr. Gilbert Walker of the curvature of lines in the spectrum formed by a plane grating.

PROF. MAX WOLF, of the Astrophysical Institute, Königstuhl, Heidelberg, announces that the star B.D.+58°.1782, which is registered in the 'Durchmusterung' of the ninth magnitude, was noted on the 8th inst. to be of only the eleventh; yet on the 22nd ult., as on many previous occasions, it was estimated at Heidelberg, as at other places, of the ninth, so that it would seem to be subject to some remarkable change. In a general list it will be reckoned as var. 17, 1909, Draconis.

FINE ARTS

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Art Prices Current, 1907-8. ('Fine Art Trade Journal' Office.)—This is one of the many attempts to do for art sales what has for so long been done for book sales. Mr. Slater himself made an attempt to cover the ground not already touched by 'Book-Prices Current,' but his experiment lasted for only two seasons. 'Sale Prices,' published at the office of The Connoisseur, has lived for several years, and covers many phases of collecting, from books to coins and pictures to postage-stamps, and it is probably to its heterogeneous character that its comparatively long life is due. 'Art Prices Current' is the handiest record of its kind, and within its limits, yet published.

It, however, falls far short of perfection, and as it reports only the sales of pictures, drawings, and prints held at Messrs. Christie's its title is misleading, since porcelain, decorative furniture, tapestry, and many other things have as much claim to the generic term "art" as pictures and drawings. Moreover, it is unreasonable to confine a volume with such a comprehensive title to the sales at a single, though leading, auctioneer's.

An annual volume reporting art sales can only be valuable when it is edited with discretion and knowledge. This volume seems to be merely a reprint of Messrs. Christie's officially priced catalogues of pictures and engravings, which any one can purchase. The one strong point of the publication is its Index. It therefore will serve very well as a "key" to bound volumes of the original sale catalogues; but beyond this its utility is questionable. Every lot in every sale reported is apparently included, although many lots failed to reach 10*l*. This is to err on the safe side, but it would have been better to set a limit, and to annotate entries where notes or explanations are really needed. Twice as much space sometimes (e.g., p. 41) is accorded to engravings which fetched only 2*l*. or 3*l*. as to important pictures which sold for thousands of pounds. The totals of the sales, even when easily obtainable—the Humphrey Roberts and the S. G. Holland Sales, for instance—are omitted.

Errors of transcription are numerous. "Dickens" (p. xvi) should be Dickens. "Muncacsy" (pp. 44 and 142) is not the correct spelling of the name of the Hungarian artist; nor is "Rivaux" (p. 143) the proper form of the abbey rendered famous by Turner. What does "Manuscript book, with selections from various authors, needle-work and velvet binding, &c." (p. 157), convey to the average reader? The entry "S. L., 14" in the Index answers to nothing that we can find on p. 14. 'Art Prices Current' cannot rank as a useful work of reference until it is placed in the hands of a more careful editor.

The National Gallery. By Paul G. Konody, M. W. Brockwell, and F. W. Lippmann. Vol I. Illustrated. (T. C. & E. C. Jack.)—The first volume of this important undertaking (the earlier numbers of the serial issue were noticed in The Athenæum of March 13) makes an imposing appearance with its scarlet cover and gilt lettering. It comprises nine out of the seventeen parts which will complete the work. The general appearance in this form is much more satisfactory than in the serial issue. We note a table of contents, and a 'List of Illustrations' (in which the names of the artists are those given in the Official Catalogue), with the National Gallery number in each case. The volume takes the reader, without a confusion of detail and hair-splitting discussion of attributions, through the Italian schools to those of Flanders and Germany, concluding with the Holbeins and the Burgkmair family. It may be doubted if there is any other popular guide to the history of painting which gives such an admirably condensed account of a subject which has given birth to a whole library. As we pointed out in our previous notice, the descriptive particulars on the fly-leaf of each picture are not so full as they might be. The head-dress in the 'Portrait of a Lady' by an artist of the German School, Plate LII., is described as "a large white cap." It would be more accurate to call it a coif. She holds in her left hand "a sprig of forget-me-not"—which looks more like the common flax (Linum usitatissimum); and nothing is said about her maiden name of Hoferin being inscribed on the picture, which was at one time attributed to Sigismund Holbein, but may, as the authors suggest, be by Wohlgemut, whose style it closely resembles.

THE second volume of the Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler (Leipzig, Engelmann) has appeared at no long interval after the first. In 600 pages the biographies extend from Antonio da Monza to Salomon Bassan. Among the more important articles are those of Frey on Arnolfo di Cambio (whom he distinguishes sharply from Arnolfo di Firenze), Kristeller on Jacopo de' Barbari, with a very full bibliography, and Knapp on Fra Bartolommeo. The shorter articles we find generally accurate and authoritative. Our impression that this is an indispensable handbook to serious students of art is fully confirmed.

THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB.

THE removal of the New English Art Club to more spacious premises may have a far-reaching influence on the development of what, after all, is the liveliest group of painters at present working in this country. Their exhibition represents contemporary art, though hitherto it has necessarily done so imperfectly. Other societies too often admit a painter only when he has passed the period of active research, and is in a manner living on his capital. The fortunes of these institutions have therefore but an indirect influence on the development of art. It is otherwise with the New English Art Club, and the result of the new venture will be watched with interest.

One effect of the enlarged scale of the exhibition is obvious, and doubtless will be duly pointed out by the Cassandras of the press. The compact little group of artists which has hitherto controlled the fortunes of the society—making it almost a family affair, self-sufficing, and owing little to outside contributors—will hardly be able to fill the Suffolk Street galleries without lowering the standard of work. We hasten to add that nothing of the sort is at present noticeable in a show full of interest, wherein the level of merit is decidedly high. But it must be remembered that the last winter exhibition was suppressed, so that there has been a double period of preparation. Even so, while the most important, and as a rule the best, work remains that of the members, the proportion of outsiders to members exhibiting is as two to one. Even if members are willing to continue generously to defray the expenses of an exhibition largely employed for the benefit of others, so large a body of outside contributions must in the long run become more widely representative of English painting—must be selected to some extent from work which lies outside the two or three main movements which have dominated recent exhibitions of the Club. A general advance and a more comprehensive aim are clearly indicated, and seem, indeed, so bound up with the due furnishing of larger premises that the shutting up of some of the galleries has, we believe, been contemplated as a possibility by certain spirits inclined to shirk the dangers of responsibility.

This negative policy will, perhaps, be averted by another effect of the changed environment, which may have received less attention, but is none the less plain to the impartial observer. The mere act of showing a collection of typical New English Art Club pictures in so spacious a gallery as the largest of the Suffolk Street rooms involves a reconsideration of standards. The centre of interest shifts from the painting of Mr. Steer and Mr. Orpen to that of Mr. Augustus John, who, by a happy coincidence, emerges for the first time as a painter of definite promise in a direction of general interest. We have frequently urged artists to consider the advisability of laying the foundations of a more public art—of a school of painting adapted for decorating places of public use, as distinct from the (commercially) moribund school which appeals every year less effectively to the private tastes of rich individuals; and one of the principal obstacles to this desirable change of objective has been the apathy of the body of artists who had the best title to the reputation of being progressive and the heirs of the future. They continued obstinately to attach paramount importance to what we may call the allusive rather than the intrinsic qualities of a picture, and this made their work inevitably ineffective for purposes of large decoration. We would not minimize the importance of this quality of allusiveness, to the development of which most of the best painting of the past dozen years has been devoted—the quality which enables a picture to impress us by evoking the remembrance of some natural effect; but we submit that its development has been on very special lines, and in a sense unduly literal. It has proceeded by an over-analysis of colour, an elaboration of aerial perspective which destroys the integrity of the work as a piece of paint, and above all weakens its effect when seen from any but "the picture distance." Modern painters have long been accustomed, however, to scoff at the man who must needs rub his nose against a picture; and as for the greater distance—well, the members of the N.E.A.C. have never really seen their pictures at a greater distance than the one at which, by their literal truth, the planes come together logically into a semblance of illusion, and by their close resemblance to three-dimensioned space enable us to forget that we are looking at a mass of paint which, as a thing in the flat, is worried and over-modelled and lacking in strength of rhythm.

Even so intellectual a thing as painting is controlled by material facts, and the accident of a larger gallery may induce a larger and less professional outlook. The painter may be reminded that the picture which looks right from but one point of view is inevitably suitable for private possession alone, for only two or three persons at a time can take that particular point of view. If the picture is to be enjoyed by a roomful of people, the claims of a bolder and more generalized design must be considered. And if he sees a work which admits these claims alongside his own, the artist will admit that the latter, in its escape into three-dimensioned space, may have gained in complexity, but lost in force and directness.

We cannot altogether regret the years spent in this witchcraft of colour adumbration. There has emerged from it Mr. Wilson Steer, who is in this domain a master—seems, indeed, to have been born expressly for such work; and while none of his followers is quite so natural and happy within its precincts, we must acknowledge an occasionally astonishing capacity, as in Mrs. Cheston's brilliant pair of pictures, Under the Cliff (60) and The Glen (65). None the less we hail Mr. John's effort at decoration, The Way down to the Sea (41), as a return to a saner and more legitimate, and above all more useful manner of painting.

Even if we look at it sideways in a foreshortened view, this nobly compact system of lines retains something of its eloquence; and in his use of colour Mr. John shows a like return to the elemental, refusing to develop minor differences which add nothing to the human significance of his picture. Somewhat too consciously, perhaps (and hence a certain discord), he has determined to eliminate aerial perspective, as only compromising the carrying power and legibility of his design; yet we cannot help feeling that he was right in reducing this element to greater simplicity than is currently demanded by the painters around him. Even Mr. Steer's Broken Bough (42), a capital example of his powers, looks small and tortured beside Mr. John's large and tranquil spacing.

There is no question here as to which is the more perfect artist. Mr. Steer is that, incomparably, but we feel that if we survey the whole field of art with that largeness which reduces later European painting to an episode, then Mr. Steer's art is an oddity, albeit a most poetic one, while Mr. John's is a return to the grander and more monumental tradition. He has the true use for detail, as in his selection and vivid presentment of the curious greasy mud, breaking as it dries into starry fissures, which is characteristic of the dank melancholy of the period of neap tides. The types of the women, moreover, with the exception of the one to the left of the composition, are noble and expressive, and we fail to see in them the repulsiveness for which their creator is perennially chaffed. Except in the exaggerated leanness of the one figure already referred to, this appears to us a work of great power and seriousness, which we commend to the attention of those purchasers for provincial galleries who occasionally anticipate by a dozen years or so the verdict of London. This procession of women, with the frail and bloodless child, seem to tread resignedly the inevitable soiling path of decay towards some Stygian flood, sadly sunlit, yet stagnant, on the opposite bank of which the spectator discerns an unreal shore of illusively golden sand.

This is Mr. John's first successful venture in poetic painting. His portrait of Mr. Nicholson (58) is in his earlier vein of clever, but not very inspired realism. It is like the work of Mr. Orpen, though the head is perhaps better painted. On the other hand, the use of the curtain is an obtrusive example of bad design. Mr. W. Rothenstein's Right Hon. Charles Booth (55) is free from the theatricality which in Mr. John's portrait may have been a little authorized by the sitter; but while the head is sensitively and finely modelled, we are oppressed by the obtrusively cold colour of the hair, which finds no answering note in the general scheme of the background, and here also the criticism of being hung in a large gallery is valuable to the painter. Mr. Rothenstein's portrait group (64) is noticeable for the delightful character of the masquerading boy, but there is a want of nicety of relation between the modelling of this head and what should have been the more elusive modelling of the mother's profile. The other half of portraiture, which achieves greater pictorial unity, but fails in intimacy of characterization, is well shown in Mr. Philip Connard's gleaming study of A Spanish Lady (32), and, with greater solidity and rather less colour-sense, in Mr. Orpen's Portrait Group (13) of Mr. George Moore and an audience.

Among the drawings, Mr. Walter Sickert's Benedetta della Madonna (173) is the most striking of the figure studies; while of the newer comers Mr. Lees is noticeable for his leanings towards Pre-Raphaelitism, and Mr. Albert Rothenstein shows drawings from life, careful and alert, but a little wanting in easy rhythm. As yet it is his ostensibly humorous work, like No. 195 or No. 202, which is most spontaneous. Mr. Beerbohm's caricatures are amusing, but the advance in draughtsmanship which astonished every one last year is not quite sustained in his present work.

Among the landscapes, Mr. Steer's three drawings (318, 319, 322) are incomparably brilliant; and we should mention also the work of Prof. Holmes (309), Mr. Kneen (336), Mr. D. S. McColl (315, 323), and Mr. Mark Fisher (270).

OTHER EXHIBITIONS.

At the Leicester Galleries Mr. Francis James's flower pieces, overpoweringly brilliant as they prove to their neighbours in a mixed exhibition, are necessarily intercombative when hung together. He is inclined to choose, moreover, occasionally as subjects certain prim flowers with which a painter of more naive temperament would succeed better. With the full rolling forms of tulips and the like he deals, on the other hand, in masterly fashion, and with the flash of anemones and fresher gleam of narcissus. Nos. 21 and 18 show him at his subtlest, Nos. 16 and 59 at his utmost splendour. The exhibition is unapproachable in its kind.

In Mr. Clausen's show alongside the water-colours (of which the effects of hoarfrost, Nos. 1 and 7, and of night, Nos. 2 and 47, are the best) easily outshine the smaller oil studies by their greater ease and spontaneity. The to him more laborious medium, however, brings its compensation in more sustained efforts, like the large Visit (29) or the two charming portraits of children (25 and 45). In this medium the closer finish yields the finer results.

The exhibition of work by the Hon. Neville Lytton and Mr. Charles Louis Geoffroy at the Carfax shows some technical training, but is far below the artistic level of the exhibits we are accustomed to see at this gallery.

THE CUTHBERTSON SALE.

THE important collection belonging to Mr. E. H. Cuthbertson was sold by Messrs. Christie on the 21st inst., many of the prices obtained being very high.

Pictures, English School: Reynolds, The Snake in the Grass, a young woman reclining on a bank, and raising her right arm to hide her face from Cupid, who stands before her, loosening the strings of her blue sash; a snake appears in the grass at her side, 5,145*l.*; Miss Franks, in white dress brocaded with gold, a blue sash round her waist, 504*l.* Romney, Mrs. Blackburne, in white striped muslin dress, a red Oriental sash round her waist, 5,460*l.*; Mrs. Newbery (Mary Raikes, only sister of Robert Raikes; married Francis Newbery, 1770), in brown dress with light-blue ribbons, seated, hands clasped, 5,355*l.*; Portrait of a Lady, in yellow dress with short sleeves, powdered hair, 493*l.* Vicat Cole, Near Leith Hill, Surrey, with peasants and sheep, evening, 110*l.* Constable, A View on the River Stour, 714*l.*; In Helmingham Park, 441*l.*; Salisbury, 404*l.*; A Cornfield near Brighton, 126*l.* D. Cox, The Cross-Roads, 588*l.*; A Windy Day, 451*l.*; Changing Pastures, 178*l.*; The Return of the Flock, 262*l.*; A Moorland Landscape, 178*l.* C. Fielding, Dunstaffnage Castle, Argyllshire, 110*l.* W. Müller, On the Medway, 294*l.* J. Stark, View near a Farm, 136*l.*

Continental Schools: Corot, Landscape, with trees on the left, under which stands a peasant in a red cap, 3,307*l.*; another landscape, a sandy road by the side of a wall, a man and two women conversing in the foreground, 2,940*l.* Daubigny, Paysage dans l'Eure, three peasant-women on a rough road to the right, leading to a clump of trees, 2,205*l.*; La Seine à Nantes, looking across the river to the town, a greystone bridge in the centre, 1,627*l.* N. Diaz, In the Forest, 1,890*l.*; The Forest of Fontainebleau, 1,627*l.*; Three Ladies, in Oriental costume, with two dogs, 1,732*l.* J. Dupré, A River Scene, two cows grazing on the further bank, 2,835*l.*; A Woody River Scene, with cows in a field in the distance, 735*l.*; La Soulaie, a sluggish stream with willows, a boy angling from the bank, 1,055*l.* H. Harpignies, Range d'Arbres près la Loire, sunset sky, 787*l.*; The Mediterranean Coast, 1,071*l.*; La Loire près Source, the river in the middle distance, with hills on the further side, 2,100*l.*; a river scene with a mill, a peasant angling from the bank, the sinking sun reflected in the clear water, 1,312*l.*; Evening, a quiet pool surrounded by trees, with two storks at the water's edge, 735*l.*; A Woody Landscape, with a hill on the right, and a river in the middle distance, 367*l.* C. Jacque, The Flock, a shepherd, in blue blouse, and carrying a staff, with a flock of sheep near the side of a wood, 3,360*l.*; La Bergère, a peasant-girl carrying a satchel, with sheep emerging from a shed, 2,205*l.* E. van Marcke, Cattle in a Stream, with a herd of cattle in a pasture on the left, 3,990*l.*; Three Cows at a Pool, 819*l.*; A Group of Cows on the Bank of a Stream, 546*l.* J. Maris, View overlooking a village, in grey morning light, a barge moored against the further bank of a canal, near three willow trees, 3,150*l.*; Scheveningen, low tide, with two stranded fishing-boats, 945*l.*; A Dutch Road between Two Dykes, with a peasant taking three horses to a farm, 1,890*l.*; A Shepherdess and Sheep, the shepherdess in white cap, leaning upon a staff, looking at her dog, 1,102*l.* T. Rousseau, The Winding Road, a rough road, on which are pools of water, and a peasant woman carrying a truss of hay upon her head, 4,830*l.* C. Troyon, Cows Drinking, 945*l.*; A Shepherd and Sheep, an old shepherd advancing down an avenue, 2,205*l.* Rosa Bonheur, Head of a Ram, 189*l.* J. C. Cazin, River Scene, with a windmill, cottages, and boat, moonrise, 346*l.* P. J. Clays, Dutch Pincks at the Mouth of a River, 420*l.* E. Fromentin, Returning from Hunting, Arab horsemen fording a river, 651*l.* J. J. Henner, Head of a Girl, with flowing hair and blue dress, 504*l.* S. Lepine, The Seine, 399*l.* G. Michel, A Landscape, with a sandy road in the foreground, a windmill on a rising ground to the left, 110*l.* J. Veyrassat, Loading the Hay Wain, 210*l.*

Drawings: D. Cox, Milking-Time, 63*l.* J. M. Whistler, A Girl with a Fan, pastel, on brown paper, 220*l.*; A Study of a Girl, in red, pastel, on brown paper, 252*l.*

The 101 lots realized a total of 77,456*l.*

Messrs. Christie sold on the 24th inst. the following drawings, from various collections: C. Fielding, A Mountainous Landscape, with cattle on a road, 111*l.* J. Israël, Returning from Labour, 105*l.* J. F. Lewis, The Hosh of the Artist's House, Cairo, 52*l.*; The Gourieh, 75*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

The Burlington Magazine for June opens with a demand for an inquiry into the circumstances attending the sale of the Duke of Norfolk's Holbein. The French section of the portrait exhibition now open in Paris is discussed by M. Andre Pératé; and the historical portrait exhibition at the Burlington Fine-Arts Club is criticized by Miss Mary F. S. Hervey. Both papers are illustrated, Major Palmer's portrait attributed to Holbein forming the frontispiece of the number. A third illustrated article deals with the work of Mr. P. Wilson Steer in connexion with the foundation of an art gallery at Johannesburg. Mr. R. L. Hobson continues his studies of early Chinese porcelain with an elaborate article on Celadon, to which five full-page plates are devoted. Among the contributors of shorter notes may be mentioned Prof. Georges Hulin de Loo, Mr. Herbert Cook, Mr. Campbell Dodgson, Mr. W. H. J. Weale, and Miss Emily H. Stephens, the last-named giving an account of a recently discovered fresco at Fiesole. In the American section Dr. Sirén concludes his series of articles on Trecento pictures in the United States.

THE first exhibition of pictures, sculpture, and craftwork by the members of the United Arts Club, Dublin, was opened in the Club Studio on Monday last.

AN exhibition of pictures of life in the West of Ireland by Mr. Jack Yeats is now on view at the Leinster Hall, Dublin. The work shown is characterized by simplicity and directness. The West of Ireland peasant types are admirably observed, the studies of circus life being especially interesting.

J. F. W. writes:—

"In your review last week of Hind's 'History of Engraving and Etching,' you state Bohn to be the publisher of W. F. Tiffin's 'Gossip about Portraits.' It should be John Russell Smith, 1867."

WE regret to hear of the death of M. François Émile Michel, a talented artist, to-day most widely known as a writer on art, and a contributor to our own columns. M. Michel was born at Metz on July 19th, 1828. He studied art under M. Migette, a local drawing instructor, and was for a time a pupil of Maréchal, the stained-glass painter. M. Michel obtained medals at the Salons of 1868, 1889, and 1900, having been in the interval (1892) elected a member of the Institute. One of his earlier pictures, 'Gardeuse d'Oies,' is at Nantes; and two of his later pictures are in the Luxembourg—'Semailles d'Automne,' from the Salon of 1873, and 'La Dune, près de Harlem,' from the Salon of 1885. He continued to exhibit at the Salon up to the present year. He wrote many volumes on art, including two big books on Rubens and Rembrandt, 'Études sur l'Histoire de l'Art'; and several monographs in the "Artistes Célèbres" series, including Boucher, Terburg, and Hobbema. At the time of his death he had just finished an elaborate work on the Forest of Fontainebleau, with numerous illustrations.

THE last number of the Archivio Storico Lombardo contains an article (by Angelo Monteverdi) on the tomb of the Persian martyrs SS. Maris, Martha, Audifax, and Abachum, formerly in the church of S. Lorenzo at Cremona. The writer proves (what had been assumed by many critics) that the tomb was the work of the Pavian sculptor Amadeo, whose signature it bore, together with the date 1482, though date and signature are unfortunately no longer in existence. Of the fragments of the tomb, which was broken up in 1798 on the suppression of the church of S. Lorenzo, eight bas-reliefs now decorate the two pulpits in the cathedral of Cremona; a tondo with the Annunciation is in the Louvre; another with the Nativity is in the sculpture museum in the Castello at Milan; and three statuettes of the Madonna and two saints have disappeared. The attribution of the "Anonimo," who in 1525 ascribed the sculptures to Amadeo, was therefore correct; and Vasari, who assigned them to "Geremia da Cremona," was mistaken. The opinion of Count Malaguzzi, Amadeo's most recent biographer, is fully confirmed by the results of Signor Monteverdi's investigations, while the theory of another Italian critic that the tomb was the work of Pietro da Rho falls to the ground. The writer of the article goes on to show that the authenticated works of Giov. Pietro da Rho prove him to have been a sculptor of moderate endowments, and that many of the works ascribed to him are either by Amadeo himself or are good examples of that master's workshop; and he further shows that the Milanese Giov. Pietro da Rho is not to be confounded, as has constantly been the case, with Pietro de Rondo of Cremona, a painter and sculptor whose name is frequently met with in documents, but by whom no existing works are known.

THE artist Ferdinand von Recniecek, whose death at the early age of forty is announced from Munich, was chiefly known by his satires of society in Simplicissimus.

THE various "récompences," and prizes of the Salon des Artistes Français were published on Tuesday last. We can mention only a few of the more important. In the section of painting the Prix Lefebvre-Glaize (900*fr.*) is awarded to M. Clovis Cazes, who also obtains a medal. The Prix Rosa Bonheur (1,500*fr.*) is taken by M. Charles Fouqueray. No first medal has been awarded, and of the seven second medals M. Louis Biloul gets one for his 'Baptême des Enfants trouvés,' and Mlle. Morstadt one for her 'Campement devant le Bourg.' In sculpture the five first medals are awarded to M. Louis Couvers, A. Terroir, G. Verez, Roger-Bloche, and P. Roussel. In engraving the second medal is taken by M. Lafleur; in architecture the first medal goes to M. Tony Garnier.

M. CHARLES BRUNNER, who was for many years with M. Sedelmeyer, the well-known Paris picture-dealer, is opening this week at 11, Rue Royale, Paris, a new gallery, and his first public exhibition will consist of some fine portraits of various periods and schools, particularly French, English, and Dutch. The proceeds of this exhibition will be devoted to the relief of the poor fishing population of Brittany and Normandy.

HERR J. HALLE sends us the sale catalogue of a remarkable collection of English and French engravings of the eighteenth century, sporting prints, &c., which will be sold at his rooms in Ottostrasse, Munich, on June 15th and the next three days. As the many illustrations of the catalogue show, a number of rarities will be offered.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN.—Production of Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande.' La Tosca.

IN 1778 Mozart wrote to his father about Benda's two duologues, 'Medea' and 'Ariadne auf Naxos,' works which he had heard with the greatest pleasure. "You probably know," he says, "that there is no singing, but declamation; sometimes, indeed, words are spoken while the music is playing, and then the effect is most magnificent." And he gives his own opinion that "most recitatives should be treated in opera in this way; and only occasionally, when the words are suitable for musical expression, should there be singing in the recitative."

Although Benda's two duologues were much played and much discussed, the new art was soon forgotten. It has been revived by M. Claude Debussy in his 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' which was produced at the Opéra Comique, Paris, in 1902, and performed for the first time in England at Covent Garden yesterday week. History, however, never repeats itself exactly. Benda's spoken dialogue, or rather declamation, has become what has been aptly described as intensified speech; while his music, with due allowances for the period, was similar in spirit. M. Debussy is of opinion that Wagner, owing to the symphonic character of his music, failed to bring about a true union between music and drama, except at certain happy moments, among which he would, we presume, include many pages of the first act of 'Die Walküre,' and especially the scene in the third act when Brünnhilde pleads with Wotan. M. Debussy's criticism is, we believe, just. The emotional music and the rich orchestral colouring have been the chief causes of Wagner's success. Much of his art-work can be, and is, enjoyed in the concert-room, and by many who, though they hear the music-dramas at the opera-house, trouble little, except perhaps at exciting moments, about what is being sung on the stage. During the whole of 'Pelléas et Mélisande' the mystic play, with its fate-bound mortals, or "marionettes," to use Maeterlinck's expression, commands attention. At first the music may be described as colour, atmosphere; but as the tragedy grows in intensity, the music becomes also emotional; the last three acts are the most impressive.

By means of masterly orchestral colouring and exquisitely delicate harmonies, M. Debussy in his instrumental works has produced some striking effects; the music, however, often seems to require a detailed programme to enable the hearer to follow the train of the composer's thoughts. In 'Pelléas' the stage provides such a programme, and all the chiaroscuro and colouring experiments are at once felt to be as appropriate as they are skilful. Colour has always been considered one of the chief beauties of nature, and the composer's tone-painting in connexion with trees, water, and sky is specially characteristic.

The rendering of the work under the direction of Signor Campanini was extremely fine. Of the poem there is no need to speak, but in performance the way in which Mélisande plays with the ring before it falls into the water seems to spoil a romantic situation. Then, again, among the numerous scenes the very short one in the vaults of the castle appears superfluous. The interpreters—Miles. Féart, Bourgeois, and Trentini, who impersonated Mélisande, Geneviève, and Yniold respectively; and MM. Marcoux, Warnery, and Bourbon, the Arkel, Pelléas, and Golaud—were all excellent, and their enunciation so distinct that the book of the text was for once unnecessary. The piece was superbly staged. It deserves, and we hope will achieve, success. Masterpieces such as 'Orphée,' 'Don Juan,' 'Fidelio,' and 'Tristan' will not be cast into the shade by 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' for comparison between it and works of so different a kind is not possible.

Puccini's 'La Tosca' was performed on Wednesday evening, and attracted a large audience. Mlle. Destinn as Floria sang beautifully; but either she was not at her ease, or it is not a part that suits her well. It must, however, be noted that it was her first appearance in that difficult part. Signor Anselmi was a good Cavaradossi, while Signor Sammarco and M. Gilibert impersonated Scarpia and the Sacristan with their usual efficiency.

Musical Gossip.

MADAME ADELINA PATTI took part last Saturday afternoon in the concert at the Mansion House organized by the Lady Mayoress in aid of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. She was in good voice, and sang with her wonted skill and finish. Madame Clara Butt, Miss Phyllis Lett, the Earl of Shaftesbury—who has an agreeable light tenor voice—and Mr. Kennerley Rumford also contributed songs; and Miss Marie Hall played three violin solos. The Westminster Orchestral Society gave several animated performances in the course of the afternoon.

M. SERGEI KUSSEWITZKY gave his second orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on Tuesday. His reading of Tchaikowsky's Symphony in E minor was excellent. We especially liked the plaintive touches he introduced into the Valse, thus rendering it more in keeping with the rest of the work. Herr Leonid Sobinoff sang airs from operas by Tchaikowsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff with good taste. He has a tenor voice of excellent quality.

THE programme of M. Paderewski's recent concert at the Paris Conservatoire included his new Symphony, Beethoven's 'Emperor' Concerto, and the one in C minor, by M. Saint-Saëns. The orchestra was under the direction of M. Messager.

At the third Empire Concert at the Albert Hall last Saturday the programme consisted for the most part of familiar music. Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Britannia' Overture was played by the combined bands of the London Symphony Orchestra and the Coldstream Guards, and Mr. Arthur Hervey conducted his tone-picture 'On the March.' A 'Chorus of Empire' and another chorus, 'Empire of the Sea,' composed by Dr. Charles Harriss, the organizer of the concert, for chorus (Royal Albert Hall Choir) and orchestra, were performed for the first time. In both the writing is straightforward, but the former is the bolder and stronger. The artists included Madame Albani and Sir Charles Santley. The conductors were Sir Frederick Bridge and Dr. Harriss.

At the "Haydn Centenary Concert" of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, on June 12th at Messrs. Broadwood's, a short paper on Haydn will be read by Dr. W. H. Cummings.

A BRONZE portrait medallion to the memory of Dr. James Culwick was unveiled in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, on the 20th inst. by his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant. The memorial, the work of Mr. Oliver Sheppard, was erected by the members of the Orpheus Choral Society, of which Dr. Culwick was the founder and conductor.

WE learn from Dr. Erich Prieger that the Beethoven Quintet for wind instruments performed at the recent Bonn Festival was probably written between 1798 and 1802, and that, although an early work, it shows signs of the coming man. Only one movement has been preserved in its entirety, viz., the Adagio. Missing bars in the opening Allegro have been made good from a corresponding passage in the movement, though Beethoven, of course, might have presented them in varied form. Of the Minuet only twenty bars exist, so any attempt at restoration was hopeless. The finale has not been found.

THE death is announced of Isaac Albeniz, the Spanish composer. He was born at Comprodon in 1861, and after studying under various teachers, notably Brassein and Liszt, appeared, and with success, as a pianist. Later, however, he devoted himself to composition. His opera, 'The Magic Opal' was produced at the Lyric Theatre in 1893. 'Enrico Clifford' and 'Pepita Jimenez' were brought out at Barcelona in 1894 and 1895.

THE Max Klinger monument to Brahms, which has been placed in the foyer of the new Musikhalle at Hamburg, was unveiled on the seventy-sixth anniversary of the birth of the composer.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

MON.-SAT.	Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
—	Grand Italian Opera, Drury Lane (Wed. Matinée, 2.30.)
TUES.	Miss Julia Hochstadter's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. Arthur Newstead's Pianoforte Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
WED.	Mr. Marmaduke Barton's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Madame Olga Samaroff's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Steinway Hall.
—	Miss Maria Freund's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
—	Messrs. A. Roth and Sven Kjellström's Pianoforte and Violin Recital, 8.30, Steinway Hall.
THURS.	Miss Marie Horne's Costume Recital, 3, Queen's Theatre.
—	Madame Leginska's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.
—	M. Samazeuilh's Cello Recital, 3, Steinway Hall.
—	Miss Zukerman's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. Macmillan's Recital, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
—	Miss Lily Ormond's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.
—	Miss Helene Stylianides's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
FRI.	Miss Jeanne Darlay's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. Plunket Greene's Song Recital, 3.30, Aeolian Hall.
—	Société des Concerts Français, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
SAT.	Mr. Boris Hambourg's Cello Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.

DRAMA

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Bancrofts: Recollections of Sixty Years. By Marie and Squire Bancroft. With Portraits and Illustrations. (John Murray.)—As their former book, 'On and Off the Stage,' is now out of print and often inquired after, Sir Squire and Lady Bancroft have "retold" their "remiscences in a different way." Twenty of the sixty years mentioned in the title were spent by them in the control of two London theatres, the old Prince of Wales's and the Haymarket; and the financial results of that memorable enterprise must make the mouths of modern managers water with envy. "The net profit," we are told, "on the twenty years' management exceeded the sum of 180,000l." Of course, expenses were smaller then: "John Hare's first salary was only 2l. weekly, nor did he ever reach with us the high figures subsequently paid, as it never exceeded 20l." So again with dramatists: "The highest fees paid by us to Robertson were at the rate of 5l. for each performance of his comedies." And with theatres:

"The nightly expenses at the old Prince of Wales's never exceeded 70*l.*; at the Haymarket, when we began there, they reached 100*l.*, and had increased by the end of our stay to 120*l.*" Here is another remarkable statement: "The word 'failure' is taken to mean the production of a play by which money was lost; in the course of our twenty years of management we had four such catastrophes: 'How She Loves Him,' 'Tame Cats,' 'Wrinkles,' and 'The Merchant of Venice.'" Four failures in five times as many years! How lucky the Bancrofts must consider they were in their times when they look around them and see that in our modern playhouses the proportion of successes to failures is that of about one to four. It is, indeed, on the contrast which they furnish between the theatrical conditions of thirty or forty years ago and those of our day that the piquancy of these memoirs largely depends.

Discussing the two questions of why he and Mrs. Bancroft, as she then was, left the Prince of Wales's for the Haymarket and why they retired from management, Sir Squire in answering the first point reminds us that during their conduct of their two houses fifteen new theatres were opened. In explanation of his retirement he quotes the "sordid" reason that they realized a profit of 15,000*l.* in six months at the Haymarket, but also adds that their chief difficulty, through ever-increasing opposition, was that of "keeping together what for many years had been a picked company." May not another reason have been that with a larger playhouse and a kind of play expected of them which required more spectacular and therefore costly illustration, they found themselves involved in a highly speculative policy, and therefore shrewdly resolved to abandon their management while it was still supremely successful and showed the splendid profits already mentioned?

On the whole the figures and financial details are the most interesting features of this book, which is not without "padding." Still, it contains reminiscences of the notable playwrights with whom its authors came in contact—Tom Taylor, Wilkie Collins, H. J. Byron, T. W. Robertson, and Sardou—as well as an abundance of amusing anecdotes. It was Byron who, when he had remonstrated with a provincial landlady over the sleepless night he had passed under her roof, and been told indignantly that there was not a single flea in her house, replied: "I am sure of it too; they are all married and have large families." Edmund Yates figures as the hero in another of Sir Squire's tales. He was at table d'hôte abroad with Sir Arthur Sullivan, and the latter had drawn his attention to a pretty woman some seats distant from them. Yates the better to see her rose from his chair, whereupon Sullivan rapped on the table and called out, "Hear! Hear!" as if for a speech. The attention of the guests was attracted, but Yates was still absorbed, till suddenly he perceived his ludicrous position and sat down "positively blushing." Sardou Sir Squire portrays thus:—

"He was a small, nervous, lean, and wiry man, shabbily dressed, wearing an old smoking cap, his throat enveloped in a white silk muffler—et tonjours souffrant, he being a martyr to neuralgia. His head in those days, when he was only 47, struck me as a mixture of familiar points in pictures of Napoleon, Voltaire, and a typical Jesuit father, while his smile was almost as telling as Henry Irving's."

Naturally Sir Squire has some significant allusions to Irving. He talks of the wonderful refinement which came upon his friend's features—in later years, he is quick to add; in earlier days "there was a smack of the country actor in his appearance....even a suggestion of a type immortalised by Dickens." Sir Squire is loud, too, in praise of Irving's generosity and genius; but he does not seem to have found the atmosphere of autocracy at the Lyceum particularly agreeable, for he remarks: "My wife and I had been content to choose plays without regard to ourselves: the policy at the Lyceum was on another plane." He tells us also how he vainly tried to induce Irving, after Ellen Terry's success in 'Much Ado,' to stage 'As You Like It,' and how he mentioned Terriss for Orlando, Forbes Robertson for Jacques, and Fernandez for the banished Duke, and urged that Ellen Terry should be allowed, "while still young, to show us Rosalind," only to be met with the answer: "Good—good!—but where do I come in?" "Touchstone," he was told, and the suggestion did not please. Sir Squire adds:—

"'King John' and 'King Richard II.' were other plays I more than once in friendly talk ventured to urge upon him; while he allowed all his own wealth of ideas concerning a grand production of 'Julius Caesar,' for which he had splendid help from Alma Tadema, to slide away and vanish, losing eventually the opportunity of playing Brutus, and casting Forbes Robertson and Terriss for Cassius and Marc Antony."

In 1878, he says, he assured Irving that success could be achieved as readily at the Lyceum as at the old Prince of Wales's ('Diplomacy' was then running) if money were spent freely and wisely. "I adhere to my belief," now asserts Sir Squire, "but wide is the difference between spending and wasting." He also narrates a curious story about Irving's hacking to pieces a portrait of himself—"a clever likeness, but not a pleasant one"—painted by Mr. Sargent, and exhibited in 1888 at the Academy.

Irving, he informs us, once consoled with him over his having been so closely associated with the 'Caste' comedies: "What a pity, for your own sake; for no actor can be remembered long who does not appear in the classical drama." Let Sir Squire Bancroft take comfort. He and the light-hearted actress who first portrayed Polly Eccles, and gave us a famous Lady Teazle and Peg Woffington, are sure of their place in stage-history. There is no playgoer to-day but owes them a debt of gratitude. So long as Robertson's name is remembered, theirs can never be forgotten as pioneers in the development of our modern drama.

ERRATUM.—No. 4256, p. 612, col. 3, l. 33 from foot, for "Gainsborough" read Guisborough.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—D. L. P.—S. C. G.—G. P.—A. L.—A. R. W.—Received. D. B.—G. A. D.—Not suitable for us.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications. We cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
ARROWSMITH	659
AUTHORS' AGENTS	634
BELL & SONS	656
BISHOP'S VARALETES	658
BLACKWOOD & SONS	657
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS	635
CATALOGUES	634
CONSTABLE & Co.	636
DUCKWORTH & Co.	635
EDUCATIONAL	633
EXHIBITIONS	633
GREEN & SONS	635
HARPER & BROS.	659
INSURANCE COMPANIES	658
LECTURES	633
LONGMANS & Co.	659
MACLEHOSE & SONS	636
MACMILLAN & Co.	636
MAGAZINES, &c.	658
METHUEN & Co.	634
MISCELLANEOUS	633
PRINTERS	634
SALES BY AUCTION	634
SHIPPING	658
SITUATIONS VACANT	633
SITUATIONS WANTED	633
SOCIETIES	633
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	634
UNWIN	660

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

NOW READY, crown 4to, 15*s.* net.

MODERN HOMES.

Selected Examples of Dwelling-Houses Described and Illustrated.

By T. RAFFLES DAVISON, Hon. A.R.I.B.A.

With a Foreword by Sir ASTON WEBB, R.A., and nearly 300 Illustrations, chiefly from Pen-Drawings by the Author.

A book of typical specimens of modern country-house architecture, which should appeal to all who are interested in modern architecture, or who are contemplating building.

A STORY OF SUSSEX. NOW READY, cloth, 6*s.*

STARBRACE.

By SHEILA KAYE SMITH,

Author of 'The Tramping Methodist.'

In her new story Miss Kaye Smith provides a worthy successor to her first novel 'The Tramping Methodist,' which was very well received last year. Like its predecessor, it gives a graphic and vivid picture of eighteenth-century life in Sussex.

JUST PUBLISHED, fcap. 8vo, 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

LONDON'S LURE.

An Anthology of Prose and Verse Passages bearing on London.

By HELEN and LEWIS MELVILLE.

With Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers designed by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

"Here we have a collection of what a number of people, famous more or less, have written about London, and a very fine collection it is. The arrangement is admirable." Spectator.

Crown 8vo, 6*s.* net.

THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Newly Translated, with Introduction and Notes,

By E. E. C. GOMME, B.A.

An entirely new and literal translation, chiefly from the Parker MS, but extracts have been made from the other MSS. wherever the difference of phraseology or fact justified their insertion. A very elaborate index is a special feature of this edition.

THE QUEEN'S TREASURE SERIES.

Crown 8vo, each with 8 Coloured Plates and Decorated Title-Page, Covers, and End-Papers, 2*s.* 6*d.* net each.

NEW VOLUMES.

JAN OF THE WINDMILL.

By Mrs. EWING.

Illustrated by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

MRS. OVERTHEWAY'S REMEMBRANCES.

By Mrs. EWING.

Illustrated by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

"The new series of Bohn's Libraries, on which judicious bookbuyers have long learned to keep a careful eye."—Athenæum.

This well-known Series now includes upwards of 800 Volumes of Standard Works in English Literature, and Translations from the Classics and all the Modern Languages on

HISTORY
BIOGRAPHY
ARCHÆOLOGY
THEOLOGY TOPOGRAPHY
ANTIQUITIES

SCIENCE NATURAL HISTORY
PHILOSOPHY
POETRY ART
FICTION

With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference. Price 3*s.* 6*d.* or 5*s.* per Volume (with exceptions). A Detailed Catalogue of the Libraries will be sent on application.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

BLACKWOODS' BOOKS.

ON JUNE 8.

LIFE OF FIELD-MARSHAL SIR NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, G.C.B.

By G. W. FORREST, C.I.E., Author of 'History of the Indian Mutiny,' &c.

18s. net.

"One of the most splendid officers and gallant gentlemen who ever graced the roll of the Army that won for us an Empire." For some years before her death in 1899, at the age of eighty-three, Miss Harriet Chamberlain devoted much labour and time to collating a vast number of letters and documents which referred to the careers of her brothers—Sir Neville and Sir Crawford Chamberlain. These papers were put at Mr. Forrest's disposal in writing the biography.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SOME MEMORIES OF MY SPARE TIME, 1856-1885.

By General the Right Hon. Sir HENRY BRACKENBURY, G.C.B.

5s. net.

THE GREEN CURVE.

By OLE-LUK-OIE. 6s.

Depicts the Realities of War.

Press Opinions.—"Powerful," "Vivid," "Remarkable," "Forceful and sincere," "Entertaining," "Convincing," "Fascinating," "Most readable," and "Notably good."

FIFTY YEARS OF IT.

The Experiences and Struggles of a Volunteer of 1859.

By the Right Hon. LORD KINGSBURGH, K.C.B. (J. H. A. Macdonald), Lord Justice Clerk.

10s. 6d. net.

"Full of things which will contribute both to the amusement and the instruction of the general reader."—Daily News.

"Admirable; as a book for the general reader it will successfully compete for the favour of all who are in search of information or entertainment."—Scotsman.

"Should be read by every Territorial."—Daily Mail.

THE ENGLISHWOMAN IN INDIA.

By MAUD DIVER, Author of 'Captain Desmond, V.C.'

5s. net.

"Mrs. Diver has given us here a very interesting book.....full of puzzles. Still, it is good to have to think about them."—Spectator.

"Gives an excellent idea of the activities of Englishwomen in India."—Birmingham Post.

SIDE TRACKS AND BRIDLE PATHS.

By LIONEL JAMES ("The Intelligence Officer"), Author of 'On the Heels of De Wet.'

Illustrated. 6s.

Mr. James has used his wide travels to the best advantage. In this book he covers ground in Persia, India, Russia, South Africa, Germany, Turkey, and England.

"The book has a welcome up-to-dateness, and provides a very readable volume of varied adventure, observation, and anecdote."—Observer.

"Characterized by the masterly grasp of the subject, the same terse and forceful expression of the author's meaning that went so far to give his earlier books the success they achieved."—Scotsman.

THE PLACE OF HISTORY IN EDUCATION.

By J. W. ALLEN, formerly Brackenbury Exhibitioner, Hulsean Professor of Modern History at Bedford College, University of London.

5s. net.

"Exceedingly interesting and written with a clearness and liveliness which give it an honourable position amongst discussions of this kind."—Daily Telegraph.

THE BEST method of teaching a child is by appealing to its imagination.
THE BEST book of 'English History' is therefore:—

STORIES OF THE ENGLISH.

Told to a Child.

By "F."

"If history can be given a form likely to make it palatable to young folks, 'F' has succeeded in doing so in these 'Stories of the English.' The book begins with 'The Coming of the White Horse' (A.D. 449); it ends with Waterloo. In what might be described as a postscript, 'F' makes plain the moral which she has endeavoured to point in the preceding pages. It is no exaggeration to say that the book represents not only a masterpiece in literature for children, but a work of no slight value for the national good. It leads the child on and up through British history to a realisation of what citizenship of such an Empire as Britain means. 'Stories of the English' should find a welcome in every household, and when the season of gifts comes round it should not be forgotten. Fifty striking illustrations conclude with the famous picture of Napoleon on board the Bellerophon."—Scotsman.

6/- NOVELS. 6/-

CECILIA KIRKHAM'S SON.

By Mrs. KENNETH COMBE.

"A clever and true study; an interesting and very readable book."—Daily Chronicle.

"Combined with a charming love story there is the interest of a detective tale."—Manchester Guardian.

"This clever story."—Spectator.

"This very able novel...enriched by touches of great charm."—Dundee Advertiser.

"The whole study is one of rare fascination."—Glasgow Evening News.

"A book of real feeling—a story of delightfully real human beings, loveable and faulty."—Observer.

"A sound piece of work."—Times.

"Well thought out."—Daily Telegraph.

"Indicative of much personal understanding, and a shrewd knowledge of the native."—Globe.

WHERE EVERY PROSPECT PLEASES.

By EDMUND SELLAR.

All who read this author's 'Glentyre' should read this book which Mr. Sellar has just produced—a story of Ceylon.

MARCIA: a Transcript from Life

By MARGUERITE CURTIS, Author of 'The Bias.'

THE AFFAIR ON THE BRIDGE

By MORGAN-DE-GROOT, Author of 'The Bar Sinister.' [Immediately.]

BLACKWOOD

For JUNE contains

"CHARACTERS." By CHARLES WHIBLEY.

A DAY IN A GAME RESERVE. By Major STEVENSON-HAMILTON.

A MAN'S MAN. Chaps. 4-6. By IAN HAY, Author of 'The Right Stuff.'

A SACRED RIVER-HEAD. By Prof. JAMES SULLY.

THE PRISONER OF WAR. By ORIO WILLIAMS.

A JAUNT TO JANINA. By ORIO WILLIAMS.

WITH MY SALAMANDERS. SCHWEINHUND.

DIARY OF RECENT EVENTS IN CONSTANTINOPLE. By ONE ON THE SPOT.

MUSINGS WITHOUT METHOD. University "Reform"—Lord Curzon's Proposals—The Poor Man—Ability or Poverty?—The Duty of the University—Ideals Old and New—Degrees for Women—Convocation to the Rescue!—The Budget—Finance or Revenge—An Unsettled World—The Profits of Literature.

EDITORIAL NOTE—COMTE FERDINAND DE LESSEPS.

Magazines, &c.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER.

JUNE.

THE BUDGET OF 1909. By Harold Cox, M.P.
 A GLANCE AT A WAR HORIZON. By Major-Gen. Sir W. G. Knox, K.C.B.
 FOREWARNED BUT NOT FOREARMED; A WARNING FROM 1870-71. By Col. Lonsdale Hale.
 MR. BIRRELL'S IRISH LAND BILL. By the Right Hon. Sir Horace Plunkett, K.C.V.O.
 A TRIBUTE TO SWINBURNE. By Ernest Rhys.
 PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF ABDUL HAMID II. AND HIS COURT. By Professor A. Vambéry, C.V.O.
 THE FUTURE OF THE PUBLIC-HOUSE. By Edwyn Barclay.
 THE ROYAL ACADEMY AND THE SALON. By H. Heathcote Statham.
 A SWEDISH EXPERIENCE IN EDUCATION. By Lady Darwin.
 HENRY VIII. AND THE RELIGIOUS HOUSES OF LONDON. By the Rev. G. Monroe Royce.
 THE VINDICATORS OF SHAKESPEARE: A REPLY TO SIR EDWARD SULLIVAN. By George G. Greenwood, M.P.
 COPYRIGHT AT HOME AND ABROAD. By W. Morris Colles.
 THE BALANCE OF NAVAL POWER AND THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE. By Archibald S. Hurd.
 THE BAGHDAD RAILWAY AND THE QUESTION OF BRITISH CO-OPERATION. By Arthur von Gwinner (Governor of the Deutsche Bank).
 London: SPOTTISWOODE & CO., Ltd., 5, New Street Square.

CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

Edited by Sir PERCY BUNTING.

No. 522. JUNE. 2s. 6d.

THE BUDGET. By Lord Welby.
 FRENCH LABOUR UNIONS v. THE STATE. By Alexander Ular.
 THE PERSONAL EQUATION IN THEOLOGY. By Alfred E. Garvie.
 THE ETHICS OF GREEK ART. By L. March Philipps.
 PUBLIC SCHOOL EDUCATION IN ENGLAND AND ITS CHANGES DURING THE LAST FIFTY YEARS. By the Rev. Canon Wilson, sometime Head Master of Clifton College.
 BULLS. By Jack London.
 TURKEY: Developments and Forecasts. By Edwin Pears.
 SHAKESPEARE AND THE MODERN GERMAN STAGE. By Eulenspiegel.
 DARWINISM AND WALLACEISM. By Prof. A. A. W. Hubrecht.
 FOREIGN AFFAIRS: Turkey: The Russian Crisis. By Dr. E. J. Dillon.
 LITERARY SUPPLEMENT:—
 A PROPHET MALGRÉ LUI. By Hugh E. P. Platt.
 REVIEWS OF BOOKS.
 INDEX TO VOL. XCV.
 London: HORACE MARSHALL & SON.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

FOR JUNE.

Price One Shilling.

Contents.

THE PALADIN. Chaps. 13-15. By Horace Annesley Vachell.
 LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF A TRAMP. By J. A. H. With a Preface by Stanley J. Weyman.
 THE RISE OF MOULAI EL HAFID. By L. J. Brown.
 SARAH WILSON. By Wilfrid Wilson Gibson.
 THE GIRL WITH ONLY ONE TALENT. By W. E. Norris.
 A FORGOTTEN BOTANIST OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By Canon John Vaughan.
 WILDFOWL AND PARLAKIMEDI. By Edmund Candler.
 OLD SANDY. By Austin Phillips.
 ANTI-JACOBITE CONSPIRACIES. By Andrew Lang.
 PRISCILLA OF THE 'GOOD INTENT.' Chaps. 24-25. (Conclusion.) By Halliwell Sutcliffe.
 London:
 SMITH, ELDER & CO. 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine

Street, London, W.C., MAY 29, contains:—

THE NEW LABOUR SCHEME.
 THE SECOND TEMPLE AT JERUSALEM.
 ARCHITECTURE AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.—III.
 SURVEYORS' INSTITUTION:—ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING.
 HOME ARTS AND INDUSTRIES EXHIBITION.
 THE INCORPORATED CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY.
 ILLUSTRATIONS:—
 A DESIGN FOR THE ETON MEMORIAL;
 OFFICES FOR THE PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, ABERDEEN; REBUILDING UPPER GROSVENOR STREET;
 INTERIOR OF AN AGENCY;
 THE BEAUFORT GATEWAY, ST. CROSS HOSPITAL.

ALSO SEE

THE BUILDER of May 15, page 586,
 for Conditions of a Prize Competition for a
 FOUNTAIN for a PUBLIC GARDEN

The Proprietors of the Builder offer a
 FIRST PRIZE OF £20

and a

SECOND PRIZE OF £10

for the two best DESIGNS for a FOUNTAIN for a PUBLIC GARDEN.
 Drawings are to be sent in by JUNE 28. The award will be made by the Editor of the Builder, in conjunction with Prof. Lethaby and Mr. Walter Cave, who have kindly consented to act as joint assessors.

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all Newsagents.

Shipping.

PLEASURE CRUISES.

SPITZBERGEN.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 5.

JULY 1 to JULY 27.

SPITZBERGEN, NORWAY, &c.

Fares from 30 guineas.

NORWAY.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 6.

JULY 29 to AUGUST 11.

No. 7.

AUGUST 13 to AUGUST 26.

THE NORWEGIAN FJORDS.

BY Fares from 12 Guineas.

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT "VECTIS."

Insurance Companies.

HOLIDAY SEASON.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS, SICKNESS,
 EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY, AND
 FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

Capital (fully subscribed), £1,000,000. Claims paid, £5,600,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

EVERY MAN

Whose estate will be liable for duty should read

A POPULAR FALLACY.

Sent post free on application to the

NATIONAL PROVIDENT
INSTITUTION

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

48 Gracechurch Street, London.

HIGHEST AWARDS.

CORK, 1883. LIVERPOOL, 1886. PARIS, 1886. ADELAIDE, 1887.

PARIS, 1889. CHICAGO, 1893. PARIS, 1900. ST. LOUIS, 1904.

FRANCO-BRITISH, 1908.

OLD BUSHMILLS.

Have you tried this—the Prize-Winning Whisky?

From all Wine Merchants.

Address of nearest Agent sent on application.

"OLD BUSHMILLS" DISTILLERY CO., LTD.,

20, Mark Lane, E.C.

ARE YOU INVITING GOUT?

THE STEALTHY APPROACH OF URIC
ACID ILLS.

Do you know how treacherously gouty ailments steal over the system?

Among the most common of the warning indications of the gouty habit are a sense of lassitude and incapacity for work, an exhausted feeling of mind and body, general and mental depression, slight feverish attacks, especially in the evening, headaches, cold and clammy hands and feet, poor appetite, flatulence, heartburn, and other symptoms of indigestion. Among more unmistakable signs of the menace of gout are irritation and burning of the skin, not necessarily attended by redness, while small lumps form on the arms, ankles, finger joints, eyelids, or outer rim of the ear. Some particular muscle or joint may be attacked by a dull, steady pain, often attended by inflammation, swelling, or stiffness. Or perhaps sharp shooting pains occur and last for a few days, especially in cold, wet weather, or after exposure or over-exertion.

EARLY SIGNS OF GOUT.

The early symptoms of gout are usually such that the sufferer is apt to say he is "just a trifle liverish." As a matter of fact, the liver is responsible to a great extent for the symptoms described, simply because it fails in one of its most important duties—that of working with the kidneys to eliminate the excess of uric acid from the body. It is this excess of uric acid which in time sets up the excruciating pain and the swelling and stiffness that characterize gout and the various allied complaints, such as rheumatic gout, sciatica, lumbago, gouty rheumatism, stone, gravel, neuritis, gouty eczema, and kidney complaints.

All persons who suffer from any of the minor symptoms we have described should take steps to remove from the system the uric acid and uratic accumulations with which the whole of the tissues, organs, and joints have become impregnated, to check their further formation.

The only remedy that can accomplish this double result is a thorough uric acid solvent and eliminant, such as Bishop's Varalettes. Until this remedy is adopted the gouty habit is bound to gain in power, to strengthen its hold upon the system, and cause more serious trouble as the years go on. Not to adopt this remedy when one begins to suffer from pain and fullness after meals, indigestion, flatulence, and heartburn, is tantamount to inviting a gouty future.

But if you are too late to check the approach of gout, if it has taken a firm hold on your system, there still exists for you a means of relief.

No matter what stage any gouty ailment has reached, no matter what phase it may have assumed, Bishop's Varalettes are the one remedy that can overcome the complaint and bring complete relief from all gouty suffering.

Bishop's Varalettes may be taken in any beverage, hot or cold. They dissolve instantly with brisk effervescence, and are quite tasteless. Their unrivalled popularity is accounted for by the fact that they are as pleasant and convenient to take as they are efficacious. They may be had of all chemists, 1s., 2s., 5s. (25 days' treatment), or direct from the sole makers, whose address is given below.

URIC ACID ILLS EXPLAINED.

A knowledge of certain facts enables the gouty subject to maintain perfect health, and it is with the view of placing these facts within his or her reach that Messrs. Bishop have issued a little book, full of practical hints. It tells what to eat, drink, and avoid, and describes all the principal forms of gouty ailments. It explains how Bishop's Varalettes act, and why their use is followed by the disappearance of the symptoms. Send for free copy of Booklet V., to Alfred Bishop, Limited, Manufacturing Chemists (Est. 1857), 48, Spelman Street, London, N.E.

Bishop's Varalettes may be had of the leading chemists in every country. Our principal general Agents abroad are:—
 AUSTRALIA.—Potter & Birks, 1½, Macquarie Place, Sydney, N.S.W.

INDIA.—Mr. W. Moore, c/o Grindlay Groom & Co., Bombay.
 UNITED STATES.—Lehn & Fink, 120, William Street, New York.

SPAIN.—Foye y Gimenez, Calle Gerona, 4 pral, Barcelona.
 FRANCE.—Roberts et Cie, 5, Rue de la Paix, Paris.

RUSSIA.—Mr. F. Brempe, Serpoukhovskaya Street, 171 St. Petersburg.

HARPER & BROTHERS

A NEW VOLUME BY

MARK TWAIN

IS SHAKESPEARE DEAD

Now Ready. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A serious book full of humour. In the guise of fun, it is a real contribution to the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy. It has all the merriment and keen analysis of Mark Twain at his best.

A NICE PAIR. By HENRY J. BARKER, Author of 'Merry Moments with Scholars.' 3s. 6d.
Humorous stories of an East Coast village.

THE RUBAIYAT OF BRIDGE. By CAROLYN WELLS, Author of 'The Rubaiyat of a Motor Car.' Illustrated by W. M. PRESTON. 2s. net.
"Irresistible. So apt, so bright, so smartly to the point."
Daily Chronicle.

IKONA CAMP. By COLIN FITZGERALD. 3s. 6d.
"A gay Thames narrative reminiscent of 'Three Men in a Boat.'"—Field.

MERRY MOMENTS. By HENRY J. BARKER, Author of 'The Comic Side of School Life,' &c. 1s. net.
"Full of good stories which make very entertaining reading."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

NEW 6/- FICTION

KATRINE. By ELINOR MACARTNEY LANE.
"The author of 'Nancy Stair' has not lost her art. Has a refreshing atmosphere and its figures are delightful."
Globe.

THE INNER SHRINE. ANONYMOUS. With Illustrations by FRANK CRAIG.
The work of an author whose novels have won distinction by their searching analysis and delicate portrayal of modern life.

THE PLANTER. By HERMAN WHITAKER, Author of 'The Settler.'
A thrilling romance, set amidst the Indian slavery in Mexico of to-day.

WALLACE RHODES. By NORAH DAVIS, Author of 'The Northerner.'
"Excites the reader's interest unceasingly until the end."
Scotsman.

HARPER'S LIBRARY OF LIVING THOUGHT

Fcap. 8vo. Per vol.: cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

PROF. SVANTE ARRHENIUS.—THE LIFE OF THE UNIVERSE. 2 vols. Illustrated.

LEO TOLSTOY.—THE TEACHING OF JESUS.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.—PERSONAL RELIGION IN EGYPT BEFORE CHRISTIANITY.

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.—THREE PLAYS OF SHAKESPEARE.

PROF. WILLIAM WREDE.—THE ORIGIN OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

PROF. C. H. BECKER.—CHRISTIANITY AND ISLAM.

SIR OLIVER LODGE.—THE ETHER OF SPACE. Illustrated.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

JUNE NUMBER

7 Complete Stories by JUSTUS MILES FORMAN, ALICE BROWN, RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, &c.

THE SOUTHERNMOST PEOPLE OF THE WORLD. By CHARLES W. FURLONG, F.R.G.S.

WARDOUR STREET ENGLISH. By PROF. T. R. LOUNSBURY.

60 Illustrations by HOWARD PYLE, FRANK CRAIG, ANDRE CASTAIGNE, E. SHIPPEN GREEN, &c.

HARPER & BROTHERS, 45, Albemarle Street, W.

ARROWSMITH'S NEW AND RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

An Autobiographical Memoir.

Edited by GEO. W. and LUCY A. JOHNSON,

With an Introduction by JAMES STUART, M.A. LL.D.

With Photogravure Frontispiece and 4 other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, pp. xii-318, 6s. net.

"ME AND MY TRUE LOVE."

H. A. MITCHELL KEAYS, Author of 'It was a Boy,' &c. 6s.

DROMINA. JOHN AYSCOUGH.

THE MAN WHO WAS THURSDAY.

G. K. CHESTERTON.

A ROMAN TRAGEDY AND OTHERS.

JOHN AYSCOUGH (Shortly.)

OUR BYE-ELECTION.

ROSALINE MASSON.

ANGEL ESQUIRE.

EDGAR WALLACE.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO. LTD.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s LIST.

 Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VII., IX., X., XI., and XII. are now ready, 7s. 6d. net each.

THE

Political History of England

NEW VOLUME JUST PUBLISHED.

Vol. IX. From the Accession of Anne to the Death of George II. (1702-1760).

By I. S. LEADAM, M.A.

With 8 Maps. 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

The Colonies and Imperial Defence.

By P. A. SILBURN, D.S.O., late Major, Natal Permanent Force. Crown 8vo, 5s. (Inland postage 4d.)

Memoir of George Howard

Wilkinson, Bishop of St. Andrews. By ARTHUR JAMES MASON, D.D. With Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 28s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

"It only remains to thank Dr. Mason very heartily for the book he has given us."—Guardian.

"This is a deeply interesting record of a remarkable life."
St. Andrews Citizen.

The Springs of Helicon: a Study in the Progress of English Poetry from Chaucer to Milton. By J. W. MACKAIL, M.A.

LL.D., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

"And the same union of classic and romantic qualities invigorates the book's whole technique, making it memorable merely as a piece of writing."—Manchester Guardian.

The Annual Register: a Review

of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1908. 8vo, 18s. (Inland postage 5d.)

 Volumes of the 'Annual Register' for the years 1863-1907 can still be had, price 18s. each.

The Mystery of Existence in the Light of an Optimistic Philosophy. By

CHARLES WICKSTEED ARMSTRONG, Associate of the Society for Psychical Research, London. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

Human Economics. Books I. & II.

Natural Economy and Cosmopolitan Economy. By ARTHUR H. GIBSON, F.C.A. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Industrial Efficiency: a Comparative Study of Industrial Life in England, Germany, and America. By ARTHUR SHAD-

WELL, M.D. Crown 8vo, 6s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

"This is, perhaps, the most valuable and suggestive contribution to the burning question of international competition in industry that has yet been written."

Chamber of Commerce Journal.

The Sermon of the Sea, and other Studies. By the Rev. ROBERT KANE, S.J. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

These Studies, by a well-known Jesuit preacher, are an attempt at the expression of the great thoughts which come to all who listen reverently to Nature and Nature's God.

The Minnesingers. By JETHRO

BITHELL, M.A. Vol. I. TRANSLATIONS. Royal 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

"The book would please any devoted reader of love-poetry, and its notes, packed with concise and well-digested erudition, give it a peculiar value for English students of German literature."—Scotsman.

Poems. By W. J. CAMERON. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

net. (Inland postage 3d.)
"The book will delight lovers of good verse."
Dundee Advertiser.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

SOME IMPORTANT BOOKS

RECENTLY PUBLISHED BY MR. T. FISHER UNWIN.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.

By the Rev. L. S. MILFORD. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The editor has been successful in collecting much fresh information about the early days of the school, and the description of recent developments will serve to accentuate the contrast between September, 1862, and September, 1908.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE COUNTY COASTS SERIES.

THE NORFOLK AND SUFFOLK COAST.

By W. A. DUTT. With about 40 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

This series deals with the history and romance of coast life.

THE BURIED CITY OF KENFIG.

By THOMAS GRAY. With a Map and Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Gray has rendered valued service in providing a deeply interesting and informing volume. He has gathered in exhaustive research a great amount of data, upon which has been built up a record that is eminently acceptable." Bristol Mercury.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

TURKEY IN REVOLUTION.

By CHARLES RODEN BUXTON. With a Map and 33 Illustrations. 7s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Buxton had an opportunity of seeing and hearing things in the best quarter for information, and the result, whether or not it be history as time will finally write, is a very vivid, picturesque account of the transformation of Turkey."—Daily Chronicle.

THE PANAMA CANAL AND ITS MAKERS.

By VAUGHAN CORNISH, D.Sc. F.R.G.S. With a Map and 63 Illustrations from the Author's Photographs. Cloth, 5s.

"The author of this concise account of the history, the progress, and the possibilities of a gigantic enterprise is to be congratulated on the skilful manner in which he has compressed an enormous amount of information and many valuable opinions and observations into a very small space."—Standard.

THAT ROCK GARDEN OF OURS.

By Prof. F. E. HULME, F.L.S. With 8 Coloured Plates and 42 other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"Prof. F. E. Hulme, who is an authority on horticulture, here describes the rock garden he has made, and gives a great deal of interesting plant lore, as well as many practical hints."—Standard.

ELIZA BRIGHTWEN:

The Life and Thoughts of a Naturalist.

Edited by W. H. CHESSON. With 2 Portraits and an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. 5s. net.

The autobiography of the author of 'Wild Nature Won by Kindness.'

"It has the same sincerity and freshness of observation as have made her nature-books so popular."—Scotsman.

THE PLACE OF ANIMALS IN HUMAN THOUGHT.

By Countess MARTINENGO-CESARESCO. With Photogravure Frontispiece with 32 other Illustrations. 12s. 6d. net.

"If, taking my earnest advice, you read 'The Place of Animals in Human Thought,' you will enjoy a most stimulating and curious experience."—Sunday Chronicle.

"The sort of book which makes the reader idly long for Macaulay's memory in which to store all the delightful things which the author has told and shown him. Stories, quotations, comments, and pictures are all alike good." Spectator.

PEACE, POWER, AND PLENTY.

By O. S. MARDEN. 4s. 6d. net.

This book, written from an idealistic and optimistic standpoint, will appeal to readers who are interested in the Christian Science and Higher Thought movement. Among the titles of the chapters are the following: The Power of the Mind to Compel the Body; Poverty a Mental Disability; The Law of Opulence; Character-Building and Health-Building during Sleep; Health through Right Thinking; Mental Chemistry; Imagination and Health; How Suggestion influences Health; Why Grow Old, &c.

CHRIST AND THE EASTERN SOUL;

Or the Witness of the Oriental Consciousness to Jesus Christ.

Lectures delivered on the Barrows Foundation in India and Ceylon in the Cold Season of 1906. By the late CHARLES CUTHBERT HALL, President of the Union Theological Seminary, 6s. 6d. net.

THE TEACHING OF JESUS ABOUT THE FUTURE.

By Dr. HENRY BURTON SHARMAN. 13s. 6d. net.

Based on a critical examination of the Synoptic Gospels, this book calls for the serious attention of students of the New Testament.

THE PAPACY:

The Idea and its Exponents.

By GUSTAV KRÜGER. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

There has hitherto been no succinct and comprehensive history of the Papacy. It is believed that this volume, by one of the foremost German authorities on ecclesiastical history, will supply a want, since it gives a clear, concise, and impartial account of the development of the Papacy from the earliest times to the accession of Pius X.

THE FAITH OF A MODERN PROTESTANT.

By Prof. W. BOUSSET, Author of 'What is Religion?' Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"One could hardly get a better summary of the attitude of the trained religious thought of to-day towards the Christian faith."—Christian World.

"The book is sure to be widely read, and it deserves to be—for its genuineness, fearlessness, reverence, and spiritual beauty."—British Congregationalist.

NO REFUGE BUT IN TRUTH.

By GOLDWIN SMITH. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

In these papers on religious and ethical problems Prof. Goldwin Smith writes not as a teacher, but an inquirer, seeking for truth and open to conviction. The papers deal in an unusually stimulating way with such questions as 'New Faith linked with Old,' 'The Limits of Evolution,' 'The Immortality of the Soul,' 'Is there to be a Revolution in Ethics?' and 'The Religious Situation.'

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

By V. R. ARONSON, M.A. B.C.L. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"There must always be room for a law book so thorough-going as this learned treatise."—Scotsman.

PSYCHOLOGY AND CRIME.

By HUGO MUNSTERBERG. Cloth, 5s. net.

"This is a fascinating and suggestive book, written by one who is well known as an expert in the subject of Experimental Psychology."—Glasgow Herald.

"This book is as wholesome as it is interesting; and it is interesting in extraordinarily high degree."—Public.

THE PASSING OF THE TARIFF.

By RAYMOND L. BRIDGMAN. 3s. 6d. net.

"This is a powerful exposition of the working of Protection in the United States."—Spectator.

THE "CHATS" SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

CHATS ON ENGLISH EARTHENWARE.

By ARTHUR HAYDEN, Author of 'Chats on English China,' &c. With a Coloured Frontispiece and 80 Full-Page Plates. 5s. net.

A companion volume to 'Chats on English China.' This practical guide deals with the rise and progress of earthenware in England.

NOTABLE 6/- NOVELS FOR HOLIDAY READING.

HENRY IN SEARCH OF A WIFE.

By ALPHONSE COURLANDER, Author of 'Eve's Apple,' 'The Sacrifice,' &c.

OLIVE IN ITALY.

By MORAY DALTON. A New Volume in the "First Novel" Library.

THE SLAVE GIRL OF AGRA.

By ROMESH DUTT, C.I.E., Author of 'The Lake of Palms.'

A FAMILY OF INFLUENCE.

By W. H. WILLIAMSON, Author of 'The Traitor's Wife,' &c.

THE CANON'S DILEMMA.

By VICTOR L. WHITECHURCH, Author of 'The Canon in Residence.'

ASK FOR

THE SHILLING EDITIONS OF THE BLUE LAGOON.

By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE.

THE CANON IN RESIDENCE.

By VICTOR L. WHITECHURCH.

SOME EMOTIONS AND A MORAL and THE SINNER'S COMEDY.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.

A STUDY IN TEMPTATIONS and A BUNDLE OF LIFE.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.

THE WISE TRAVELLER USES

BAEDEKER'S GUIDES

T. FISHER UNWIN, 1, Adelphi Terrace, London.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4258.

SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM.
13, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.
INTERESTING HOUSE AND ART COLLECTION.
OPEN FREE, between 10.30 and 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS
THURSDAYS, and FRIDAYS to the end of AUGUST.

Lectures.

THE BRITISH ACADEMY.

THE SCHWEICH LECTURES ON BIBLICAL ARCHEOLOGY.
The Rev. R. H. KENNETT, B.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge, Fellow of Queens' College, Canon of Ely, will deliver THREE PUBLIC LECTURES on FRIDAYS, May 28, June 4, and 11, at 5 o'clock, in THE THEATRE, BURLINGTON HOUSE, BURLINGTON GARDENS, W. (Vigo Street), on 'The Composition of the Book of Isaiah in the Light of Archaeology and History.'
The Lectures are open to the Public free, and without invitation.

Exhibitions.

CLAUSEN. FRANCIS JAMES.
Sixty Paintings and Drawings by G. Clausen, R.A. R.W.S., and Water-Colours of Flowers by Francis James, A.R.W.S.
THE LEICESTER GALLERIES, Leicester Square.

THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB.
1st EXHIBITION OF MODERN PICTURES at the GALLERIES of the R.E.A., Suffolk Street, Pall Mall, S.W.
OPEN DAILY from 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. Admission 1s.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall, S.W.
The 96th Exhibition of Pictures now open
SELECTED WORKS BY
M. MARIS. H. HARPIGNIES.
J. ISRAELS. L. LHERMITTE.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL—SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION OF PORTRAITS and LANDSCAPES
by EARLY BRITISH and FOREIGN MASTERS is NOW OPEN.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King Street, St. James's.

Provident Institutions.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.
Funds exceed 32,400l.

Office: 15 and 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:
The Right Hon. THE EARL OF ROSEBERY, K.G. K.T.

President:
Col. The Hon. HARRY L. W. LAWSON, M.A. J.P.

Treasurer:

THE LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

OBJECTS.—This Institution was established in 1839 in the City of London, under the Presidency of the late Alderman Harmer, for granting Pensions and Temporary Assistance to principals and assistants engaged as vendors of Newspapers.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man or Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits, upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such Members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number Thirty-six, the Men receiving 25l. and the Women 20l. per annum each.

The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," commemorating the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides 20l. a year each for Six Widows of News-vendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25l., and One Woman, 20l., and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employés of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25l. per annum for one man, in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who died May 12, 1899.

The principal features of the Rules governing election to all Pensions are, that each Candidate shall have been (1) a Member of the Institution for not less than ten years preceding application; (2) not less than fifty-five years of age; (3) engaged in the sale of Newspapers for at least ten years.

RELIEF.—Temporary relief is given in cases of distress, not only to Members of the Institution, but to News-vendors or their servants who may be recommended for assistance by Members of the Institution. Inquiry is made in such cases by Visiting Committees, and relief is awarded in accordance with the merits and requirements of each case.

W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

Educational.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.

The NEXT DATE for sending in WORKS for the EXAMINATION for Admission to the Academy Schools of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, is THURSDAY, July 1.

All particulars can be obtained on application to the Secretary, Royal Academy, Piccadilly, W.

By Order,
FRED. A. EATON, Secretary

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION
for FILLING about TWENTY VACANCIES on the FOUNDATION will be held on TUESDAY, June 22, and Following Days—For particulars of the Examination application should be made to the Bursar, Mr. S. BEWSHER, St. Paul's School, Hammersmith Road, W.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION will be held on JUNE 22, 24, and 25 to FILL UP NOT LESS THAN SEVEN RESIDENTIAL and TWO NON-RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS and also some EXHIBITIONS. For particulars apply by letter to THE BURSAR, Little Dean's Yard, S.W.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

Fraulein BLUTH, Kapellenstr. 58, Wiesbaden, late of St. George's High School, Edinburgh, and Fraulein L. BLUTH, late of St. Eiphin's Clergy Daughter School, Warrington, RECEIVE A LIMITED NUMBER of GIRLS for BOARD and EDUCATION. Good Music. Commodious House, with every modern comfort, latest Sanitary Arrangements, and large Garden. Terms 90l. Highest references to Parents of former Pupils: Mrs. Turner, 1, College Gardens, Dulwich Village, London, S.E.; Dr. J. Ritchie, 22, Charlotte Square, Edinburgh; G. Paul, Esq., Friarton Grove, Dundee; and others.
Fraulein Bluth will be in London, Edinburgh, and Dundee in June for personal interviews with Parents.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.
F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.
Preparation for Universities and Professions.
Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.
Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress, St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.—A
HALL OF RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS, situated in CLIFTON, will be OPENED in SEPTEMBER NEXT—For all particulars apply Miss M. C. STAVELEY, M.A., University College, Bristol.

EDUCATION (choice of Schools and Tutors
Gratis). Prospectuses of English and Continental Schools, and of successful Army, Civil Service, and University Tutors, sent (free of charge) on receipt of requirements by GRIFFITHS, SMITH, POWELL & SMITH, School Agents (established 1833), 34, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORS in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

Situations Vacant.

KING'S COLLEGE.

(University of London.)

The COUNCIL invite applications for the following posts:—

1. PROFESSOR OF PHYSICS.

2. LECTURER IN CLASSICS.

Applications should be sent in by JUNE 14.—For conditions apply to the Secretary.

WALTER SMITH, Secretary.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(University of London),

YORK PLACE, LONDON, W.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in FRENCH who will be Head of the Department. The appointment is open to Men and Women equally, and will take effect at the beginning of the Michaelmas Term.

Applications, with thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 19, to the Secretary, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

ETHEL T. MCKNIGHT, Secretary.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(University of London),

YORK PLACE, LONDON, W.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in LATIN who will be Head of the Department. The appointment is open to Men and Women equally, and will take effect at the beginning of the Michaelmas Term.

Applications, with thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 19 to the Secretary, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

ETHEL T. MCKNIGHT, Secretary.

ROYAL HOLLOWAY COLLEGE,

ENGLEFIELD GREEN.

(University of London.)

The GOVERNORS will shortly appoint a LADY as STAFF LECTURER in FRENCH, who will be expected to come into residence in OCTOBER.—Applications, with four copies of Testimonials, should be sent by JUNE 19 to THE PRINCIPAL, from whom all particulars may be obtained.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL AND

COLLEGE.—Applications are invited for the Post of DEMONSTRATOR OF BIOLOGY. Particulars of duties and emoluments may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom ten copies of Application and of not more than three recent Testimonials should be sent before JUNE 17 NEXT.

May 27, 1909.

T. W. SHORE, Dean.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

THE ATHENÆUM is published on FRIDAY AFTERNOON at 2 o'clock.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON. GOLDSMITHS COLLEGE TRAINING DEPARTMENT.

LECTURER IN ENGLISH.
A LECTURER (Man) in ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE will be needed in the above Department in SEPTEMBER, 1909. Initial Salary between 180l. and 250l., according to attainments and experience.
Applications should be received by JUNE 9.—Full particulars can be obtained from THE WARDEN, Goldsmiths College, New Cross, S.E.

THE UNIVERSITY OF SHEFFIELD.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.
The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in EDUCATION and MASTER OF METHOD in connexion with the UNIVERSITY TRAINING COLLEGE. Salary 200l. per annum. Applications must reach the undersigned by JUNE 19.
W. M. GIBBONS, Registrar.
May 29, 1909.

HARTLEY UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, SOUTHAMPTON.

Principal—S. W. RICHARDSON, D.Sc. M.A.
The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invite applications for the appointment of LECTURER in ENGLISH, vacant by the appointment of Mr. T. S. Sterling, B.A., to a post under the India Education Board. Commencing Salary 170l. per annum.
Applications, giving particulars of age, training, qualifications, and experience, with copies of three recent Testimonials, must be sent to the Principal on or before June 19, 1909.
Further Particulars may be obtained upon application to THE REGISTRAR.

PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE
AND LITERATURE WANTED for a NATIVE COLLEGE in INDIA. Honoursman, under 35, and unmarried. Salary Rs. 350, rising to Rs. 450, a Month, non-resident. Free passage. Testimonials and statement of Degree, age, &c., must accompany inquiries.—Address Prof. LEWIS, Cambridge.

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

An ELECTION to the TAYLORIAN PROFESSORSHIP of the ROMANCE LANGUAGES will take place in JULY NEXT. Candidates should send in their applications to THE REGISTRAR OF THE UNIVERSITY, Old Clarendon Building, Oxford, so as to reach him not later than JULY 1. Eight copies of the application, and of any Testimonials submitted, should be sent. The Stipend of the Professorship is 500l. a year.—Particulars as to duties may be obtained from THE REGISTRAR.

CITY AND COUNTY BOROUGH OF BELFAST.

MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL INSTITUTE.
The LIBRARY and TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION COMMITTEE invite applications for the following positions:—
LECTURER IN COMMERCE. Commencing Salary 160l. per annum.

ART MASTER. Commencing Salary 120l. per annum.
Particulars of the duties and conditions of appointment, together with Forms of Application, may be obtained on applying, either personally or by letter, at the office of the Municipal Technical Institute, Belfast.

Applications on the Special Form provided for the purpose must be lodged with the undersigned, not later than 12 noon on WEDNESDAY, June 16, 1909.

Applications should be accompanied by copies of three recent Testimonials (original Testimonials must not be sent).

Canvassing will be held to disqualify a Candidate.

FRAS. C. FORTH, Principal.

KENT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

DARTFORD HIGHER EDUCATION SUB-COMMITTEE.
DARTFORD COUNTY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

WANTED, in SEPTEMBER NEXT, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS for the above-named School. Needlework and General Form Subjects necessary. Preference will be given to a candidate of experience holding a University Degree or its equivalent. Initial Salary 100l. to 110l. per annum according to qualifications and experience, with increments in accordance with the Committee's Scale. Further particulars and Forms of Application may be obtained from THE SECRETARY, County School for Girls, Dartford.—Applications must be forwarded, at as early a date as possible, to Miss A. M. BRETT, County School for Girls, Dartford. Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.

By Order of the Committee,
FRAS. W. CROOK, Secretary.
Canton House, Westminster, June 2, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF WEST HARTLEPOOL, SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL.

The EDUCATION COMMITTEE require a LADY TEACHER who holds a University Degree, who has had teaching experience in a secondary or High School, and who is qualified to teach as main Subjects: French, Mathematics. Subsidiary Latin, History

Salary 130l. per annum.
Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, accompanied by three recent Testimonials, to be sent to me on or before JUNE 15.

Canvassing, directly or indirectly, will disqualify.
J. G. TAYLOR, Secretary.
Education Office, West Hartlepool, May 29, 1909.

WEST SUSSEX AND CHICHESTER JOINT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

CHICHESTER HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Applications are invited for the post of HEAD MISTRESS of the above NEW SCHOOL. It is hoped that the Buildings will be completed and ready for occupation by the middle of September, 1909, and it is desirable that the Head Mistress should enter on her duties at as early a date as possible. Accommodation for 200 Girls of 10 to 18 years of age. The Salary will be 3000, per annum, with a Capitation Grant of 10s. per unit of average attendance for all Pupils up to 150, and 17. per unit for pupils over 150. Applicants must be Graduates of some University in the United Kingdom, or have equivalent qualifications as may be approved by the Board of Education. A copy of the Draft Scheme (which has received the approval of the Board of Education), together with a print of the prescribed Form of Application, may be obtained of the undersigned. Applications, accompanied by copies of not more than three recent Testimonials must be received on or before JUNE 22, 1909.

Personal canvassing will be a disqualification.
LIONEL THOMPSON, Secretary.
Education Offices, Horsham, Sussex.
May 21, 1909.

COUNTY COUNCIL OF THE WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE.

The WEST RIDING EDUCATION COMMITTEE are prepared to receive applications for the post of ORGANIZING MISTRESS for MODERN LANGUAGES (French and German). The Work of the Organizing Mistress will consist chiefly in visiting Secondary Schools in order to assist and supervise the Modern Language work. She will also be required to take charge of certain Teachers' Classes in Modern Languages.

Commencing Salary 2500, per annum.
Applications, addressed to the Education Department, Secondary Branch, County Hall, Wakefield, should arrive not later than MONDAY, June 14, and should be made upon a special Form, which can be obtained on application.

CITY OF LIVERPOOL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

LIVERPOOL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, SHAW STREET.

The COMMITTEE invite applications for a CLASSICAL and HISTORY MASTERSHIP at the above SCHOOL.

High Academic qualifications are essential.
Salary to be at the rate of 1800, per annum.
For further particulars and Forms of Application apply to JAMES G. LEGGE, Director of Education, 14, Sir Thomas Street, Liverpool, with whom applications must be lodged not later than SATURDAY, June 19, 1909.

EDWARD R. PICKMERE,
Clerk to the Local Education Authority.

May 23, 1909.

GOSPORT AND ALVERSTOKE SECONDARY SCHOOL.

An ASSISTANT MASTER is REQUIRED, to commence duties in SEPTEMBER NEXT.

Candidates must be specially qualified in English Language and Literature.

The Salary will commence at 1200, to 1400, rising to 2000, by annual increments of 100.
Further particulars may be obtained from THE HEAD MASTER, to whom applications should be addressed not later than JUNE 10 NEXT.

High Street, Gosport.

RADNORSHIRE EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL.

A MISTRESS, with experience in teaching Mathematics and History, is REQUIRED for the above Secondary School after the Summer Holidays. A Degree or its equivalent is essential. Salary 1200, per annum, non-resident.

Applications, with copies of Testimonials and References, to be sent to THE HEAD MASTER.

SCHOLASTIC. — SEPT. VACANCIES. — (a)

Math. and Engl., 700, res., rising 1000; but to a man qualified in Navigation up to 2000. (b) Classics and Engl., 1400, res., rising 1700. (c) Math., 1400, res., rising 1700. (d) Engl. (incl. Hist.) and Latin, 1400, to 1500, res., or 1700, to 1900, non-res.—Further particulars of the above and of many other vacancies, Senior and Junior, from BIVER & CO., 122, Regent Street, W. (Est. 1858.)

LITERARY SECRETARY REQUIRED by the Editor of an important Weekly Publication. Must be young and energetic. Shorthand indispensable.—Reply, by letter, stating experience, if any, and Salary required, to Box 1061, Sell's Advertising Offices, Fleet Street, London.

Situations Wanted.

SHORTHAND-TYPIST (Expert, Medallist) requires POSITION. Six years' Legal and Commercial experience.—Apply Miss M. P., care of Miss Pepler's Type-Writing Office, 53, New Broad Street, E.C.

TO PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.—ESTIMATING CLERK, who has been with a well-known Publisher for six years, and who previously served his practical apprenticeship in all Branches of a large Printer's, is desirous of a FRESH ENGAGEMENT. Excellent References.—H. W., 81, Farringdon Street, E.C.

Miscellaneous.

MR. FRANK KARSLAKE, Editor of 'Book-Auction Records,' of 'Notes from Sotheby's,' &c., having now more leisure than formerly, is prepared to CONSIDER PROPOSALS for EDITORIAL or other LITERARY WORK, either paid, or on sharing terms, or by results. Mr. Karslake's Publications have the reputation of being produced with great care and accuracy of detail, and have been pronounced successes.—Address, in writing, to 35, Pond Street, Hampstead, London, N.W.

ACCURATE RESEARCH and GENEALOGICAL WORK undertaken by R. M. GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Advice also supplied to Persons drawing up their own Pedigree. Excellent Testimonials.—3, Chalonier Street, West Kensington.

HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL RESEARCH WORK undertaken. Moderate Terms. Excellent References.—Apply Box 1594, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. E. Box 1062, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PRIVATE SOCIAL TOURS FOR GENTLE-WOMEN.—AUSTRIA, JUNE 17. Including Vienna, Budapest, the Danube, and beautiful Salzkammergut District. Succesful Tour—Switzerland, Holland, Italy. References exchanged. Programmes from Miss BISHOP, 27, St. George's Road, Kilburn, London.

WANTED, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and MSS. of Literary and Historical Personages.—Capt. CADDELL, 19, Charlwood Place, S.W.

THE DAUGHTER of a well-known Literary

Man is desirous of meeting with a LADY and GENTLEMAN to SHARE her HOUSE; or would take Boarders. Rooms Furnished or Unfurnished. The House is situated on South Norwood Hill, five minutes from Norwood Junction Station, close to the Stanley Halls (where Concerts, Lectures, &c., are continually given), near the Public Library, and within a walk of the Crystal Palace, or One Station from it. Norwood is regarded as one of the healthiest places round London, and was at one time a well-known health resort. A good train service to London Bridge and Victoria.—Address C. M., Box 1562, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Type-Writers, &c.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Private Dictation Room. Circulars, &c. Duplicated. Lessons. References. Established sixteen years.—SIKES & SIKES, 22A, Hammersmith Road, London, W.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.C.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

TYPE-WRITER. KINDLY NOTE CHANGE OF ADDRESS. MISS E. M. TIGAR, 10, MAITLAND PARK VILLAS, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHORS' MSS. at 10d. per 1,000 words, inclusive. First-class Work only.—CHAS. KINSHOTT, 23, Castle Street, Cardiff.

TYPE-WRITING.—Intelligent, careful work; experienced in Medical and Technical Terms. References to well-known Authors if desired. MSS. 10d. 1,000 words. Prompt delivery.—Miss JOLLY, 43, Paddington Street, Baker Street, W.

Catalogues.

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols, 2l. 10s.; Trigg's Art Garden Design, Italy, 3½ Guineas, for 21s.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3l. 3s.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 15, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner, Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

CATALOGUE of FRENCH BOOKS, at greatly reduced prices. I. PHILOSOPHY. II. RELIGION. III. HISTORY. IV. POETRY, DRAMA, MUSIC. V. BEAUX-ARTS. VI. GEOGRAPHY. VII. MILITARY. VIII. FICTION. IX. GENERAL LITERATURE. DULAU & CO. 37, Soho Square, London, W.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. CATALOGUES issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

LEO S. OLSCHKI, Publisher and Antiquarian Bookseller, FLORENCE.

CATALOGUE LXX. SPAIN and PORTUGAL. (Books in Spanish and Portuguese, or relating to these Two Countries). With many Illustrations. 112 pages, 8vo.

CATALOGUE LXXI. INCUNABULA TYPOGRAPHICA. A richly illustrated List of very Scarce and Valuable Books. These Catalogues are sent on request gratis and post free.

No. 365.

JUNE SUPPLEMENT TO GLAISHER'S CATALOGUE

Of Popular and Attractive Books at Cheap Remainder Prices.

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LIMITED,

Remainder and Discount Booksellers,

265, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON (and at 14, George Street, Croydon). The Books are on view at both Addresses.

Authors' Agents.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHESE, 24, Paternoster Row.

Printers.

IF YOU WRITE THE MEMORIALS OF YOUR FAMILY, we will PRINT and PUBLISH them for you, under Expert Supervision, at the very Lowest Rates. Searches made where MS. is incomplete.—GERRARDS, Ltd. (The Westminster Press), 411A, Harrow Road.

Sales by Auction.

Engravings and Drawings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 7, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS, DRAWINGS, &c. (Framed and in the Portfolio), comprising Theatrical Portraits by J. R. Smith, R. Dunkerton, T. Park, R. Honston, J. Ogborne, F. Bartolozzi, and others—Portraits in Mezzotint and Stipple, including Sophia Western, by J. R. Smith, after J. Hoppner, printed in colours—Mrs. Benwell, by W. Ward, after the same—Lady Gertrude Fitzpatrick, by and after C. Wilkin, and Lady Gertrude Villiers, by and after the same, both proofs before letters in brown—George Washington on Horseback, after A. Campbell, a Mezzotint—a Complete Set of Lodge's Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain, Engraver's Proofs on India Paper, &c.—Fancy Subjects of the English School by F. Bartolozzi, P. W. Tomkins, L. Schiavonetti, A. Cardon, T. Burke, W. Nutter, G. Vendramini, P. Simon, and others, a few printed in colours—Naval Engagements—Sporting Prints—Caricatures—Book Illustrations—Views—Miscellaneous Parcel Lots and Scrap-books, &c.—Modern Etchings, by Seymour Haden, J. M. Whistler, D. Y. Cameron, R. W. Macheth, A. H. Haig, W. Strang, and others, including fine First States of Seymour Haden's Windsor (Drake 183), and Greenwich (Drake 184)—Engravings, Etchings, and Woodcuts by A. Dürer, Rembrandt, and other celebrated Old Masters—Arundel Society Publications, Baxter Colour Prints, Drawings in Water-Colour, &c., by N. Pocock, S. De Witte, G. P. Kennedy, J. C. Schneckelie, F. Walker, Birket Foster, and others; and a few Drawings by Old Masters and Oil Paintings.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Autograph Letters and Historical Documents.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 9, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, including Burns, Keats, Lord Byron, Sir W. Scott, Dr. Johnson, C. Dickens, Edmund Kean, David Garrick, and others—numerous Letters and Documents relating to the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars—a fine Series of Letters from Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton to Wm. Haslewood, his Executor—Correspondence of the Right Hon. W. Windham and of John Robinson, Secretary of State to George III.—an interesting Collection relative to Mirabeau, the Orator of the French Revolution—important Documents with the Great Seals, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable Collection of Japanese Colour Prints the Property of JOHN STEWART HAPPER, Esq., of New York City, U.S.A.

SECOND AND FINAL PORTION.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 14, and Four Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable COLLECTION of JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS the Property of JOHN STEWART HAPPER, Esq., of New York City, U.S.A.

May be viewed on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, June 10, 11, and 12. Catalogues may be had; illustrated Copies, 5s. each.

The Rashleigh Collection of Coins.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 21, and Four Following Days, and on MONDAY, June 28, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the RASHLEIGH COLLECTION OF COINS, the Property of EVELYN W. RASHLEIGH, Esq., Stoketon, Saltash, Cornwall.

May be viewed two days prior. Illustrated Catalogues may be had, price 2s. 6d. each.

STEVENS'S AUCTION ROOMS.

Established 1760.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, June 8 and 9, at half-past 12 o'clock each day.

NATIVE and OTHER WEAPONS from various Localities—Horns and Skins of Animals—Carved Ivories—Satsuma Ware from Japan—Prints—Jewellery, &c.

Mr. J. C. STEVENS will SELL the above Property by AUCTION at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

On view Monday prior to 4 and mornings of sale. Catalogues on application.

Mr. J. C. STEVENS will include in his SALE on WEDNESDAY, June 9, a choice COLLECTION of COLOURED BARTOLOZZI PRINTS, Drawings, Engravings, Baxter and Le Blond Prints, Pictures, &c.

Old Furniture, Pictures, China, and Books.

HINTLESHAM HALL, SUFFOLK, five miles from Ipswich.

GARROD, TURNER & SON will SELL by AUCTION, on WEDNESDAY, June 16, 1909, and Three Following Days, at 11 o'clock each day (by direction of Col. ANSTRUTHER, who has sold the Estate), the CONTENTS of the MANSION, including Antique Furniture of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries—Two old Lacquer Japanese Cabinets—Pair of finely-carved Chipendale Candle Stands—Mirrors—Antique Iron Chest—Two Panels of Mortlake Tapestry—fine Old Oriental Porcelain in Jars and Beakers—a Collection of Oil Paintings, principally Portraits by Van Dyck, Kneller, Thos. Hudson, Lely, Gainsborough, and other Masters—a Library of 2,000 Volumes of Books, comprising scarce Works in various Branches of Literature—Early Printed Works—MSS. on Vellum. Illustrated Catalogues, 1s. each. Catalogue of the Books free, from the Auctioneers, Ipswich.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 9, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising Topographical and Antiquarian Books—Incunabula from the German and Italian Presses, including the Edictio Princeps of Euclid, 1482—Curious Works in Sixteenth-Century Literature (some with Woodcuts) and Black-Letter Books—a few Specimens of Bindings—the Mohawk Prayer Book, 1787, and others relating to America—Hakluyt Society's Publications, 41 vols., 1847-1907—Rare Books with Coloured Plates—an Album of Coloured Sporting Engravings by Aiken and others—Hogarth's Works—Modern Illustrated Books on Art—Library Editions of Dramatists and Historians, and the Best Editions of Thackeray, Lytton, and Lever.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

The Library of the late Rev. Dr. HASLEWOOD, removed from Chisleham Vicarage, Canterbury, and other Properties.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 16, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising Topographical and Genealogical Works—Sets of the Archæologia Cantiana, 28 vols.—Sussex Archaeological Collections, 52 vols., and Suffolk Institute of Archaeology, 13 vols.—Howard and Crisp's Visitation, 15 vols.—Miscellaneous Genealogical and Heraldic, 18 vols.—Standard Books in Theology and Classical Literature, &c.; also the LIBRARY of the late W. R. FISHER, Esq., removed from Ealing (by order of the Executors), including Works in Ornithology and Natural History—Guillim's Heraldry, Best Edition—Blomefield's Norfolk, 11 vols.—Dibdin's Bibliographical Decameron, 3 vols.—Standard Works in General Literature.

Catalogues on application.

An extensive Collection of English and Foreign Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at the END of JUNE, an extensive COLLECTION of ENGLISH and FOREIGN BOOKS, including Gould's Birds of Asia, 7 vols., Birds of Europe, 5 vols., and Mammals of Australia, 3 vols., morocco extra—Hume's Stray Feathers, 12 vols.—Gray's Catalogue of Birds, 9 vols., and other Books on Ornithology and Natural History, some extra-illustrated—Works in Classical Literature, History, and Philosophy, many in French and German.

Catalogues are preparing.

AT THE CONDUIT STREET AUCTION GALLERIES.

THE BUCKLAND COLLECTION.

By order of Sir WILLIAM THROCKMORTON, Bart., removed from Buckland, Berkshire, following the recent Sale of the Estate.

The important COLLECTION of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, including interesting Old Portraits, Pastels, Drawings, and important characteristic Works attributed to

Albano	Domenichino	Pater	Andrea del Sarto
Barocci	Carlo Maratti	Pagani	Salvator Rosa
Berghem	Ostade	Palamedes	Spagnaletto
Canaletto	Ochtervelt	Rysbrack	Sneyders
Caravaggio	Pannini	Marco Ricci	Vandyck
Carlo Dolci	Poussin	Sassoferrato	Zuccarelli

and others; also the interesting old LIBRARY, containing Early Editions of Standard Works, Books of Reference, and Miscellaneous Literature; and a small Collection of Antique China and Miscellaneous. TO BE SOLD by AUCTION by MESSRS.

KNIGHT, FRANK & RUTLEY, in conjunction with Messrs. SIMMONS & SONS, on THURSDAY, June 24, at 1 o'clock. Catalogues, which are now in preparation, may be obtained, when ready, of Messrs. SIMMONS & SONS, Land Agents, Henley, Reading, and Basingstoke, or of the Auctioneers, at their Offices, 9, Conduit Street, W.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, June 7, and Three Following Days, and TUESDAY, June 15, and Two Following Days, a PORTION of the valuable LIBRARY of BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS formed during the early part of the last century by HENRY B. H. BEAUFOY, Esq., and now sold by order of the Beaufoy Trustees on the removal of the remaining portion of the Library to Coombe House, Wilts. The Collection includes beautiful Examples of Illuminated Manuscripts—French Illustrated Books of the Eighteenth Century in fine contemporary bindings—Books of Prints—Military Costumes—Scarce Books on America—Armorial Bindings, including Marie Antoinette, Madame de Pompadour, &c.—Publications of the Aldine, Elzevir, Bodoni, Lee Priory, Baskerville, and other Presses, many in fine Bindings—Bibliographical Works by De Bure, Dibdin, Mattiære, and Panza—Books of Voyages and Travels—Several Hundred Volumes on Antique Gems, Coins, and Medals—Incunabula and Early Printed Books.

On TUESDAY, June 8, OLD ENGLISH SILVER PLATE of the late Mrs. R. H. CURRIE and others.

On WEDNESDAY, June 9, OLD CHINESE PORCELAIN, the Property of GERALD BROCKELBANK, Esq., and others.

On THURSDAY, June 10, and FRIDAY, June 11 (by order of the Executors), the important COLLECTION of MODERN PICTURES and WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS of the ENGLISH and CONTINENTAL SCHOOLS, and Works of the Early English School, of Sir JOHN D. MILBURN, Bart., deceased, late of Guisance, Aclington, Northumberland. Catalogue, containing 11 illustrations, price 5s.

On FRIDAY, June 11, CHOICE MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS, the Property of the late E. NETTLEFOLD, Esq., and others.

On MONDAY, June 14, the highly important COLLECTION of OLD ENGLISH FURNITURE, chiefly of the Chippendale period, formed by H. P. DEAN, Esq., of Bridgefoot House, Iwer, Bucks. Illustrated Catalogue, price 2s. 6d.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 17, and Following Day, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including a SELECTION from the LIBRARY of the late Prebendary MEAD, removed from Balcombe; the LIBRARY of the late Prof. OGIL, removed from Kensington, and other properties (by order of Executors), comprising Standard Works in all Branches of Literature, valuable First Editions—Books with Coloured Plates, by the Cruikshanks and Rowlandson—a fine copy of Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery with Proof Impressions—Martial Achievements—a Collection of Works relating to the Fine Arts—Encyclopædia Britannica, 36 vols. with Case &c.

Catalogues in preparation

For Magazines, &c., see p. 686.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

THE FAERIE QUEENE. By Edmund Spenser. In two volumes.

This edition of The Faerie Queene in two volumes is printed on fine hand-made paper in the 'Cambridge' type, a fount specially designed for the Cambridge University Press. Volume I contains Books I to III, and Volume II Books IV to VI, reprinted from the edition of 1596. The fragment of Book VII, from the folio edition of 1609, is also included in Volume II.

The work is issued in two bindings, viz.:—full bound in the finest vellum, with bevelled boards, gilt top, and vellum end-papers, and with ornament and lettering in gilt; and also in plain paper boards, with canvas back, gilt top, and printed label.

Three hundred and fifty copies only have been printed—of which three hundred numbered copies are for sale in England and America—and the type has been distributed.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Edited by A. W. Ward, Litt.D., F.B.A., Master of Peterhouse, and A. R. Waller, M.A.

Vol. III.—RENAISSANCE AND REFORMATION.

Crown 8vo
buckram
9s net
half-morocco
15s net

"This rich composite history of English literature is a real service to English scholarship. It presents us with the first adequate treatment of many neglected parts of our literary history, and it throws new light on many old themes.... The editors deserve all thanks, and the critic who feels inclined to quarrel with this point or that in their methods or conclusions will be humiliated and silenced when he remembers that this is the first attempt by a body of scholars to tell the story of our literature on a scale worthy of its greatness."—Saturday Review of the centenary of the birth of Charles Darwin and of the fiftieth anniversary of the publication of 'The Origin of Species.' Edited by A. C. Seward, Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge.

DARWIN AND MODERN SCIENCE. Essays in commemoration

Royal 8vo
With 2 portraits and 3 plates
18s net

"Editor and committee alike are to be congratulated on the handsome and instructive volume, which cannot fail to be of solid service in letting us know exactly where we stand in relation to Darwin and his doctrines. A score of first-rate home authorities and half as many from the universities of the Continent and America have sent a series of substantial contributions—wisely adapted to the educated layman rather than to the expert. The importance of such a work can hardly be over-estimated."—Glasgow Herald

MENDEL'S PRINCIPLES OF HEREDITY. By W. Bateson,

M.A., F.R.S., V.M.H., Professor of Biology in the University of Cambridge.

Royal 8vo
3 portraits
6 coloured plates
and 33 figures
12s net

"Prof. Bateson's admirable book puts out in the clearest possible manner the whole story of Mendelism up to the present hour.... We have read this book with the greatest possible interest, and recommend it to all our readers."—Lancet

"Prof. Bateson has carried out a large number of original researches, both with plants and animals, to test the theory of Mendel, and the general results are now given in this book, along with much able criticism and elucidation. This is undoubtedly the most complete and searching statement of the Mendelian theory that has yet appeared in any language, and no doubt it will receive the attention of naturalists all over the world, as an important contribution to the study of heredity."—Glasgow Herald

THE AUTHORISED VERSION OF THE ENGLISH BIBLE, 1611.

Edited by William Aldis Wright, M.A., Vice-Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. In five volumes:—Vol. I Genesis to Deuteronomy; Vol. II Joshua to Esther; Vol. III Job to Malachi; Vol. IV The Apocrypha; Vol. V The New Testament.

Crown 8vo
5 vols prices
from 20s net

There were two issues of the Authorised Version of 1611, the first of which is here reprinted, it is hoped with literal accuracy, from a copy in the possession of the editor. The original edition was a handsome black letter folio, with two columns on a page. In the present reprint each page represents one of these columns, so that a complete page of the original text is seen at the opening of two opposite pages of the reproduction. The black letter of the first edition is represented in the present reprint by roman type, and the roman type by italic.

The prices are, in cloth 20s. net, single vols 4s. 6d. net; in half rough calf, 30s. net, single vols 7s. net; in full black morocco 35s. net, single vols 8s. net; in full crimson morocco 45s. net, single vols 10s. net.

THE SERMONS OF THOMAS ADAMS, the Shakespeare of Puritan Theologians. A selection edited by John Brown, D.D.

Prices from
1s 6d net

Thomas Adams, a selection from whose sermons is here given, was an English divine of the seventeenth century, who lived on the friendliest and most intimate terms with some of the foremost men in State and Church, and for whom it has been claimed that he stands in the forefront of our great English preachers.

THE SERMONS OF HENRY SMITH, the Silver-Tongued Preacher.

A selection edited by John Brown, D.D.

Prices from
1s 6d net

"Dr. Brown has done good service in rescuing these sermons from oblivion.... Some of the number, with a few slight changes in the wording, might advantageously be preached to a modern congregation. They also deserve to be studied from the literary point of view, as fine examples of Elizabethan prose, and this little volume is in several ways well worth having."—Church Times

CAMBRIDGE COUNTY GEOGRAPHIES. A new series of County Handbooks under the general editorship of Dr. F. H. H. Guillemard.

Each volume gives an account of the history, antiquities, architecture, natural history, industries, and physical, geological, and general characteristics of the county, and contains two coloured maps and a large number of illustrations.

The first six volumes,

Foolscap 8vo
1s 6d each

KENT	By G. F. BOSWORTH, F.R.G.S.	ESSEX	By G. F. BOSWORTH
SURREY	By G. F. BOSWORTH	NORFOLK	By W. A. DUTT
SUSSEX	By G. F. BOSWORTH	SUFFOLK	By W. A. DUTT

are ready, and volumes on HERTFORDSHIRE by R. LYDEKKER, WILTSHIRE by A. G. BRADLEY, and SOMERSETSHIRE by F. A. KNIGHT, are in the press. Volumes on the remaining counties are in an active state of preparation.

London, Fetter Lane: CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS: C. F. Clay, Manager

MACMILLAN'S LIST.

Oxford Lectures on Poetry.

By A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D., formerly Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.
COMPLETE IN 1 VOL.

The Golden Treasury of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language.

Selected and Arranged by F. T. PALGRAVE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

1909 ISSUE JUST PUBLISHED.

The Statesman's Year-Book.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1909. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

THE WHITE SISTER.

A Story of Rome.

By the late F. MARION CRAWFORD.

GERVASE.

By MABEL DEARMER,
Author of 'The Alien Sisters,' &c.

NEW BOOK BY THE WRITER OF 'CONFESSIO MEDICI.'

Faith and Works of Christian Science.

Extra crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

The Psychology of Thinking.

By IRVING ELGAR MILLER, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

POCKET EDITION OF THE ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.

Edited by JOHN MORLEY. 1s. net each.

COWPER. By GOLDWIN SMITH. DEFOE.
By W. MINTO. DE QUINCEY. By Prof.
MASSON. DICKENS. By Dr. A. W. WARD.
DRYDEN. By Prof. G. SAINTSBURY.

LIBRARY OF ENGLISH CLASSICS.

Edited by A. W. POLLARD.

8vo, cloth binding, 3s. 6d. net per volume. Also in Roxburgh binding (except vols. marked *), green morocco backs, cloth sides, and gilt tops, 5s. net per vol.

BACON'S ESSAYS; COLOURS OF GOOD AND EVIL; and ADVANCEMENT OF LEARN-ING. 1 vol.

SHERIDAN'S PLAYS.

MALORY'S MORTE D'ARTHUR. 2 vols.

STERNE'S TRISTRAM SHANDY and SENTI-
MENTAL JOURNEY. 2 vols.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON. 3 vols.

CARLYLE'S FRENCH REVOLUTION. 2 vols.

FIELDING'S TOM JONES. 2 vols.

TRAVELS OF SIR JOHN MANDEVILLE, WITH ILLUSTRATIVE NARRATIVES
FROM HAKLUYT. 1 vol.

WHITE'S NATURAL HISTORY OF SEL-
BORNE. 1 vol.

LOCKHART'S LIFE OF SCOTT. 5 vols.

DON QUIXOTE. Translated by SHELTON. 3 vols.

DE QUINCEY'S CONFESSIONS OF AN ENGLISH OPIUM-EATER; MURDER AS A FINE ART: THE ENGLISH MAIL
COACH; and other Essays. 1 vol.

WALTON'S LIVES and COMPLETE ANGLER.
1 vol.

CARLYLE'S SARTOR RESARTUS and HEROES AND HERO-WORSHIP. 1 vol.

SELECT WORKS OF OLIVER GOLDSMITH.
1 vol.

CHARACTERS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS and LECTURES ON THE ENGLISH POETS.
By WILLIAM HAZLITT. 1 vol.

MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS. 2 vols.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE.

JUST ISSUED.

GRIMM LIBRARY.—Vol. XIX.

THE LEGEND OF SIR PERCEVAL.

Studies upon its Origin, Development, and Position in the Arthurian Cycle. By JESSIE
L. WESTON. Vol. II. THE PROSE
PERCEVAL ACCORDING TO THE
MODENA MS. Crown 8vo, xiv-355 pp.,
15s. net.

St. James's Gazette.—"Miss Weston's study of the Prose Perceval in the Modena manuscript has led her to unexpected and important conclusions.
She is satisfied that the authorship of the entire cycle, Perceval included, is to be ascribed to Borron (a name long traditionally associated with Arthurian legend); and she believes herself to be in a position to offer a fully developed theory of the origin and development of the Grail legend, a theory which shall cover the whole ground and explain at once the nature of the Grail, the origin of the story as we possess it and an interpretation of its incidents and terminology. The interest of such an announcement could not easily be exaggerated."

* * Vol. I. of above work: CHRÉTIEN DE
TROYES and WAUCHIER DE DENAIN
(price 12s. 6d. net) came out in 1907, and is now nearly out of print.

The following works by MISS WESTON have appeared in the GRIMM LIBRARY:—

THE LEGEND OF SIR GAWAIN. 1897.
4s. net.

THE LEGEND OF SIR LANCELOT.
1901. 7s. 6d. net.

THE THREE DAYS' TOURNAMENT.
Being an Appendix to 'The Legend of Sir
Lancelot.' 1903. 2s. net.

Mr. NUTT begs to advise that Vols. IV. and VI. of the GRIMM LIBRARY: THE VOYAGE
OF BRAN SON OF FEBAL TO THE LAND OF THE LIVING, edited and translated by KUNO MEYER, with Essays upon 'The Irish Vision of the Happy Otherworld' and 'The Celtic Doctrine of Rebirth,' by ALFRED NUTT, being nearly out of print, the price of the few remaining copies of the two volumes has been raised to 1l. 11s. 6d. net.

A somewhat larger number of Vol. II.: THE CELTIC DOCTRINE OF REBIRTH, having been printed, copies of this volume may still be had until further notice at 10s. 6d. net. But no further copies of Vol. I. will be sold separately.

THE TRACHINIAN MAIDENS OF SOPHOCLES. Translated into English
Verse by HUGO SHARPLEY, M.A., translator of 'The Mimes of Herodas.' 16mo, wrapper, 1s. 6d. net.

* * Mr. Sharpley's HERODAS, the only English version, may still be had for 2s. 6d. net.

FOLK-LORE SOCIETY:

PUBLICATIONS, Vol. LXIII.

COUNTRY FOLK-LORE. Vol. V.:
EXAMPLES OF PRINTED FOLK-
LORE CONCERNING LINCOLN-
SHIRE, collected by Mrs. GUTCH and MABEL PEACOCK. Demy 8vo, xxiv-437 pp., cloth, 15s. net.

* * Above volume has been sent to all members of the Folk-Lore Society who have paid their subscription for 1908.

Terms of Membership of the Folk-Lore Society will be supplied on application to the Secretary,
Mr. F. A. Milne, 11, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn.

Books of Note

NOW READY.

ENGLISH HERALDIC BOOK STAMPS.

Figured and Described by CYRIL DAVENPORT,
F.S.A. About 300 Illustrations. Super-royal 8vo,
25s. net.

In this book the author has brought together a valuable collection of about 300 English armorial bearings which appear, mostly in gold, on the outsides of books.

The author has carefully copied each coat-of-arms from the original stamp, and the accuracy of these drawings can be fully relied on. They are generally in outline, and are the same size as the originals. With each coat is an heraldic description, and a short biographical note concerning the owner.

A complete series of English Royal Book-Stamps from Henry VII. to his present Majesty will be found in this book. Such a series is itself of much importance, the various changes in the Royal coats-of-arms are historically of very great interest, and in many cases they are pictorially of much beauty.

SOME ACROSTIC SIGNATURES OF FRANCIS BACON,

Baron Verulam of Verulam, Viscount St. Alban, together with some others, all of which are now for the first time deciphered and published by WILLIAM STONE BOOTH. Illustrated with Facsimiles and Acrostic Figures. Large 4to, 25s. net. [Now ready.]

DEDICATED BY GRACIOUS PERMISSION
TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

THE STORY OF THE HOUSEHOLD CAVALRY, 1661-1902.

By Capt. Sir GEORGE ARTHUR, Bart., late Second Life Guards. With Photogravure Portraits and other Illustrations, including 6 Coloured Plates. 2 vols.
super-royal 8vo. Edition de Luxe, limited to 40 copies, 10l. 10s. net; Ordinary Edition, 3l. 13s. 6d. net.

"Sir George Arthur has earned the gratitude of all his companions in arms for the manly and spirited fashion in which he has told his stirring story."—Daily Telegraph.

RADIOACTIVITY AND GEOLOGY.

An Account of the Influence of Radioactive Energy on Terrestrial History. By J. JOLY, M.A. Sc.D. F.R.S., Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"A most fascinating book."—Liverpool Post.

CHAPTERS ON SPANISH LITERATURE.

By J. FITZMAURICE KELLY. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.
"A delightful volume, full of sympathy, learning, and judgment."—Observer.

"We have no hesitation in saying that this volume forms the most valuable English contribution to Spanish letters since the same author gave us his history of Spanish literature."—Athenæum.

"I have never met with such an illuminating work on Spanish literature."

Mr. R. B. CUNNINGHAM GRAHAM in the Nation.

THE DOMINION OF DREAMS.

By FIONA MACLEOD. New Edition, Pocket size, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

THE NOVELS AND POEMS OF GEORGE MEREDITH.

Library Edition, crown 8vo, 6s. Pocket Edition, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

THE ORDEAL OF RICHARD FEVEREL.	DIANA OF THE CROSS- WAYS.
BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER.	THE ADVENTURES OF HARRY RICHMOND.
SANDRA BELLONI.	RHODA FLEMING.
VITTORIA.	THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT.
THE EGOIST.	THE TRAGIC COME- DIANS.
EVAN HARRINGTON.	SHORT STORIES.
ONE OF OUR CON- QUERORS.	POEMS. 2 vols.
LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.	AN ESSAY ON COMEDY.
THE AMAZING MAR- RIAGE.

Full List on application.

THE NEWEST NOVELS. PRISCILLA AND CHARYBDIS.

By F. FRANKFORT MOORE.

"This most entertaining social comedy."—Times.

THE STORY OF THYRZA.

By ALICE BROWN, Author of 'Rose Macleod.'

"A strengthening tale builded of charity, human kindness, and the humour which has tears behind it."
Daily Chronicle.

THE PERJURER.

By W. E. NORRIS, Author of 'The Square Peg.'

Mr. Norris has never written a more delightful story.

THE ACTRESS.

By L. C. HALE.

[Shortly.]

THE COUNTRY HOME (June) now ready.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO. LTD.
10 Orange Street London W.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE OXFORD CONGRESS ON THE HISTORY OF RELIGIONS	665
COUNT LUTZOW'S LIFE OF HUS	666
THE MUNICIPAL RECORDS OF DORCHESTER	667
ENGLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY	668
NEW NOVELS (Daphne; The Perjurer; The June Princess; The Dartmoor House that Jack Built; Sir Guy and Lady Rannard; Meg of the Salt-Pans)	669-670
VERSE	670
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Ten Personal Studies; A Holiday in Commemara; Lola Montez; The Russian Bastille; Adventures in London; The Englishwoman in India; Messrs. Hurst & Blackett's Sevenpenny Novels)	671-672
THE WILLOW-WREN; M. J. DEGOEJE; JOHN MOUNTGOMERY AND THE LONDON MARCHING WATCH; ASSISTANT MASTERS IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS; JEANNE D'ARC IN ENGLISH CHRONICLES; MORE SHELLEY CRUMBS	672-674
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	674
LITERARY GOSSIP	675
SCIENCE—THE SPORTSMAN'S BRITISH BIRD BOOK; THE WORLD'S PEOPLES; SUFFOLK AND NORFOLK; OUTLINES OF ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; THE TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN ON JUNE 16, 364; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	676-678
FINE ARTS—JAPANESE PRINTS AT THE FINE-ART SOCIETY'S GALLERIES; A LOST MINIATURE; RECENT DISCOVERIES AT COLOGNE; SALES; GOSSIP; EXHIBITIONS	679-682
MUSIC—THE KING'S MUSIC; ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE OF THE MUSIC LOAN EXHIBITION; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	682
DRAMA—FURNESS'S VARIORUM 'RICHARD III.'; WHAT THE PUBLIC WANTS; EUNICE	683-684
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	684

LITERATURE

Transactions of the Third International Congress for the History of Religions.
2 vols. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

THE first International Congress on the History of Religions (to leave out of account the preceding Congresses at Chicago and Stockholm) met at Paris in September, 1900, on the occasion of the Paris Exhibition. Under the authority of the Direction of the Exhibition, a committee was chosen by the professors of the section of religious sciences of the École des Hautes Études, and a scheme was prepared which involved as a mere matter of organization an arbitrary classification of religions into eight groups: (1) Primitive; (2) Chinese, Japanese, &c.; (3) Egyptian; (4) Semitic (including Islamic); (5) Indian; (6) Greek and Roman; (7) Teutonic, Celtic, and Slavonic; (8) Christian.

This classification was adhered to in the succeeding Congress at Basle in 1904, and in the Oxford Conference of 1908, except that in the latter a ninth section ('Method and Scope of the History of Religions') was added dealing with the whole from the point of view of comparative science.

For the time being this classification may pass unchallenged; but when we turn to the three sets of publications of these Conferences we are not to expect an exhaustive treatment of all, or even any, of the sub-heads. The very nature of a Congress militates against such an idea. Half its value as an institution lies in the personal stimulus which comes from the intercourse of the leading exponents of the science, and this element never finds expression in the learned papers read at the Congress.

In addition to this, the limitations of time and space which are always imposed upon the readers of papers prevent anything like extended treatment. As a rule, those at Oxford had not to exceed 2,000 words in length, and many of them were communicated, and are here printed in a form so abbreviated as to be almost useless. This is probably inevitable, but the result on the mind of the reader is a sensation that he is witnessing a gorgeous phantasmagoria, an epitome of human life of all time and every clime, mirrored forth to him only in shreds and patches. The reason for this is that for the subject as a whole (though not certain sections of it) we are still in the stage of accumulation. With the exception of the various presidential addresses, which contain general résumés of progress in the separate sections, the papers read before the Congress are uniformly contributions to this phase of the work, with here and there timid attempts at classification and definition.

It would be impossible, in a single notice, to attempt a review of the mass of specialist and scientific material offered for perusal. But fortunately, as far as English readers are concerned, the main interest will probably concentrate round those two departments in which English scholarship has consistently distinguished itself, New Testament criticism and anthropology. Of these two departments, the former is but poorly represented in the volumes before us. It seems, indeed, that there is a momentary pause in the productivity of English scholars in the domain of reconstructive criticism of early Christian documents and history. Hort's 'Introduction to the Apocalypse' and Westcott's 'Gospel of St. John,' for instance, which have appeared independently of the Congress, are only posthumous publications. This pause suggests a doubt whether the time has not at last come for a gathering-up of the main results of the last fifty years of preparatory critical work in this particular section; whether the time for a preliminary synthesis is not at last at hand. Why should the man in the street wait while scholars are hunting about for fresh hairs to split? Why should not the pure history of yesterday become the applied history of to-day?

When we turn to anthropology something like the same idea presses upon us. Although here the possibility of synthesis is not so patent as in the domain of the early history of the Christian Church, there are still signs that some preliminary synthesis would clear the ground of a good deal of rubbish. There is evidence of this even in the volumes before us. Up to the present our path has been blocked by a system which by the mere power of its symmetry tyrannizes over us. If such a preliminary synthesis (by which we mean not a recapitulation of evidence or a restatement of theory, but an attempt at scientific orientation of material) as is here advocated were attempted, the claims of Animism would have, we think, to be widely reduced. Of whatever clime or time man may be, there are two distinct phases in his religious consciousness—his belief in the spirit world and his belief in God. The two appear to the present writer to be unrelated. The one is on this side the gulf which divides the natural from the supernatural; the other is on the other. Up to the present it has been held that Animism explains the rudiments of both. We maintain that an intelligent synthesis would destroy that claim. Animism in the hands of Dr. Tylor's school explains only the dead material of religion, viz., that material which concerns the human, the natural, the world of the dead, of animated nature, ancestor worship, and so on; that is, all that lies on this side the gulf. What lies on the other side, the truly supernatural, cannot originate in Animism, and Animism does not explain it. The idea of God is derived from nature worship, at the back of which lies Mana; and this is not contradicted by the recognition of possible links between souls and gods, or between magic and prayer. However religions are compounded, the animistic stuff is divisible from the god stuff. The question for anthropologists is not whether magic preceded Animism (and so preceded religion) or vice versa, or whether magic and religion spring from the same root and are only two faces of one medal. The question is to find for Animism a geological layer in man's history. And if in that layer we find fossils of different (and therefore earlier) beliefs and conceptions of an all-father, a sun god, a nature god, a creator, then the anthropologist should throw back his investigation to these prior forms, and show whence they came, and how they were developed, for that they were developed we entertain no doubt. But such is the tyranny of the symmetrical Animism theory that competent anthropologists seem to shrink from evidence which seems plain enough. Such evidence is set forth not merely in Dr. Tylor's seventeenth chapter and in Laing's 'Making of Religion,' but also in place after place of the volumes before us—in Hollis's 'Nandi,' Spilsbury's 'South American Tribes,' and in Prof. Giles's address as president of the China and Japan Section. Such material seems to point uniformly to decaying phases of monotheistic belief—belief in a power to which or to whom evil of any kind is displeasing—as existing among widely separated savage races whose religion is now admittedly animistic. The animistic phase must therefore be the later. Instead of boldly tackling this material, Mr. Clodd timidly hints at a pre-animistic stage in which the root idea is that of power—power everywhere, power logically apprehended, but immanent, and as yet unclothed with personal and supernatural attributes—so unclothed because logic demands that in a pre-animistic stage man had not conceived of phenomena as divided into the natural and the supernatural. With hardly less hesitancy Mr. Marett follows suit, and develops this conception of Mana into a pre-animistic category. The next step is to whittle down the fossil remains of a decayed monotheism in the Australian, Semite, negro, or Red Indian, deprive it of any conception of personality, reduce it to a sentiment, until it is simply Mana. So there is only one stage in front of Animism, and Animism still remains the sole begetter of gods. Now this will not do, for the reason that in the decaying or decayed monotheism of these aboriginal tribes there is an element of morality and a moral distinction between the god who delights not in sacrifice and the selfish animistic gods to whom sacrifice is made.

If once this evidence is admitted, it opens the gates not to one pre-animistic stage, but to several—to a long cycle of development which not only preceded Animism, but went on widely different lines. Wherever they came from and however they reached their present habitat, the Australian, the Mexican, the Red man, took with them from some central source a developed nature worship or a form of monotheistic belief originating, let us say, in nature worship. This is the grain of wheat in the countless bushels of the Winckler-Jeremias gigantic theory of an altorientalische Weltanschauung, the literature of which is set forth in Prof. Morris Jastrow's presidential address to the Semitic Section in vol. i. This nature worship appears in a flourishing form where, as in Mexico, the climatic conditions favoured it; and it appears as decaying and ever receding into the dim background where, as in Arabia, Australia, &c., the conditions (impossibility of agriculture, &c.) are unfavourable. As it recedes into the background, these branches of savage mankind are thrown on to themselves and evolve their own religious sense, proceeding therein by way of Animism. Finally wherever this Animism, when once developed, comes into living contact with any older, purer monotheism, it gives to it its own savage impurities—the tribal anthropomorphic god, the blood offering, and the sacrificial feast. The Arabs did this for Semitic religion, the Aztecs for Mexican religion, the Celts and Teutons for the Christian religion.

There is an excellent illustration of such a process in the volumes before us. De Groot's paper on the Taoist Church maintains that the introduction of magic, wine sacrifice, &c., was an accretion on the monotheism of the earliest ages of Chinese religion and on Chinese Buddhism, and that it took place comparatively recently, in the second century of our era. Did these new elements come from the older system of magic in Japan which was subsequently built up into the rituals of Shinto? We should certainly conclude this from M. Revon's paper on these rituals in the second volume of these 'Transactions.' All such importations of impurities from lower (though not necessarily earlier) forms of religion constitute the dead-wood material which is to be found in every existing religion. This is a different hypothesis from that which underlies the old degeneration theory; and it may, at any rate, yield a more workable basis for systematization and synthesis than Animism alone. Why, for instance, may not Mana be the dimly perceived and degenerate remembrance of that former tradition of monotheistic belief belonging to a stage historically prior to Animism? If so, Mana is only a pre-animistic category in the sense that it belongs to a different and earlier train of development in Polynesian history.

Taking, therefore, those savages of the dispersion who went their own animistic way as typical of, say, Neolithic man, we find that Animism is incapable of explaining the full content of the religious belief of Neolithic man. It is to the present writer inconceivable that primitive man could arrive at the conception of the supernatural as the result of thought—of an attitude of mind—of a philosophy, for Animism is all these. Primitive man at the point where he parts company with the mammals is a being who merely acts. He does not think. His thought grows out of, is posterior to, his activity. And in his religious growth the same is true. He first has a ritual, an act of observance, and out of that ritual or act of observance is derived a sense of the supernatural. But neither Mana (Mr. Marett's Mana) nor Animism can account for the supernatural, for neither of them has a ritual. Power may be extra-human, greater than my power or yours. It is not therefore supernatural. The spirit which animates the body is extra-human after death. It is not therefore necessarily supernatural. The spirit of the trees or rivers or animals is extra-human. It is not therefore necessarily supernatural. Animism teaches us that they are one and all viewed by primitive or savage man as natural. As a system Animism yields one form of ritual—funeral offerings for the dead (the most sterile ritual, by the way, in the whole religious domain, as is significantly shown in Seligmann's paper on the Vedda cult of the dead in the volumes before us). It explains the doctrine of souls, hell, and ancestor worship, from which springs the circle of the lesser gods. But in the study of religion nothing is more remarkable than the sharpness of the line which is drawn between the lesser and the greater gods. Those have grown from below, these have descended from above. This is not merely a distinction between the private worship of the gods of the hearth and the public worship of the god of the clan or the State. It is a fundamental distinction of kind and of derivation. If it should be objected that at any rate Animism yields the supernatural through a second possible channel, viz., the belief in a future life, the answer is easy. In developed religious systems the doctrine of a future life involves two elements: (1) the soul element which has survived the death of the body, and (2) the God element. The latter has no intrinsic connexion with the soul element at all, but all systems, whether of religion or philosophy, strive to bring them into connexion. The soul is absorbed into God, or it is brought before God to be judged, or it is admitted to worship God through all eternity, to dwell where He dwells, and so on. The very nature of these links, their arbitrariness, their distressingly matter-of-fact concreteness, show that they are unreal, are invented. Between the spirit world (which primitive man has evolved through Animism) and the world of the supernatural (which man has evolved through some distinct, and as yet unexplained process) there is no link except that which poets and philosophers and prophets have imaginatively created.

At bottom the tyranny of system-builders in this domain of religious history is due to mere abstract thought. It is easy to postulate what seems a logical and harmonious scheme of human cultural development thus—first stage, man parting company from the mammals and inventing ghosts and ancestor worship; second stage, tribal nomadic man with his tribal god, totems, and sacrificial feasts; third stage, pastoral and agricultural man with his nature worship; fourth stage, politically organized man with a merely politically organized religion. When once the assumption is made that all men everywhere have passed through these or some such stages, and always in the same sequence, then it results that Animism represents the lowest stratum of human religious phenomena. The reply to this is that the scheme thus sketched, or any such scheme, is conjecture, and that the assumption may be unwarrantable. In a climate fitted for agriculture man may have passed to the pastoral stage without the intermediate step of nomadic life, and so may have become a worshipper of the sun before, or without ever, possessing a clan god. It is reasonable to suppose that this has happened in portions of Asia. The key to the mystery of human religion will only be found, if ever it is found, by studying the purely religious phenomena side by side with the climatic and physical phenomena of this or that race of mankind.

Such is the view of the present writer. But it is well to add that in this immense and "proper study of mankind" the data are so wide and so susceptible of varied interpretations that diverse theories may be equally justified. More, they may all equally possess some portion of that essential truth, the search for which is the preoccupation of all serious men.

The Life and Times of Master John Hus.
By Count Lützow. Illustrated. (Dent & Co.)

COUNT LÜTZOW, who already by his books has made Englishmen familiar with the history and literature of Bohemia, here essays to complete his survey by giving them a sketch of the famous national hero Jan Hus. Hus is the great man of Bohemia, as Copernicus is the great man of Poland, the sister nation. The knowledge of the former, however, is confined to a narrower circle. The nationality of which Hus was so proud is now mixed up with the glories of a powerful and hostile nation which is on its frontiers. For a great number of people Hus was a German and spoke "a vulgar kind of German dialect," and Comenius fares no better, though his works on education have a great reputation. In this goodly volume of about four hundred stately octavo pages we have a picture of the real Hus drawn by a patriotic hand, impartially presented, with the opinions of friend and foe carefully analyzed, and all religious bias eliminated.

To the Englishman the materials for the real life of Hus are scanty. Three names to be mentioned with honour are Milman, Creighton, and Wratislaw. The first two treat the subject on a broad basis; Wratislaw goes into minutiae and is thoroughly familiar with his subject, but has a heavy style which, it must be confessed, does not allure us. The time, then, had come for a description of Hus and the Hussite wars with more ample treatment. Of Hus we may say not merely noscitur a sociis, but also noscitur ab inimicis. The feud between German and Bohemian is acute at the present time, probably because there is so much scope for antagonism; but in the earlier days the German Reformer and Bohemian Reformer went hand in hand. Luther recognized Hus as a glorious predecessor, and is said to have kept his bust in his house; this is in strange antithesis to the attacks of Loserth and prejudiced men of the kind.

The Count begins his book naturally with a slight sketch of the struggles which led to Hussitism. Our own Wyclif appears on the scene; he no doubt had immense influence upon Hus, but the latter was much more than a pale copy of the English Reformer. Perhaps the late Dr. Bigg was right when he satirized the literary style of Wyclif. This would make us think that his influence was not so paramount, and therefore Hus had something of his own, and was not a mere copyist, as the Germans affect to believe him. Probably few Englishmen have heard of Peter Payne, the Principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, who is said to have carried the doctrines of Wyclif to Bohemia. We have not space to go into the scanty details of the life of Hus, who was poor, and when he was preacher at the Bethlehem Chapel in Prague inveighed against the simony and luxury of the priests. The necessity of spiritual and simple lives was one of the great lessons he taught, and, as Milman said, the right of private judgment in religious matters.

The great papal schism, when three Popes were in the field, was raging when the Council of Constance was summoned. All this, being matter of universal history, is familiar, and we need only remark that Count Lützow has weighed the obscure points with due care, such as how far Sigismund had given a safe-conduct to Hus. The picture drawn of the King of the Romans is repulsive: he was a man of thoroughly immoral life, and his arrogance was shown by his silencing the monk who ventured to correct him for making schisma of the feminine gender. The points urged against Hus are fully discussed by Count Lützow. He has read the latest authorities, and we must leave the reader to the enjoyment of his controversial pages.

A most important chapter is that in which Hus appears as a patriot. He not only wrote many of his chief works in Bohemian, but also took great pains with his style, turned mongrel words out of the language, and even corrected the orthography of words, just as Luther did with German. He further tried to introduce a simple and popular way of singing in churches. Bohemia at the present time boasts an excellent scholar, Dr. Flajshans, who is editing the Bohemian works of the great Reformer.

We have not space to tell of the treacherous imprisonment of Hus at Constance, and the indignities which he endured in his dungeon, where he was chained in a loathsome hole. Count Lützow dissipates many of the legends about him; for instance, his reply to the old woman who seemed so anxious to have him burnt, and caused the martyr to cry out, "Oh sancta simplicitas." There is also no truth in the story that, punning on his name, he said he was only a goose, but after him a swan would come. This silly tale, as Count Lützow well remarks, is based upon the idea that Luther meant a swan in Slavonic, which is incorrect.

The book possesses all the ordinary furniture of a complete biography, if we may use the phrase. There is a good excursus on the portraits of Hus, which, like those of Mary, Queen of Scots, do not agree. Count Lützow wisely leaves the decision as to the best unsettled. We note the presence of an excellent Index, and a new account of the trial and execution. The one previously familiar was that of Mladenovic, secretary to one of the Bohemian lords who went with Hus to Constance. Some of the Bohemian letters written by the martyr in prison have been preserved.

We hope that this book will find many readers; it is the record of a great and glorious life, the details of which have been unduly ignored by Western Europe.

The Municipal Records of the Borough of Dorchester, Dorset. Edited by Charles Herbert Mayo. (Exeter, Pollard & Co.)

THIS goodly volume of over 750 closely printed pages of 'The Municipal Records of Dorchester' compels admiration, if only for the industry and patience which its compilation must have entailed. Its authors may be congratulated on having brought a valuable work to a successful issue, in spite of scant support, and in face of pecuniary and other difficulties of no light order. For example, the Corporation of Dorchester was "unable to contribute financial aid." Canon Mayo, well known in connexion with Dorset antiquities, is the editor, and Mr. Arthur W. Gould, of whose ancestors Dorchester was an old home, has laboured with him to produce the book through years of discouragement. The work was begun twenty years ago by Henry J. Moule, Curator of the Dorchester Museum, who was himself a devoted worker in anything pertaining to the history of his native town and county. He started on it in 1886, just eight hundred years after Domesday was made.

The mention of the Great Survey recalls the fact (known to all who have personally examined its records) that Dorchester possesses a "Domesday" (so called) of its own, in the shape of a thick square volume containing 181 parchment leaves, bound in stout oak boards covered with stamped pigskin, this, however, not being its original binding. It would take too long to describe the contents of this interesting volume, but it may be noted that it begins with the by-laws sanctioned by the Court of the town "on Monday next after Michaelmas, 2 Henry V.," 1414. The book is termed Domesday in one of the earliest entries, thus: "fiat etiam commune registrum....et ille qui hoc habeat necesse....dabit....clerice pro scriptura in Domesday tres denarios." These by-laws are all printed in Hutchins's 'History of Dorset,' and contain some curious matter.

The scope and importance of these municipal records could not be better shown than in the Introduction, wherein Dorchester is described as being "fortunate in the possession of a series of Charters, dating from the reign of Edward I.; of a register of Conveyances and Devises of lands and burgages within its boundaries called 'Domesday,' beginning in 1395; and of a large number of Account and Minute Books, from which many interesting particulars may be gathered bearing upon the life of the townsmen in their social, religious, and trading relations."

Canon Mayo resists the temptation of looking back beyond the fourteenth century to that remote past in which Dorchester (or what may perhaps be more accurately termed the head-quarters of the Durotriges) may be seen emerging in the dawn of history, nor does he do more than allude to the associations which the shire-town of Dorset has with the Roman occupation.

Probably most people called upon to write anything about Dorchester must feel it difficult to avoid reference to the Roman period. To begin its history in the reign of Edward I. seems late; much must have happened even in that out-of-the-world corner since Vespasian fought the thirty battles and captured the twenty oppida, of which Suetonius speaks, and of which, doubtless, Maiden Castle was one of the strongest and most formidable. To those who know its history the "ancient and honourable town," as Mr. Gould terms it, is still Roman. Roman always in its name, it is Roman in its plan, coins, pavements, and such-like evidences of its origin being continually brought to light.

Yet to have municipal records extending as far back as 1305 is, in its way, a thing to boast of, even though the charter be letters patent from the sovereign of the day (Edward I.) to make a prison for Dorset, in preference to any other town in the county. It is difficult to say what was the population of the town at that time, but we know that in Saxon times it was a royal borough, and we may learn from Domesday that in the days of Edward the Confessor it contained 175 houses and had two moneyers, comparing, in this respect, at a disadvantage with Shaftesbury, which had 257 houses and three moneyers at that time, as Canon Mayo has here pointed out. Probably this difference in population may be accounted for by the fact that Shaston (to give this interesting old town its local name) included a rich nunnery founded by Alfred nearly 200 years before the Conquest, wherein lay the body of Edward the Martyr, at whose tomb many miraculous cures were wrought, pilgrims resorting to it from all parts of the kingdom.

To return to Dorchester: the town in its long history has had its vicissitudes, for when the Domesday Survey was made only 88 houses remained. By the time of Edward III. it had attained to the dignity of two bailiffs, and the privilege of paying 20*l.*, the farm of the vill to the Crown, to Peter le Brugge yearly for his life on account of his good service to the King and Isabella his daughter (1357). Thenceforward, until we come to the period of the Commonwealth, the long catalogue of charters, minute books, and other documents, extending to several pages, reveals comparatively little of general historical interest, useful as it may be to the specialist in such subjects. Nevertheless we get valuable glimpses of the attitude of the townsfolk of Dorchester, noted in the Civil War for their "malignancy"—what share they took in the conflict, what preparations for defence were made, and the result. Concerning the fortifications of the town readers of the 'History of the Rebellion' may recall a passage in which they are spoken of in a very slighting manner. Clarendon relates how

"Mr. Strode, a man much relied on....took Dorchester on his way to London; and being desired by the magistrates to view their works and fortifications, and to give his judgements of them," after he had walked about them, he told the authorities "that those works might keep out the Cavaliers about half an hour."

The importance of Dorchester in mediæval and later days may be judged by the fact that the town contained, according to Savage, only 349 houses in the 29th year of Henry VIII, and in the 36th of Elizabeth (1594) less than a score more, whilst by 1763 there were actually fewer than in Tudor times.

In this volume the corporate development of Dorchester is traced, and we learn that, whilst Exeter had a mayor in 1206, this office was not established at Dorchester until upwards of 400 years later. The first formal charter of incorporation was granted in 1610. This provided that "no person not being a free burgess or free inhabitant of the borough should presume to exercise any art, occupation, or mystery, or use any shop or station for sale therein, except in the time of fairs and markets, under pain of forfeiture, fine, and imprisonment."

Not only so, but no inhabitant was allowed to take a tenant who was not a freeman, or demise a building site to any other, or employ a journeyman or servant not approved of by the Governing Body, or sell the goods of any foreigner which he had not lawfully bought. All outside the company of freemen were styled "foreigners." Nineteen years later Charles I. granted another charter, which Canon Mayo shows must have had considerable effect in arresting the growth and development of the town.

Emerging from the backwaters of local life, as it were, and glancing down the stream of our national history, we may speculate as to what mark the brief tragedy known as the Monmouth Rebellion and the reprisals graphically related by Macaulay had on these municipal records; the answer is, apparently, none. Passing on, we find that the threats of Napoleon's invasion do not seem to have disturbed the townspeople so much as might have been expected, a subscription of fifty pounds, and a discontinuance of an entertainment usually given by the Mayor at Michaelmas, being the extent and measure of their patriotic zeal. The reason for this is afforded in the following extract:—

"The Corporation having expended a considerable sum in the building a new Town Hall prevents them from contributing more largely, and agreeable to their wishes, on the present alarming crisis....Feb., 1798."

This Town Hall, the building of which thus checked the ardour of the Corporation in the defence of their country, has disappeared; it was engraved in a nice little plate by Birrell after Nash, which shows the High Street with many old houses, since demolished. It is not included in the book now under review, in which the illustrations are few and not particularly important. The Index, however, is copious and excellent; and students will appreciate the accurate and scholarly nature of the work.

The Political History of England.—Vol. IX. 1702–60. By I. S. Leadam. (Longmans & Co.)

MR. LEADAM avails himself freely of the labours of scholars, yet his own pages bear ample witness to the fact that we are reading the words of one who has done original work. It is unreasonable to expect one man to cover all the documents of a period so large as that assigned to Mr. Leadam, indeed, the scope of the series to which his book belongs probably forbids it; but we can easily detect many indications that the author often verifies the statements of the authorities he uses. The publications of the Historical Manuscripts Commission have been used with judgment, and the independent work he has done on the Hardwicke and Newcastle papers adds to the value of the book. Mr. Leadam possesses that gift of selecting and disposing incident which is essential for the confused time with which he deals. He has succeeded admirably in the difficult task of giving a luminous and concise account of the events underlying the succession of Ministry after Ministry and party after party, the numerous diplomatic revolutions of the first half of the eighteenth century, and their influence on the destinies of England. A curious feature of this period is the occasional incursion of foreign adventurers into the affairs of countries with which they had no obvious connexion. Alberoni, the son of an Italian gardener, and Ripperda, a self-seeking Dutchman, each in his turn imposed themselves on the leaders of Spain; later in the century Casanova and Cagliostro found princely ears for their charlatanry; while Frederick's indifference to the nationality of his instruments is notorious. Law, the Scotsman, is remarkable among these adventurers, because he not merely subjugated the Regent's judgment, but also obtained a momentary empire over almost the whole of French society, high and low. Russia was more often than not ruled by foreigners. In England alone, thanks chiefly to Parliamentary government, our rulers escaped from the wiles of such schemers, anxious to promote grandiose projects for their own glory and profit; but the difference of circumstances was so little understood at the time that Ripperda is stated to have had strong hopes of transferring his activities to England after he had been expelled from Spain.

To some extent Mr. Leadam's book suffers from the fact that we have not in this series Prof. Lodge's volume on the period from 1660 to 1702 before us. English foreign policy is intelligible from 1660 to 1748 when we bear in mind the use the great Courts of Europe made of the house of Stuart. This house fell in 1649, was restored in 1660, and finally crashed to the ground in 1688. An historian can now write the adverb "finally," but to the men of the eighteenth century it was not at all clear that the second fall was irremediable. For many years after the flight of James II. efforts were made to restore the exiled dynasty. The ill-planned expedition to Ireland, and the "Fifteen" and the "Forty-Five," are specially notable, yet a careful reading of the secret history of the time soon discloses other schemes that seemed destined to succeed. The plan of the astute Louis XIV. was to maintain many pretenders in order to create diversions elsewhere, and accordingly he supported Ragoczy in Hungary, Max Emanuel in Bavaria, and James III. in England. In this respect at least Louis XV. followed in the steps of his great predecessor, for when he wanted to secure Flanders in 1744, he supported Prince Charles Edward in an expedition against England that year. But, owing to a fierce storm, the plan fell through; and as Charles Edward was no longer useful to him, Louis did not support the second expedition in 1745.

That projected in 1749 was prepared with care. The author readily sees the connexion between foreign affairs and events in Scotland and England, but it is evident that the similar relations between the continent and Ireland lie largely outside the sphere of his knowledge. The evidence for this union of Irish and French interests is contained in the Southwell papers, the King correspondence, and the unpublished State Papers in the Record Office. Still, even a perusal of printed documents shows the vital character of this union, for from the reasons laid down in the Penal Code it is clear that the harsh legislation of Louis XIV. and his plots against England served in no scanty measure to place some terrible enactments on the Statute Book of Ireland. If Mr. Leadam turns again to Unno Klopp's 'Fall des Hauses Stuart'—and he uses Klopp freely—he will find much evidence in support of this statement. The reports of the Imperial ambassadors are decisive in this matter. Indeed, it is not too much to say that the influence of imitation on legislation has rarely been more forcibly witnessed. We regret that we cannot help the writer in his attempt to solve completely the mystery of the origin of the blow dealt at the Irish Nonconformists by the hands of the English Ministry of 1704. We lately examined the unpublished State Papers for this period, and found that Froude's pencillings on the documents seriously interfered with our use of them. The author's account of the Palatine settlement in Ireland ought to have dealt somewhat more fully with the causes of its failure. William King and Southwell planned a plantation in the South corresponding to the famous one in the North. Southwell tried, indeed, to bring the linen trade from Lisburn to Kilkenny, and Crommelin seconded his efforts. The Palatines were to a large extent tradesmen, and they were now expected to become farmers; naturally the scheme resulted in failure. We are glad to notice that in discussing the Sherlock v. Annesley case Mr. Leadam refers to the decision of the Irish Court of Exchequer, February 24th, 1709. We wish, however, that he had given a reference to the famous litigation between William King and the corporation of Londonderry. This lawsuit made King a convinced Nationalist, and he consequently urged his friend Molyneux to write 'The Case of Ireland's being bound by Acts of Parliament in England Stated.' Mr. Leadam is in error in stating that King was Irish: he was a Scotsman, and when his people came to Ireland became more Irish than the Irish themselves.

In closely packed, lucidly written chapters the author surveys the rise and fall of Walpole and the early career of the elder Pitt. He never loses himself in details, nor forgets in following ramifications the main objects of policy, whether abroad or at home. We are pleased with the excellent short chapter on the literature and manners of the period; still, twenty-four pages seem a scanty allowance for the important years from the accession of Anne to the death of George II.

The whole book affords a singularly compact, clear, and well-proportioned account of a complicated period. The six plans of battles and the two maps constitute an important addition to the volume. The bibliography forms an admirable feature; in fact, it renders the book invaluable to those who wish to carry their studies further. We are specially pleased that an effort has been made to render the student some assistance by critical hints in this section, and to point out where he may best obtain information of a more detailed nature than can be given within the limits of a general history.

NEW NOVELS.

Daphne; or, Marriage à la Mode. By Mrs. Humphry Ward. (Cassell & Co.)

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD, having investigated the social life of the United States, has evidently issued this work with the idea of furnishing a tract against any tampering with the English marriage laws. For ourselves, we think the book is stronger as an indictment of the economic conditions governing marriages in many countries. The case presented is not that of a girl who, by reason of unfulfilled expectations of inherited wealth, finds it necessary to marry for money, but of a man in a similar position who has a mother of luxurious tastes dependent on him. The author assumes that a headstrong young lady of great individuality and large fortune might prove the guardian angel of an essentially weak man, and seems to maintain that the woman's knowledge of the ease with which divorce is obtainable in certain American States directly encouraged the final catastrophe.

We have no intention of defending the marriage laws prevalent in certain parts of the United States, but we think the instance mainly dealt with in this book will not strengthen the opposition to them. It is easy to conceive a greater tragedy caused by the greater difficulties in dissolving marriage in England. Mrs. Ward's story does not give us the impression of time and care spent on it which her earlier novels do; in fact, we are disappointed with it.

The Perjurer. By W. E. Norris. (Constable & Co.)

THE PERJURER is a gallant and kindly colonel with a doubtful past who considers himself too old to aspire to the hand of an attractive young lady of fortune, and who ensures the success of a younger suitor by taking on himself entirely blame which was his only to a minor degree. Whilst the unfolding and development of his characters are taking place, Mr. Norris provides us with an interesting, if not powerful story; but when he thinks it necessary to introduce tragedy, he is not convincing. The death of the altruistic colonel gives us the feeling that, if virtue must be its own reward, in this case it has hardly obtained a minimum wage.

The June Princess. By Constance Smedley. (Chatto & Windus.)

THE royal lady of the title is a frank, fascinating, up-to-date young person, the moving spirit in an International Society for bringing together the women of different countries. Bent on a career as the only thing in life worth having, she accepts a position which brings her independence and a flat of her own in town. After passing through a phase of graceful philandering with more or less devoted admirers, the princess finds peace, born, it seems, of Christian Science, and we leave her rejoicing in the conviction that "even the peeling of an orange becomes interesting if one does it as well as one possibly can"—that life is beautiful, and happiness depends on oneself alone. Miss Smedley has given an exact portrait of a type which she understands intimately and sympathetically. The story is purest fantasy in its method. There is little incident, and in plot the comedy is perhaps too slight to bear the weight of its verbal embroidery.

The Dartmoor House that Jack Built. By John Trevena. (Alston Rivers.)

LOVING the country; disillusioned, if ever illusion existed, as regards the dwellers in it; calling the townsmen from their crowded cities, and at the same time holding up an ugly mirror of the types which the soil fosters, Mr. Trevena again shows his grip of ironic humour. As there is more than a hint of autobiography, interest wanders rather from the work itself to the author. Whole chapters are witty, but one misses the sustained romance of the author's previous Dartmoor stories, and the connecting links are so slight that from the narrative point of view the book is somewhat dull.

Sir Guy and Lady Rannard. By H. N. Dickinson. (Heinemann.)

AMONG frankly pathological novels we do not recall one which surpasses this study of a politician's progressive insanity caused by overwork and suspiciousness. The politician is Sir Guy Rannard, who, by a system of corruption demanding great skill and industry, is returned by an enormous majority as Conservative M.P. for a provincial town. After a period of estrangement, his wife has the misfortune to fall in love with him for the first time, with the result that she is present at the exhibitions of tactlessness, rudeness, and political effrontery which precede the collapse of his intellect. There is much to admire in the story. Sir Guy is far more than a case; he has all that constitutes a fascinating personality, and his wife, impotently apprehensive and businesslike, is drawn with much sympathy and care. The Conservatives whom Sir Guy scandalizes are also done well—especially a group composed of members of one family, whose impenetrable suavity appeals to the imagination.

Meg of the Salt-Pans. By May Aldington. (Everett & Co.)

MRS. ALDINGTON'S theme is the marriage of a pregnant girl to a man who believes in her chastity. The circumstances precluding the marriage are needlessly improbable, and there is abundant evidence of the author's sentimentality. Humorous relief is afforded by some well-drawn Kentish yokels; and an attractive character is a curate who looks after the inn named in the title when the landlady is away. There is a good deal that would impress one as powerful if the mechanism of the story were more plausible.

VERSE.

Poems. By the Rev. Dr. R. W. Dixon. With Memoir by Robert Bridges. (Smith, Elder & Co.)—Though still capable of inspiring an almost unbridled enthusiasm among its admirers, Canon Dixon's poetry is not of a kind to command popularity. Of its loftiness and dignity of conception—whether in the "pictorial pre-Raphaelitism" of its early stages, or in its maturer and more eclectic development—there can be no two opinions; but in disclaiming all sympathy with the persons alluded to by Mr. Robert Bridges as regarding "finish not only as indispensable, but as the one satisfying positive quality," we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that adequacy and fitness of expression are as much of the essence of poetry as the thought which inspires it. Here it is that Dixon was apt to fall short of the ideal, and his numerous "inequalities," often traceable to this source, while leaving the thinker unassailed, detract not a little from the glory of the poet. The present selection, of which the principle has been to include as far as possible "complete poems," illustrates well the characteristic excellences and demerits of Dixon's work. The perfect lyric 'The Feathers of the Willow'; the peculiarly haunting lines—with their echoes of the days of the Brotherhood—beginning

Over the hill I have watched the dawning;

the stanzas 'To Shadow,' and 'Love's Consolation,' to name but a few, would suffice to place their author among the poets that count. Here also are many instances of that power of vivid suggestion which is one of his most individual traits, as in the lines,

In tottering row, like shadows, silently
The old pier timbers struggle from the sea;

or the following stanzas from 'O Ubi? Nusquam':—

Behold, the poplar trees divide
The long-drawn space where sunset died;
There still is the redly ebbing light
Dying beneath the hand of night.

The cloud-bars now with solemn pain
Upclose, and all is wrapped in rain:
Ah no, that sky holds not her form;
It is the altar of the storm.

On the other hand, lines like

Art thou standing on the shore
Which the spirits tremble o'er,
Ere they take the plunge for ever
In the bottomless receiver?

serve to show how perilously Dixon's poetic instinct could slumber at times; and certain so-called 'Songs,' besides being ill-adapted to singing, touch an imaginative level so low as to make us wonder at their presence in the volume.

Mr. Bridges in an interesting and militant memoir displays more than a trace of the bias of friendship. His tendency is to pass lightly over the poet's shortcomings, and he expresses the view that Dixon "exhibited far higher poetic gifts than Morris," while his comparison of the latter's famous line,

Two red roses across the moon with Blake's

With happiness stretched across the hills, in support of that contention, is as helpful and relevant as most comparisons of things totally dissimilar. Both memoir and notes, however, contain a wealth of trenchant criticism and pleasant reminiscence, and the selection here made should go far towards securing for their author something of the wider recognition he undoubtedly deserves.

Artemision: Idylls and Songs. By Maurice Hewlett. (Elkin Mathews.)—Mr. Hewlett's verse is the verse of the scholar and the man of letters: its sweetness is reminiscent, its ruggedness carefully devised, and its similitudes neither striking nor yet commonplace. In the three long poems, 'Leto's Child,' 'The Niobids,' and 'Latmos,' the narrative moves with a dignity illuminated by, rather than compounded of, the elusive imaginings which are the secret fountain of poetry; as in the following delicate descriptive touch:—

When all the tired autumnal air
Trembled with morning blue and rare, or in the haunting sense of mystery expressed in the lines:—

But over Thebæ came,
Blown on a dawn wind, tidings of the fame
Of new unearthly visitants, of white
Clear forms seen sharply in the naked light
Before day broke—thunderous dawns, a flare
Across the still blue, flames driven thro' the air
From peak to peak, voices afar yet loud,
A great Shape stooping in a luminous cloud
Earthways, whereto the trees bent down their heads.

The Hellenic atmosphere of the poems, admirably sustained as a whole, is marred by some lapses. The passage

And Thebæ's streets were still—only the watch
Paced slow the ways, looking at every latch
And eyeing every hurrier—suggests the metropolitan police constable; the words "a muezzin call to prayer," as applied to the orisons of the sons and daughters of Niobe, are jarring and uncalled for, and such expressions as "the nervy look" and "sprinting toes" are unworthy of serious poetical effort; while the lines, and felt the dry

Dull knife of Sorrow gride and grope (Carving blunt-edged her horoscope), suggest a puzzling misconception as to the nature and properties of a horoscope. Diction and imagery alike are more consistent in the nine sonnets called collectively 'Hymnia's Wreath,' though Mr. Hewlett is not so far master of the sonnet form as at all times to command lucidity, as witness the following:—

She stood erect and shaking; so ere one hiss
Of terror bared the snake in mannish tune,
Shot a keen shaft upon him, where, presumably, the tyranny of rhyme has wrought confusion.

The author is most successful in the shorter pieces, notably in 'Songs of Occasions,' among which those entitled respectively 'To Crocuses' and 'A Song for a Lute at Night,' together with the stanzas beginning "Ask me not how much I love you," have a pleasant seventeenth-century savour.

River Music, and other Poems, by W. R. Titterton (Elkin Mathews), is a mixture of serious and light verse, uniformly facile, and uniformly prone to the thinness which is facility's chief pitfall. In his graver moods Mr. Titterton writes fluently, in musical lines, without much depth or distingtion, on such innocuous and familiar topics as boats drifting seaward, lilies by the river bank, spring, and the like. He seems unable, however, to abstain for long from sudden descents to ill-timed burlesque, which suggest a zealous but inept student of Calverley, who, failing to read the secret of the master's cunning, takes bare incongruity for humour. In pursuance of this conception, a pleasantly melodious little lyric called 'Down from the Alp'—which shows, indeed, a fuller picturesqueness and mastery of rhythm than any of its fellows—is ruined by the intrusive facetiousness of its concluding lines, heralded grandiosely enough by a row of dots:—

(And what is still more shocking, I have neither shoe nor stocking,
And my single coat is parting at the seams.)

Of the serious verse, the following stanza from 'A Lullaby' is a fair example:—

Lily and rose, lily and rose,
Lazily rock in your nest on the shore—
Shore of the stream where the thick grass grows,
Shadows you so that the birds cannot find you,
Breezes can chill not, and suns cannot blind you
(Flashes at noon—then shadow once more)—
Lazily rock till your eyelids close,
Life is a lullaby, lily and rose.

Triviality is too frequent in the book, and neither its poetical nor its humorous qualities are of a kind to appeal to the discerning.

Narkissos. By W. (Kegan Paul & Co.)—Despair is likened to Narcissus, "the fabled youth," in the first of this loosely linked sequence of poems, and is further hinted at as the source of their inspiration, so that a general morbidness of tone will not come as a surprise to the reader. The verses approach monotony, and the personal element in them renders their appeal somewhat limited; but the technique is excellent throughout, and many of the measures go with a Swinburnian swing. An oft-recurring sex motif is handled crudely and without restraint, though the stanzas following prove the author to be capable of writing a dainty and thoughtful love-lyric:—

If I should meet
My love to-night,
Earth were more sweet
By this delight.

No man would miss
What I had gained,
By my heart's bliss
No man were pained.

Not for my sake
To stay the sun
In heaven, nor make
The past undone,

No thing too great
Is this I pray,
That she, Oh fate
Might come my way.

Despite occasional rhymes like "Hellas" and "cellars," or "is him" and "kiss him," the book shows promise, and a sense of melody and rhythm which might be employed to better advantage.

Mr. Gilbert Hudson's opening poem, Vanderdecken (Elkin Mathews), is a protracted soliloquy, purporting to come from the lips of the Flying Dutchman, and couched in indifferent blank verse, of which the merit may be gauged by such characteristic lines as

How long? Will this commotion never cease Without me and within?

or

Times untold
This has been so, and will be times again,
The same deceitful phantom proving fresh
And potent evermore. O misery!

'A Song of Robin Hood' and 'The Journey: a Christmas Carol,' emphasize the prevailing insignificance both of diction and ideas—the one by an infelicitous attempt at a rollicking metre, the other by a profuse indulgence in italics. Beyond its freedom from technical errors, there is little to commend in the volume.

Mr. Frederick Arthur's verse in Rosemary (Longmans & Co.) is even and conscientious, and well equipped in technical skill. In its shorter lyrics, however, the commonplace props of minor poetry are much in evidence, and such lines as the following, from the poem called 'To A—,' are typical of the prevailing weakness of the volume:—

Now many years have passed, but still the same
Sweet glamour holds me wrapt when you do sing,
As when you 'mid the yellow roses came,
And, singing, left the hills re-echoing.
Ah me! the sound of thy sweet voice doth bring Memories embalmed in the distant past
To life; and thoughts like swallows on the wing
Their passing shadows o'er my vision cast.

'The Scholar Hermit,' with its tale of a second Chrysostom, dwelling in Roman Britain, of the doubts that assailed him, and the ultimate vindication of his faith, is a more ambitious attempt; but distinctive qualities, both of imagery and diction, are lacking, and the author's blank verse, though creditable, scarcely rises to the solemnity of its subject.

Dainty fancy and a sense of music and colour, combined with a genuine lyrical instinct, lend real distinction to the verses in Miss L. Alma Tadema's modestly named volume, A Few Lyrics (Elkin Mathews). Though slight in conception, they successfully avoid triviality; and the feeling for nature, at once delicate and sincere, which pervades them, is seen in such delightful pen-pictures as the following from 'Marsh Autumn':—

The willows in the water stand,
Wet-foot willows in a ring—
The willows in the water stand
Like fairy children hand in hand,
And the golden leaves fall fluttering.

The sheep are in the low wet green,
Browsing sheep mid grass and sedge—
The sheep are in the low wet green,
While rook and starling walk between,
And the white gull wades at the water's edge.

The little poems of childhood which form the first part of the book are admirable in their spontaneity and freedom from affectations, and—notably in the case of 'Brothers,' 'Winter Birds,' and 'A May Morning'—recall something of the unstudied simplicity of the 'Songs of Innocence.'

There is little force or freshness in Mr. Alex. Blair Thaw's abstract meditations, Pæstum, and other Poems (Kegan Paul & Co.), whether they treat of the melancholy of the past, as in the opening verses, or the more popular themes of love, religion, and speculation as to a future state. The three sonnets 'To Poetry,' and that called 'When Chaos dwelt on Earth,' are painstaking and harmonious; and in the stanzas entitled 'In Memoriam, Robert Louis Stevenson,' the author makes some approach to genuinely poetical atmosphere and feeling. We quote the last two stanzas:—

Gladly we give him service. Let us keep
This last long watch with him! The night is come,
The sails are set upon an unknown deep.
That light which led us outward from the home
Our fathers made he ne'er may see again:—
But he hath set new fires within the hearts of men!

Well may we bear him tribute. Golden sails
Take forth our treasure to the sunset sea.
The strong sweet wind that swells them never fails,
And with a braver faith, our hearts shall be Upborne by that pure breath which in his words
Still lives, as on great sea-winds soar the grey-winged birds.

The general trend, however, both of ideas and diction, is to be fluent and flimsy, and technique leaves much to be desired. That the author does not disdain the "sure returns of still expected rhymes" is clear from the presence, in one six-line stanza, of such a familiar gathering as "trees," "breeze," "dreams," "streams," "wood," and "flood." His metrical instinct, too, is unsound: a slightly pompous 'Inauguration Ode,' dedicated to "The American People," passes without justification of sense or context from the heavy irregular iambic lines usually associated with this class of composition to a lightsome measure that recalls the 'Ingoldsby Legends' at their gayest. The mischief wrought by ill-judged compression and pauses out of place is exemplified in the following from the poem addressed 'To Homer':—

First kindled in a woman's eyes,
Fire burned high Troy; and beckoned men
From home: and from the skies
The gods. Those flames yet rise,
Year now as then,

where the concluding line appears to set the canons of language at defiance. We may add that in his tribute to the mellifluousness of the same poet—

Bees on thy lips still cling,
Now, as of old—

Mr. Thaw betrays a humorous sense that is in need of cultivation.

Light and Shade, and other Poems, by R. C. Lehmann (Blackwood & Sons), is a pleasant volume of light verse, the greater part of which has already made its appearance in the pages of Punch and Blackwood's Magazine. Mr. Lehmann's peculiar rhythmic power serves often to mask a thinness both in his subject and the humour of it; but the poems inspired by childhood, whether they be concerned with its purely domestic aspect, or with such institutions as 'The Children's Country Holiday Fund,' are altogether charming in their sympathy and insight. The least effective, perhaps, is 'The Cry of the Russian Children in Time of Famine,' which, opening with the line

What cry was that? I thought I heard a cry, and continuing, after the specification of certain familiar possible alternatives,

Again! it is a cry! and yet again!

is reminiscent of an outworn and artificial method, and furnishes in its beginning an excellent example of the way in which such a poem should not be begun. More characteristic of the author at his best, and in vigorous mood, is 'The Song of the Oar' with its 'Variations,' from the first of which we quote:—

On Saturday, next Saturday, the twenty-sixth of March,
When other folk are breakfasting or getting out of bed—
Where Putney Bridge divides the flood with buttress and with arch,

Two Eights shall start for victory (and one shall go ahead).
Oh it's getting to your stake-boat that makes you shake and shiver,

Where the launches all are fretting in the middle of the river;

And it's taking off your sweater, and it's gripping of your oar,

With your coxwain looking glum,
While a deep expectant hum

Comes like surges of a stormy sea that beats upon the shore;

And it's "Forward, are you ready?" and you lie there side by side,

Till the Umpire's flashing pistol sets you racing on the tide!

Of the rest, we single out the three delightful little poems dealing with the Elf-king, his 'Hunting,' his 'Victory,' and his 'Christmas-Tree,' which smack somewhat of the fairyland of Mr. Alfred Noyes; while 'The Legend of the Lost Heir' is a mass of felicitous whimsicality, set forth with Gilbertian matter-of-factness and fluency.

Topical verse of a bygone day is seldom exhilarating, and requires inherent qualities of humour and an Aristophanic wit, if it is to justify resuscitation. Lacking these essentials, Odds and Ends, by Mr. R. Montagu Tabor (Longmans & Co.), which consists largely of ephemeral pieces published in various periodicals some years back, strikes us as thin and not a little dreary. In the case of 'Fragmentum Homericum,' with its sonorous opening,

Μῆνιν ἄειδε, θεά, 'Πανδόλφου Μαργβυρίδαο ὀλομένην, ἣ' μύρι' ἑταίροις ἀλγε' ἔθηκεν, the very humour of incongruity has kept alive something of the Cabinet vicissitudes of twenty years ago; but such stanzas as those on the second Home Rule Bill, or the threatened "'trek' by the Boers into Mashonaland in 1891," depending solely on the intrinsic and fleeting interest of their respective subjects, possess little attraction for us to-day. Mr. Tabor's versification is ingenious, and occasionally derives piquancy from the device (somewhat over-frequently employed, perhaps) of alternating Latin lines, as in 'The Channel Tunnel,' from which we quote the following:

From the Admiralty Pier
Navis iter urgens
For the Calais port did steer
Super æquor surgens;
On her deck the tripper crew,
Misere prostrati,
Shuddered at the nearer view
Maris agitati.

The humours of golf, cricket, and the river are treated in undistinguished fashion, and in 'Our Lady of Gain' the author has indulged, not very successfully, in the usual Swinburnian parody. He has the gifts of metrical facility and apt rhyming, but these in themselves do not suffice.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Ten Personal Studies. By Wilfrid Ward. (Longmans & Co.)—The weakest of these essays is the first, on Mr. Balfour. The Athenæum cannot attempt to deal with its politics, but we do not hesitate to say that the article, originally written in May, 1905, should have been reconstructed, and not merely brought down to date by a postscript, supplemented by an appendix. The first sentence of the postscript, by the way, is unintelligible as it is printed. The other "personal" studies will add to Mr. Wilfrid Ward's reputation, even if the personal element does not always amount to much. They display, on the whole, no small skill in portraying character, especially when, as in the case of Henry Sidgwick, it is complicated by delicate shades of feeling. Mr. Ward is sometimes over-ingenious. We feel bound to remark that he discovers a depth of intention in Sir M. E. Grant Duff's diaries down to which we have never penetrated. He by no means exaggerates, on the other hand, the moral earnestness that made Richard Holt Hutton a power in the land, nor is he less successful in dealing with the masterful editorship of Delane. Mr. Ward writes candidly, and of course with intimate knowledge, on eminent Roman Catholics like Wiseman, Newman, Manning, and Father Ignatius Ryder. His parallel between Newman and Manning will not win universal assent, we imagine, from those of his faith, but it is a suggestive piece of work. Most of these essays are reproduced with modifications from the reviews; two, on 'The Genius of Cardinal Wiseman' and on 'John Henry Newman' respectively, were originally addresses.

A Holiday in Connemara, by Stephen Gwynn (Methuen), is a very readable volume, printed on light paper which is pleasant to hold, with some attractive photographs, and plenty of attractive gossip. There is a great deal of detailed geography, which becomes a weariness to the reader, especially as Mr. Gwynn has not given us a map of Connemara, with his routes marked upon it. But it affords a handle for picturesque observations, and helps to fill up the book. The main purpose, however, is not geographical, or even touristic, but political, and on to this debatable ground it is not our province to follow the author. His opinions are well known; he is now an ardent advocate of the spreading of the use of Irish among the people, as a force promoting Irish nationality. He also strongly advocates bringing the people back to the land, and turning out the cattle, by which policy the rich grass plains of Ireland would be handed over to the peasantry. One objection is that they might combine to bring back the cattle, and live on the profits, in preference to tilling the ground; for they know perfectly well that the profits of cattle-growing are vastly greater than those of tillage, unless the latter is very scientific and worked with great diligence. And though the Irish are capable of enormous diligence—their harvestmen in England amply prove it—they are also capable of enormous idleness, as the same harvestmen can exhibit; for all over the world the Irishman is far too clever to do work himself, if he can get it done by somebody else. Among people of this kind the Congested Districts Board is expected to acquire land and divide it. What the expectations are appears from the following sentence:—

"A holding for a family, in Father John's view, meant about 100 acres in all, with a house somewhere down near the road, and a few acres, perhaps 5, perhaps 10, dug and manured and cropped annually; the rest a sheep-run with one or two beasts among the sheep. Such a life is only possible at the cost of unremitting labour, yet thousands in Connaught are craving for the mere chance of it."

Of course they are; nothing would delight them more than to get 100 acres each; but subletting and rackrenting might be the result.

Mr. Gwynn is a keen fisherman, and has the interest in that great Irish resource constantly before him. But when he says that legislation regarding salmon fishing must be wholly directed to the sea fishing, and not to the rivers, he surely forgets the fact that rod fishing is a most profitable asset to any district. Every salmon, they say in Ireland, killed by an amateur costs him at least a sovereign; and the occupation given to the people on and about the river is what they love. Even the trout lakes of the north, now mostly ruined by pike, could be made worth 100% a year each on the average, great and small, and would damage nothing. Amid these topics there is much pleasant talk with and about the natives, and a genuine appreciation of the social charm which makes them such delightful company. But politics, alas! are likely to spoil them more even than they spoil other nationalities.

MR. EDMUND B. D'AUVERGNE traces the history of Lola Montez (Werner Laurie) from her days of Simla and the second elopement of her husband, this time via Madras, with another lady, to the Mysore hinterland. For the early days his authority is necessarily the adventuress herself; and her later life at the Court of Bavaria and in London is well known.

The Russian Bastille is an account of Schluesselburg, translated by Dr. Rappoport from the Russian of I. P. Youvatshev, and published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus. It is well illustrated, and full of interest for those who care for the detail of Russian revolution. It does not, however, appeal to a larger public.

MR. JAMES DOUGLAS is the cleverest of the impressionists who provide weekly amusement and occasional instruction for the popular eye. He has fluency, great fertility of resource in the choice of subjects, and sufficient impertinence to be piquant. To read all his Adventures in London (Cassell) at one sitting would cause something like literary indigestion, for the crowd demands from its purveyors a highly spiced article—epigram, exaggeration, and short "snappy" sentences which irritate the lover of good taste. The ordinary public must be amazed and amused at once.

We spoke of instruction, but without any idea of the heaviness usually attached to that word. Mr. Douglas has plenty of ideas, though he imparts them, fortunately, with none of the solemnity of the prophet and philosopher. He gaily hits off a crowd of people who probably resemble Joey Bagstock in not overdoing the exercise of thought; but he notes also the serious side of London—the squalor and misery and horror of it, and the eternal ironies of town and country which entertained the plump little satirist of Augustan Rome. There is enough in any great city to depress an observer, but there is also abundance of humour for those who can see it. The title of 'Adventures' is fully justified, for our author seems to be one of those happy persons to whom things happen—a Stevensonian by disposition and good luck. He can go round a corner, and light on colour and romance where the ordinary taxpayer sees only a collection of dull houses and colourless people.

He is, too, not confined in a groove, and has no favourite subject or set of quotations to fall back on when inspiration flags. This is a distinct advantage for those readers who are blessed (or should we say handicapped?) with decent memories. The general public, of course, has no memory at all, and little reverence for the past. It is less and less impressed by what Mr. Gladstone said or anybody else did a few years back: at the bidding of a sensational press it makes and unmakes reputations with startling rapidity—nowhere more so than in the world of mimes, to which some of the brightest pages of the book are devoted. These accounts conceal criticism in deliberately fantastic caricature, and are an agreeable variation on the usual sentimental personalia concerning an absurdly prominent class. Of less-known themes we may mention a study of Deptford Market; 'Yom Kippur,' a view of Israel in the East End; and 'Wonderland,' a hall of pugilism. Indeed, the curiosities of many English sports are examined with an equal zest whether the chronicler writes as an expert or a wondering onlooker.

The Englishwoman in India, by Maud Diver (Blackwood & Sons), is a reprint of articles which originally appeared in Womanhood. They are worthy of collection in their present more permanent form, but the title is somewhat misleading. The first seventy-three pages are devoted to Anglo-Indian ladies in their various capacities of maid, wife, mother, hostess, and house-keeper, and are a fair and impartial presentment of facts as they are.

The next eighty-nine pages treat of subjects with which Englishwomen in India are to a certain extent concerned, such as female medical aid, missions, education, and arts and crafts. These are developed by ladies who are the devotees of work in distinction to play, though some persons manage to combine the pursuits:—

"Of these was the Marchioness of Dufferin, whose sincere, unassuming sympathy and interest resulted in the great Female Medical Aid Fund;—in her own words 'A national association, with a central committee, full central funds, and branches in every part of India.'"

The final seventy-nine pages are frankly about Indian women, pioneers of progress whose "priceless gentleness" combined with ability has commanded considerable success. Curiously enough, the chief opposition to schemes for the advancement of learning comes from the Indian ladies themselves; the fathers of girls, we are told encourage its pursuit. The little volume is full of interest, well written, and generally, well produced.

MESSRS HURST & BLACKETT have also joined the publishers who produce novels at sevenpence. Their first two volumes, The Strongest of All Things and The Youngest Miss Mowbray, offer excellent entertainment, and are produced in a good style, the binding being especially tasteful.

THE WILLOW-WREN.

"Half angel and half bird."

FAR overseas he roamed the winter through,
His way by Kasvin and Khorassan winging,
And now he haunts the Surrey hills anew
To charm their woodlands with his faery singing.
His prelude seems the very voice of Spring,
Through the green larchwood as he flits and perches;

Even such an air a dryad's wraith might sing
Between the beeches and the silver birches.
Light-poised, half-hid, aloft upon the spray,
Hued like the olive, fine and willow-slender,
Over and over through the lyric day
He sings each delicate cadence, shy and tender.
But when the May flowers fade and grass grows long,

In wistful sequel, set 'twixt speech and sighing,
Faint fall the lingering closes of his song,
Most sweet—most sad: he knows the Spring is dying. ROSAMUND MARRIOTT WATSON.

M. J. DE GOEJE.

THE death, after a long illness, of Michiel Johannes de Goeje removes the greatest European Arabist of our time. Born in 1836, he studied Arabic at the University of Leyden under Juynboll and Dozy. For both these scholars he had a warm and affectionate regard, which they fully reciprocated; and young as he was, they soon found him a valuable colleague in their scientific labours. Long afterwards, in his charming biography of the great Dutch historian, De Goeje described his eagerness to obtain permission to attend Dozy's lectures, and how he achieved his purpose:—

"I do not think I have ever worked so hard as in the summer of that year. At last, in September, 1856, I ventured to make my request. The answer was not encouraging. Dozy informed me that he had no time to spare, adding that I should not, of course, be able to follow his advanced lectures. I then gave him an account of my work: I told him that I had read several of his books from beginning to end, besides De Sacy's 'Chrestomathy' and more than half of 'The Thousand and One Nights'; finally, I begged him to let me show what I could do. Without saying a word, he took down a volume or two from the shelves of his library and bade me translate some passages. The battle was won."

Six years later he visited Oxford in order to study Arabic history and philology in the splendid collection of Oriental manuscripts preserved at the Bodleian. On the death of Dozy in 1883, De Goeje succeeded him as Professor of Arabic at Leyden, a post which he held until a few years ago, when failing health obliged him to relinquish it.

Unlike some famous living Orientalists, he devoted himself almost exclusively to the Arabic language and literature. This immense field he explored far and wide, and made large portions of it accessible to students by the critical editions which he published of many primary sources of information. His stupendous industry no less than his mastery of Arabic enabled him to produce a series of admirable texts covering thousands of pages, and involving in their preparation and correction for the press an unceasing tax on his energies. Besides the monumental edition of Tabarî, which he organized and carried out with the assistance of other well-known Orientalists (1879-1901), his most important publications are the "Bibliotheca Geographorum Arabicorum" in eight volumes (1870-94), "Fragmenta Historicorum Arabicorum" in two volumes (1869-71), Balādhuri's history of the early Moslem conquests (1863-8), the "Diwān" of Muslim b. Walid (1875), the biographies of Arabian poets by Ibn Qutaiba (1904), and "Mémoires d'Histoire et de Géographie orientales," which include an extremely interesting account of the Carmathian heretics. He collaborated with several Dutch scholars in compiling a catalogue of the Oriental manuscripts in the Leyden University Library. His last work, which appeared in 1907 as the fifth volume of the Gibb Memorial, was a new edition of the travels of Ibn Jubaye, first edited by his old friend Prof. Wright of Cambridge, whose "Arabic Grammar" he had previously revised, and enriched with many remarks drawn from his profound knowledge of the language.

De Goeje possessed in a rare degree the qualities of an ideal editor: erudition, judgment, accuracy, and thoroughness. He shrank from no labour, however great, if it might lead to the solution of any difficulty. The value of his editions is enhanced by the complete indexes which he invariably provided, and by the glossaries in which he explained the meaning and usage of words occurring in the text. Together with Lane's dictionary and Dozy's "Supplément aux Dictionnaires arabes" (a work in which De Goeje took an active, but characteristically unostentatious part), these glossaries form the most fruitful contribution that has been made during the last fifty years to Arabic lexicography.

Of his personal character only his intimate friends can speak adequately. Some ten years ago he was kind enough to give a course of lectures in English for the benefit of the present writer, on whom he left an abiding impression of noble simplicity, warm-hearted geniality, and delightful humour.

JOHN MOUNTGOMERY AND THE LONDON MARCHING WATCH.

I AM pleased to find some new information concerning 'The City Marching Watch.' I did not know of the Armorer's copy. But perhaps I may be allowed to state that about twenty years ago I found the draft of "the Order" among the British Museum manuscripts, noted and transcribed it, and, about eighteen months ago, collated it with the Guildhall official copy. It then appeared in the fourth volume of Harrison's 'England' (edited by Dr. Furnivall), published last year by Messrs. Chatto & Windus.

C. C. STOPES.

THE INCORPORATED ASSOCIATION OF ASSISTANT MASTERS IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

A MEETING of Council and general meeting of members were held at the Leys School, Cambridge, last Saturday, Mr. W. A. Newsome (Stationers' School), Chairman of the Association, presiding. At the Council meeting a resolution was passed instructing the Executive Committee to take steps to establish a Sickness and Accident Insurance Fund for members, to be managed by the Association. A series of resolutions with regard to the Teachers' Register were moved by Mr. C. H. Greene (Berkhamsted School), and passed with amendments.

At the general meeting the Chairman gave an address on the work of the year, dealing mainly with the Register and the payment of teachers.

The following resolution with regard to the recent action of Local Education Authorities on the question of teachers' salaries,

"That this Association strongly protests against the unjust and unwise action of certain Local Authorities in repudiating their contractual obligations to teachers in schools under their control, and regards all attempts to suspend increases of salary, or to lower salary scales, as derogatory to the best interests of Secondary education," was moved from the chair by Mr. W. A. Newsome, who pointed out the evils which might accrue to education if such action became general. Mr. E. W. Mundy (Yeovil School) seconded, and the resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. C. H. Greene brought forward the resolutions passed by Council on the subject of the Teachers' Register. He pointed out that these resolutions were tentative, and were intended to enable the Executive Committee of the Association to answer questions which had been submitted to them. He admitted that the question of the Register had been so often discussed that many had come to the conclusion that nothing was to be expected from it; but it was a question of the greatest importance, and he hoped that some way would soon be found out of the present deadlock. He believed that a Register of the kind foreshadowed in these resolutions would satisfy teachers of all types. The resolutions were unanimously approved, and were as follows:

"1. That a comprehensive Register of Teachers should be started in accordance with the Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1906.

"2. That the Register should contain opposite the name of each teacher reference numbers indicating the Sub-Registers and Schedules in which further details of each teacher's qualifications may be found.

"3. That each Sub-Register should contain the names of teachers qualified to teach in one type of school (e.g. Primary, Secondary, and Technical); and should provide, by reference to Schedules, for the proper differentiation of teachers in respect of attainments, training, and experience.

"4. That teachers should be admissible to as many Sub-Registers and Schedules as their qualifications warrant.

"5. That a uniform fee of not less than one guinea should be paid by or on behalf of each teacher registered.

"6. That for the purposes of registration the term 'Teacher' should be provisionally defined by Order in Council.

"7. That the Order in Council should provide for the transference to the new Register of all teachers on the old Register, and for their names to be placed in the appropriate Sub-Registers.

"8. That the total amount of fees already paid for the registration of teachers (about 12,000*l.*) should be transferred to the new Registration Council.

"9. That the Order in Council should provide for the formation of a Registration Council, to consist, in addition to a small number of nominated or co-opted members, of representatives of each Sub-Register; such representatives to be elected to serve for a definite period in equal numbers by the teachers on each Sub-Register; and in such a manner as to secure that the whole Council should not retire at one time.

"10. That, as a temporary measure, the Order in Council should provide that in the first instance the Registration Council be formed in the proportions above indicated, but on nomination by certain associations or bodies to be specified in the Order."

A paper was then read by Mr. G. Warre-Cornish (University College School) on 'The Specialist and Form Systems in Secondary Schools Compared.' A full report will appear in the organ of the Association, The A.M.A., for June. A discussion followed, in which Mr. E. W. Mundy (Yeovil School), Mr. J. V. Saunders (Hymers College, Hull), the Chairman, and others took part.

It is satisfactory to note that the membership of the Association now stands at between 2,500 and 2,600. During the year which ended last March no fewer than 554 members were added. An Inquiry Sub-Committee is at work, and an Information Bureau has been engaged in collecting information.

JEANNE D'ARC IN ENGLISH CHRONICLES.

QUICHERAT, in his 'Procès de Jeanne d'Arc,' has nothing from English chronicles about the Maid from sources earlier than Caxton, except two lines concerning her capture from Wyrcester. I find, however, a few crumbs of information in MSS.

The Harleian MS. 2256, f. 200, does not even mention Jeanne as active in the relief of Orleans, which it attributes to "the Duke of Launson" (d'Alençon). Later (f. 202) it dates her capture at Compiègne as May 15 (for May 23rd), and absurdly says that there "were slayne of the Frenchmen, Armanyakkis and Scottis, ye nombre of VIII^c," while many men of coat armour were taken. Now Monstrelet, who was present, states the numbers of the French in the sortie at five or six hundred, of whom few were taken; none are known to have been prisoners, except Jeanne, her two brothers, her equerry, Jean d'Aulon, and one or two others. Jeanne is spoken of as the "wicche of France"; she "was kept in holde by the Kyng and his Counseile all tymes at his commaundement and wille."

Cotton MS. Julius B. xi., ff. 87, 88, says that Jeanne, le pucelle de dieu, was taken on May 23rd, "with many other worthy capteynes"; she was "a fals wycche. They held hire amonges hem for a propheteesse and a worthy goddess."

Cotton MS. Vitellius A. xvi., f. 87, admits that "the pusell and the Bastard of Bourbon" broke the siege of Orleans. Speaking of the arrival of Cardinal Beaufort and his Crusaders in July, 1429, the writer says that, had he not come in time, "Rome had been lost by treason." "Rome" probably means Rouen, unless by a strange inadvertence the scribe wrote "Rome" for Paris. The capture of the Maid is ascribed to Jean of Luxembourg, Sir John Steward and Sir John Montgomery. This looks as if two Scottish knights had turned traitors. The source is clearly the letter of the Duke of Burgundy (May 23rd) to Henry VI. This is a mere copy, with a few additions, of the circular letter sent by Burgundy to various persons; the letter to the town of St. Quentin is given by Quicherat.

In Études (April 20th, 1909) Father Thurston, S.J., quotes the letter and other matter from a much earlier text (Cotton, Vitellius, ix) than that used by Nicolas in 'A Chronicle of London' (1829). The Duke says that he is at Compiègne with his army, "and with those whom you sent to me under the command of Sir John Montgomery and Sir John Styward."

These look like Scottish names, taking "Styward" for Stewart; but no such knights occur in Scottish genealogies of Stewart and Montgomery. The pair, as Father Thurston has obliged me by showing, were veterans in English service. Styward was at Agincourt. He was clearly of the Stywards of Cambridgeshire, Norfolk, and Suffolk, who, after a Stuart king came to the English throne, claimed descent from the Scottish Stewarts. Mr. Horace Round has dealt with this myth.

The Montgomerys under Edward III. had lands in Southampton, and this Montgomery was a landowner in Hants, Essex, and Herts. Both knights are English, and both, says Holinshed, were wounded in the attack on the Maid and her company. As for the presence of Scots in her last charge, we have only the apocryphal statement that 800 Scots and Armagnacs fell, and the story of the Monk of Dunfermline that he was with the Maid "till her end." Father Thurston in Études quotes marvellous English brags. On July 1st they defeated 4,000 French and Scots in the forest of Compiègne, and slew 1,500! Monstrelet, far from recording this victory, says that no real attempt was made to relieve Compiègne till the successful enterprise at the end of October. There are other English boasts at least equally unsupported by Monstrelet. It is plain that the English at home knew and cared very little about Jeanne d'Arc.

A. LANG.

MORE SHELLEY CRUMBS.

THE printed catalogue of the autograph sale at Messrs. Christie's referred to in The Athenæum of the 3rd of April is more or less of a Shelley curiosity. The letter to Graham embodying an extended version of the song of Eloise in 'St. Irvyne' beginning with the line

How swiftly through Heaven's wide expanse is ingeniously described as a letter to "[George Farquhar] Graham," presumably because it begins "My dear Graham," offers Shelley's friend some verses to set to music if so disposed, and is therefore assumed to be to a musician mentioned in the 'Dictionary of National Biography' under the name of George Farquhar Graham. This was by no means a bad guess; although it is not to him that the letter was addressed, but to the Graham so familiar to us in the story of Shelley's early years, viz., Edward Graham, who had helped Shelley in matters connected with the publication of 'Zastrozzi.'

In the 'St. Irvyne' version of Eloise's song, to which Mr. Rossetti gave the name of 'St. Irvyne's Tower,' there are six quatrains: in the letter to Graham there are ten. Between 4 and 5 of 'St. Irvyne's Tower' this remnant of a manuscript reads thus:—

For there a youth with darkened brow
His long lost love is heard to mourn
He vents his swelling bosoms woe—
"Ah! when will hours like those return?"

O'er this torn soul o'er this frail form
Let feast the fiends of tortured love
Let lower dire fate's terrific storm,
I would the pangs of death to prove.]

Ah! why do prating priests suppose,
That God can give the wretch relief,
Can stop the bosom's bursting woes
Or calm the tide of frantic grief?

Within me burns a raging Hell
[line cut off with the foot of the leaf]
Fate I defy thy fiercer spell
And long for stern death's welcome ho[ur].]

No power of Earth, of Hell or Heaven
Can still the tumult of my brain
The power to none save 's given
To calm my bosom's frantic pain

The tenth stanza in the manuscript is much mutilated, but corresponds generally with the fifth in 'St. Irvyne,' thus:—

Ah why do darkening shades conceal
The hour when morn must cease to be?
Why may not human mind unveil
The dark shade of futurity?

The sixth stanza in 'St. Irvyne' is special to the version of that book, and never formed any part of the piece offered to Graham in the mutilated letter sold on the 31st of March. The fourth line of stanza 5 in 'St. Irvyne' is

The dim mists of futurity?

The catalogue prints "woe" at the end of line 3 in the seventh quatrain; but the mistake is not in the MS., which reads "woes" clearly enough.

I take this opportunity of noting that along with the letter to Leigh Hunt lent to me by Messrs. Henry Sotheran & Co. (Athenæum, April 10th) is an interesting fragment of the autograph manuscript of 'Laon and Cythna.' It was doubtless Leigh Hunt who preserved it; for it fits between two other fragments preserved by him, and dealt with in the commentary of my library edition of Shelley's works (1876-7, vol. i. p. 80 and pp. 250-4). Of four lines in this fragment, indeed, there is a facsimile in Leigh Hunt's 'Lord Byron and some of his Contemporaries': they are:—

Virtue, & Hope, & Love, like light & Heaven,
Surround the world.—We are their chosen slaves.
Has not the whirlwind of our spirit driven
Truth's deathless germs to thought's remotest caves?

So stands the manuscript: the facsimile is one of the thin-lipped copper-plate things of the period, done by no very expert hand; but I never felt disposed to dispute its evidence of Shelley's particularity about spelling with an initial capital any common noun used personally. Virtue, Hope, and Love, being sufficiently personalized to own slaves, have initial capitals; and the manuscript shows, even more clearly than Hunt's copper-plate did, that the poet had so far deliberated on the point as to paint in the capitals after writing "hope" and "love" with small initial letters. In stanza xxi. "Autumn" and "Winter" were not similarly treated, and the lack of initial capitals which the manuscript shows was not supplied even when Shelley's edition was at press. In stanza xxii. a cancelled w standing between "tears" and "that" records the poet's alertness to the objections against "which" in such a place; but in the next quatrain he finished the first and third lines both with "bearest," and did not find it out till the book was being printed. In the Alexandrine

Disturbing not the leaves which are her winding-sheet there is a cancelled reading, "grass" for "leaves"; but as "leaves" is written over it and no "is" for "are" figures in the line, "leaves" was of course an instantaneous emendation made in the act of composition.

H. BUXTON FORMAN.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Adler (Hermann), Anglo-Jewish Memories, and other Sermons, 5/ net.
Eckhart's (Meister) Sermons, 1/ net. Translated into English for the first time by Claud Field. One of the Heart and Life Booklets.
Hall (C. C.), Christ and the Eastern Soul, 6/ net.
Kelly (A. D.), Rational Necessity of Theism, 2/ net.
North (Lionel), Human Documents: Lives rewritten by the Holy Spirit, 2/6.
O'Leary (Rev. de Lacy), The Syriac Church and Fathers, 2/6. A brief review of the subject.
Powell (Lyman P.), The Emmanuel Movement in a New England Town, 5/ net. A systematic account of experiments and reflections designed to determine the proper relationship between the minister and the doctor in the light of modern needs. Illustrated.
Sauter (B.), The Sunday Epistles, 16/. Edited by his Monks, translated by J. F. Scholfield.
Sharman (H. B.), The Teaching of Jesus about the Future, 13/6 net.
Smyth (W. Woods), Bankrupt Views of the Bible, 2/6 net.
Tisdall (Rev. W. St. Clair), A Manual of the Leading Muhammadan Objections to Christianity, 2/6. Second Edition, revised.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Bradley (C. B.), The Oldest Known Writing in Siamese: the Inscription of Phra Ram Khamheng of Sukhothai, 1293. An address before the Siam Society. Reprinted from the Journal of the Society.
Clitch (G.), English Costume, from Prehistoric Times to the End of the Eighteenth Century, 7/6 net. With 131 illustrations.
Davenport (Cyril), English Heraldic Book-Stamps, 25/ net.
Photography for the Press, 1/ net. By the Editors of The Photogram.
Turner (J. M. W.), Water-Colours. Text by W. G. Rawlinson and A. J. Finberg, 5/ net. 'Studio' Spring Number.

Poetry and Drama.

- Baxter (J. D.), The Witch of Pendle, 1/6 net. A play of Tudor Days.
Bonar (Horatius), Hymns of Faith and Hope, 1/ net. A selection from the first, second, and third series. Another of the Heart and Life Booklets.
Davies (O.), Between-Time Poems, 3/6 net.
Douglas (Lord Alfred), Sonnets.
Journal of the Poetry Recital Society, No. I., 1d.
Palgrave (F. T.), The Golden Treasury, 3/6 net. New Edition, containing the first and second selections in one volume.

Music.

- Fisher (H.), The Musical Examinee, 5/ net. A series of 1,000 questions on points of theory required for various examinations, with answers.
Upton (G. P.), Women in Music, 3/6 net. Treats of the influence of women in music, and specially of the wives of famous composers.

Bibliography.

- Birmingham Free Libraries: Books and Pamphlets on Trades, Machinery, &c., in the Reference Library, Part II.

Philosophy.

- Bevan (Rev. J. O.), The Genesis and Evolution of the Individual Soul Scientifically Treated, 2/6 net. Including also problems relating to science and immortality.

History and Biography.

- Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, newly translated by E. E. C. Gomme, 6/ net.
Canadian Club of Harvard University. Edited by Benjamin Rand.
Collison-Morley (Lacy), Giuseppe Baretti, 10/6 net. Has an account of his literary friendships and feuds in Italy and in England in the days of Dr. Johnson. Has an introduction by the late F. Marion Crawford, and a portrait.
County Pedigrees: Vol. I. Nottinghamshire, 5/ net. Edited by W. P. W. Phillimore.
Curwood (J. Oliver), The Great Lakes, 15/ net. An account of the vessels that plough them, their owners, their sailors, and their cargoes, with 72 illustrations and a map.
Fletcher (C. R. L.), An Introductory History of England, 1660-1815, Vols. III. and IV., 5/ net.
Friedländer (Ludwig), Roman Life and Manners under the Early Empire, Vol. II., 6/. An English translation.
Grierson (Major-General J. M.), Records of the Scottish Volunteer Force, 1859-1908. These 'Records' are designed as a contribution to the military annals of Scotland.
Huneker (James), Egoists, 6/ net. A book concerning Stendhal, Baudelaire, Flaubert, Anatole France, Huysmans, Barrès, Nietzsche, Blake, Ibsen, Stirner, and Ernest Hello, with portrait of Stendhal, and an unpublished letter of Flaubert. The studies first appeared in various American magazines and newspapers.
Jones (M. W.), The Gunpowder Plot and the Life of Robert Catesby, 2/6 net. Includes an account of Chastleton House.
Leslie (Major John H.), The Dickson Manuscripts, January to July, 1812, 2/6. Diaries, letters, maps, account books, and various other papers of the late Major-General Sir Alexander Dickson, with 4 maps and 8 illustrations.
Oliver (F. S.), Alexander Hamilton, 1/ net. See notice of earlier edition in Athen., July 14, 1906, p. 39.
Phillips (J.), The History of Pembrokeshire, 12/6 net.
Register of the Parish Church of Knodishall, co. Suffolk 1566-1705, 6/ net. Transcribed and edited by Arthur T. Winn.
Statesman's Year-Book, 10/6 net. Edited by J. Scott Keltie with the assistance of I. P. A. Renwick.
Thomson (A.), Coldingham: Parish and Priory. The result of several years of historical research.
Watson (Col. Sir Charles M.), The Life of Major-General Sir Charles William Wilson, R.E., 15/ net. With portraits, maps, and illustrations.

Geography and Travel.

- Howe (Maud), Sun and Shadow in Spain, 12/6 net. With pictures from photographs and illustrations in colour. New Edition.

Sports and Pastimes.

- Dunn (A.), Club Bridge, 5/ net. Addressed primarily to readers who have already some acquaintance with the game.
W. G.'s Little Book, 1/ net. A popular book on cricket old and new.

Education.

- Cambridge University Reform, 6d. net.
Kikuchi (Baron Dairoku), Japanese Education, 5/ net. Lectures delivered in the University of London.

Philology.

- Modern Language Review, Vol. IV., No. III., 4/ net.

School-Books.

- Jackson (C. S.) and Roberts (W. M.), A First Dynamics, 5/ net.
Layng (A. E.), A General Textbook of Elementary Algebra, with Answers, 4/6.
Poole (W. M.) and Lassimonne (E. L.), Textes et Questions, 1/6.

Science.

- Collected Papers of Joseph, Baron Lister, 2 vols., 42/ net.
Pond I Know (The), 8d. With 14 coloured and many black-and-white illustrations. Edited by W. P. Westell and H. E. Turner.
Rausenberger (F.), The Theory of the Recoil of Guns with Recoil Cylinders, 10/6 net. Translated by Alfred Slater.
Rise and Progress of the British Explosives Industry, 15/ net. Published under the auspices of the VIIth International Congress of Applied Chemistry by its Explosive Section.
Stonham (Charles), Birds of the British Islands, Part XIV., 7/6 net. With illustrations by Lilian M. Medland.
Sutherland (W.), The Call of the Land, 6d. A book on small holdings in Scotland.

Fiction.

- Albanesi (Madame), The Strongest of All Things, 7d. net. See review in Athen., June 8, 1907, p. 693.
- Barnett (L. D.), The Golden Town, and other Tales, 2/6 net. From Soma-Deva's 'Ocean of Romance-Rivers.' Part of the Romance of the East Series.
- Batson (Mrs. Stephen), The Gay Paradises, 6/. The story of the lives of an imaginary country family of distinction early in the nineteenth century.
- Bretherton (Ralph H.), An Honest Man, 6/. The story of a man who was ruined by his own quixotry.
- Burgin (G. B.), The Slaves of Allah, 6/. A Turkish story.
- Crocker (B. M.), The Youngest Miss Mowbray, 7d. net. See Athen., Sept. 15, 1906, p. 293.
- Fry (B. and C. B.), A Mother's Son, 6d. See review of earlier issue in Athen., Aug. 24, 1907, p. 204.
- Hyne (C. J. Cutcliffe), Thompson's Progress, 7d. net. A study of a "mastful" man.
- Kaye-Smith (Sheila), Starbrace, 6/. A tale of 1745.
- Keays (H. A. Mitchell), Me and my True Love, 6/. Deals with American society.
- Lowndes (Mrs. Belloc), Studies in Wives, 6/. Some of these stories have appeared in this country, and others in America.
- Lyons (A. Neil), Sixpenny Pieces, 6/. Tales of a sixpenny East-End doctor.
- Marchmont (A. W.), Sir Gregory's Silence, 6/. Sir Gregory's son falls in love with a typist, and a rich American lady schemes to prevent their marriage. She is aided by a man who poses as a United States Senator, and attempts to blackmail Sir Gregory.
- Perrin (Alice), The Spell of the Jungle, 1/ net. See review in Athen., Jan. 3, 1903, p. 11.
- Roberts (C. D. G.), The Backwoodsmen, 6/. A volume of nature and animal stories with 22 plates.
- Shand (Christine R.), Miss Pillsbury's Fortune, 6/. The story of wealth which is built up by the advertising of pills, but does not contribute to happiness.
- Tynan (Katharine), Cousins and Others, 6/. About a dozen short stories. Irish life is well represented in the first.
- White (Percy), The House of Intrigue, 6/. Depicts a social circle expectant as to an inheritance.
- Wicks (F.), My Undiscovered Crimes, 1/ net. With illustrations by Harry Furniss and A. Morrow. One of the stories is republished; the rest are new.

General Literature.

- Country Life, Summer Number, 1/. An exceptionally large and interesting number, with special account of Blenheim.
- Hardie (J. Keir), India, 1/ net. Impressions and suggestions.
- Harris (W. J.), The First Printed Translations into English of the Great Foreign Classics, 2/6 net. A supplement to textbooks of English literature.
- Strachey (J. St. Loe), A New Way of Life, 1/ net. A plea for universal military service, reprinted from The Spectator.

Pamphlets.

- Allen (F. Sturges), Noah Webster's Place among English Lexicographers. An address delivered before the Modern Language Club at Yale University, at the commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Webster's birth, Oct. 16, 1758.
- Cambridge, Annual Report of the Fitzwilliam Museum Syndicate for 1908.

FOREIGN.

Law.

- Melli (F.), Lehrbuch des internationalen Konkursrechts, 7m. 50.

Fine Art and Archæology.

- Adam (P.), Dix Ans d'Art français, 3fr. 50.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Praviel (A.) et Brousse (J. R. de), Anthologie du Félibrige, 3fr. 50. With French translations on the facing pages.
- Reyher (P.), Les Masques anglais : Étude sur les Ballets et la Vie de Cour en Angleterre, 1512-1640.

Science.

- Cyon (E. v.), Leib, Seele, u. Geist, 4m.
- Ostwald (W.), Grundriss der Kolloidchemie, 12m.
- Urstein (M.), Die Dementia præcox u. ihre Stellung zum manisch-depressiven Irresein, 15m.

Fiction.

- Prévost (M.), Pierre et Thérèse, 3fr. 50.

. All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

'FIFTY YEARS OF NEW JAPAN' is the provisional title given to an important work on the modern growth of the country. It is compiled by Count Okuma, late Prime Minister of Japan, with the assistance and co-operation of various specialists. The work is being edited by Mr. Marcus B. Huish, Vice-Chairman of the Japan Society. It will be published in the early autumn by Messrs. Smith & Elder in two volumes.

MR. JUSTICE DARLING is publishing immediately with the same firm a book of verse, which includes 'On the Oxford Circuit' (in which he has made many changes and additions), also a number of sonnets and other poems, the whole being illustrated by Mr. Austin O. Spare.

DR. SVEN HEDIN's new book, 'Trans-Himalaya: Discoveries and Adventures in Tibet,' will be published in November by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The work, which will give a full account of the explorer's last journey, will be in two volumes, and will contain about 400 illustrations.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER have in the press a translation by the Rev. Neil Buchanan of the third edition of 'Die Lebenskräfte des Evangeliums,' which they will publish under the title of 'The Living Forces of the Gospel: Experiences of a Missionary in Animistic Heathendom,' by the Rev. Johannes Warneck.

THE REV. W. S. CROCKETT last week gave to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland the report of the Committee which have in hand the revision and bringing up to date of Dr. Hew Scott's 'Fasti Ecclesiæ Scoticanæ,' which records the names of all the ministers of the Church of Scotland from the Reformation downwards. The work of chronicling the succession within each of the 1,433 parishes of the Church is proceeding satisfactorily. Scott brought it down to 1839, and when it is revised and written up to date the Committee hope to publish the whole in six volumes of 600 pages each.

THE death was announced from Torquay last week of Mr. G. R. Elsmie, C.S.I., LL.D., who had been assistant Commissioner in the Punjab, Judge in the Chief Court 1878-85, and Financial Commissioner 1887-93. He published 'Epitome of Cabul Correspondence' (1864); 'Notes on Peshawa Crime' (1884); 'Lumsden of the Guides' (1899); 'Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart' (1903); and 'Thirty-Five Years in the Punjab' (1908).

IN connexion with the bicentenary of the birth of Dr. Johnson it is proposed to hold an Exhibition of Johnsonian MSS., Books, Portraits, Pictures, Relics, &c., at Lichfield in September next. The Mayor of that city asks for help in these details, and announces that it has been resolved to allow books, papers, and articles to be sent either on loan or sale. All communications should be addressed to the Town Clerk, Guildhall, Lichfield.

MR. MURRAY announces 'Fiona,' a novel by Lady Napier of Magdala. Although its earlier scenes are in Italy, it is a tale of the Highlands of Scotland, and treats of love and social life.

CAPT. SHAW is publishing next week a new book with Messrs. Cassell entitled 'A Daughter of the Storm.' It is a story of the sea, and incidentally shows the risk to our mercantile service of engaging so many alien sailors.

CLARE COLLEGE has, says The Cambridge Review, elected Dr. Rendel Harris and Mr. Owen Seaman to Honorary Fellowships. The first is a man of great learning, while Mr. Seaman has academic distinction to his credit as well as his excellent tributes to the lighter Muse.

IN the same number a controversy is proceeding concerning, inter alia, a statement that the Vice-Chancellor has declined to allow the University arms to be stamped on volumes of Swinburne selected as a prize. The statement at present lacks definite evidence to support it, and, we hope, will be disproved.

THE Modernist and "New Theology" controversies have had an interesting sequel. In consequence of the growing need for discussion of the progressive movement in religion and social ethics, a number of well-known men have constituted themselves an Editorial Board for The Christian Commonwealth, which will in future be of a more comprehensive character.

MR. GOSSE's 'Swinburne: Personal Recollections,' in The Fortnightly, and 'A Tribute to Swinburne,' by Mr. Ernest Rhys, in The Nineteenth Century, are noteworthy appreciations of the poet.

THE fêtes at Arles last Sunday belie the time-honoured legend about a prophet and his country. Mistral has not only been officially recognized as the most distinguished poet of the "Félibrige," but has also enjoyed the unusual honour of attending at the official inauguration of a monument to himself. M. Dujardin-Beaumetz made an eloquent speech on the occasion.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will publish immediately 'The Doctor's Wife.' This is a translation of the well-known book by Colette Yver, which is entitled 'Princesses de Science,' and appeared in 1907. The rendering has been made by the Countess de Bremond.

M. MARCEL PRÉVOST has been elected to the Académie Française in succession to Victorien Sardou. There were four ballots, at each of which M. Prévost secured the largest number of votes.

THE death in his sixty-seventh year is announced of a Professor of History at the University of Königsberg, Dr. Karl Lohmeyer. Though severely handicapped by physical infirmity—he was born without arms—he won for himself a considerable reputation as historian and critic, and was the author of a number of interesting works, among them 'Geschichte von Ost- und West Preussen' and 'Herzog Albrecht von Preussen.'

RECENT Parliamentary Papers of interest to our readers are: National Gallery, Report (3d.); Irish Universities, Statutes for Colleges, &c., Galway (1s.), Cork (1s.), Dublin (1s.), Queen's, Belfast (1s.); National University of Ireland (1s. 6d.); and Annual Report of the Local Government Board, Supplement containing Report of the Medical Officer (3s. 2d.).

SCIENCE

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Sportsman's British Bird Book. By R. Lydekker. (Rowland Ward.)—Most books on birds are written by specialists, but the fact that Mr. Lydekker is a zoologist first and an ornithologist as an afterthought makes for breadth of view and correctness of perspective. Sound, accurate, and up to date, the author at once inspires confidence; and it is certainly convenient to find in a single trustworthy book ample information on questions of classification, geographical distribution, and the like, as well as short cuts to identification under varying conditions. The careful description of the young of most species is more than is generally attempted. In discussing the remarkable variations of plumage that characterize the buzzard, Mr. Lydekker says, "Although paler specimens have been supposed to be immature, there is no decisive evidence that such is the case," and argues that the rarity of the type indicates almost certainly that it is not so. In support of this contention it may be mentioned that in 1908 the present writer had under observation a buzzard's nest where one of the parent birds, presumably the female, boasted plumage in which white largely predominated; her offspring, on the other hand, after leaving the nest was as dark as his other parent.

Apparently as a concession to the sportsman, but actually with sufficient scientific justification, the game birds have been selected as the starting-point, and in the rest of the grouping the perching birds are relegated to the last place. In the matter of nomenclature a wise discretion has been exercised, but the author has his own predilections among vernacular names. We note the omission of the names of all authorities. In a work which is necessarily largely compiled from the observations of others, unsupported statements might lose force, but for the high reputation of the author. When we read, for instance, of the golden-crested wren that "during the journey across the North Sea some at least of these tiny travellers ride on the backs of larger birds, such as owls," we realize that this time-honoured assertion has at last emerged triumphantly from its temporary eclipse. Mr. Lydekker is not prepared to believe that shags sometimes use their wings under water, though Macgillivray, himself at first sceptical on this point, subsequently vouched for the fact from personal observation, and was endorsed by Seeböhm. On the other hand, we find that the oft-repeated statements as to the fabulous number of eggs laid by the wren are accepted without question.

Mr. Lydekker makes little reference to the songs and notes of birds. The willow-wren is described vaguely as being at once distinguishable from the chiff-chaff by its song, "which is more like that of the wood-wren"; but this does not help very much, as the wood-wren in turn is only said to utter a "characteristic song." The singing qualities of the marsh warbler are ignored altogether.

The World's Peoples. By A. H. Keane. (Hutchinson & Co.)—Dr. Keane has written an interesting account of the different peoples of the world. It is a mine of information clearly expressed and beautifully illustrated. Dr. Keane's interests are mainly ethnological, and his extraordinarily wide range of knowledge of different peoples and his skill in giving it expression were never better shown than in this book. It is no doubt desirable to be somewhat dogmatic in a popular work, but in theoretical matters Dr. Keane seems to us to enunciate as definitely determined results, conclusions based on insufficient data.

Suffolk. By W. A. Dutt. Illustrated. (Cambridge, University Press.)—Mr. Dutt's brief treatise is a welcome specimen of a new and admirable series of "Cambridge County Geographies." The scope of the work is purely elementary, and principally confined to facts physical, geological, historical, and administrative; but these are attractively marshalled, and, in conjunction with numerous excellent illustrations, form a volume which should certainly attract youthful students. Particularly good as regards detail are the two pictures showing the flintwork in the porch of Ufford Church; while the view of the recently constructed harbour and quay at Southwold sufficiently indicates that the series is up to date in its information. The antiquities and industries of the county, its harbours, waterways, and lighthouses, the race characteristics of its inhabitants, and its personal and literary associations are adequately dealt with, and a list of the principal towns and villages is included, together with maps, and diagrams illustrative respectively of population, agriculture, and the herring fishery.

To the same series Mr. Dutt also contributes the volume on Norfolk, which is arranged on similar lines. As in the companion work, the excellence of the illustrations is a notable feature, and with their aid this brief survey of the history and present condition of the county can hardly fail to stimulate a desire for more advanced studies of a kindred nature.

Outlines of Electrical Engineering. By Harold H. Simmons. (Cassell & Co.)—Those who are in search of a single volume from which they may obtain a good general idea of electricity and its many applications may well do worse than get Mr. Simmons's book, for, while it does not claim to include every phase and operation of electricity, there are very few which are not described in it. It is not a book for the absolute tyro, for some previous acquaintance with the terminology of the science is necessary, but more advanced students will find it a trustworthy guide. To select one item for special remark—the chapter on accumulators is particularly well done; not only does it describe in lucid terms the making of the several kinds of accumulator plates, but also it gives one a very good idea of what an accumulator or "storage-battery" is, and how it works; while a noteworthy warning is given of the damage done frequently by those who ought to know better, by "spark-ing" or "short-circuiting" an accumulator, in order to ascertain whether it is charged or not. In this chapter, as in other parts of the book, there is a certain amount of repetition which is useful for emphasizing important points; and in dealing with electro-plating Mr. Simmons gives the quantities of the various ingredients in the metric as well as the English equivalents.

There is a short historical account of the lodestone, and it is interesting to trace the connexion between the discovery of "magnets" by the ancient Greeks at Magnesia in Asia Minor, and the "magneto" familiar to those who drive motor-cars to-day. The Greeks do not appear to have known the geographical properties of the magnetic ore, and its name of lodestone is due to the Norwegians, who, so far back as the eleventh century, called it "leading-stone."

Among the most wonderful applications of electricity is the powerful electromagnet used in iron foundries at the end of a crane chain instead of a hook. The magnet is merely placed against the heavy mass of metal to be hoisted, and when the electric current is switched on, the weight can be hoisted and moved about as required, even though it be so hot that it cannot be handled, thus saving the time which would otherwise be lost while the metal was cooling. At the other end of the scale is the little electromagnet used for extracting metallic splinters from workmen's eyes.

Under the heading of 'Electric Traction' we find a description of the G.B. system of surface-contact, which was recently the subject of controversy in the London County Council. Mr. Simmons does not commit himself on the subject, but he appears to approve of this system, which has the undoubted merit of costing little more than half the outlay on the ordinary underground method, and very little more than the overhead system.

It is impossible to recount all the branches of electrical science described in the volume, which is written in a readable and scholarly manner throughout, with not more than the necessary complement of mathematical formulæ. The weakest point of the book is its index, which is inadequate. Many of the topics discussed in the thousand pages of the text do not appear in this section, which fills but six pages. A glossary of the technical terms employed would have made the work available to a larger number of readers.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

DR. MARCELLIN BOULE in L'Anthropologie refers to the petition recently presented to the Prime Minister by Prof. Ridgeway, as President of the Royal Anthropological Institute, for a subsidy to that Institute in its function as the Anthropological bureau of the British Empire. He approves the argument by which the petition was supported, and expresses the hope which we all feel that the Chancellor of the Exchequer may still be able to give effect to it.

The Times records the death, after an illness of a few days, at the age of seventy, of Dr. Johannes Diedrich Eduard Schmeltz, Director of the Leyden Museum of Ethnography. His name is familiar to us as founder and editor of the Internationales Archiv für Ethnographie, which has been referred to many times in these columns, and to which he contributed numerous learned and scholarly papers. He was joint author with Mr. De Clercq of an excellent work on Netherlandish New Guinea, noted in The Athenæum for April 29, 1893. British anthropologists had the opportunity of making his acquaintance when he attended the British Association meeting at Oxford in 1894, and read a paper before Section H on the shells used in the domestic economy of the Indonesians.

Dr. L. Laloy in L'Anthropologie concurs with Herr Otto Schoetensack of Leipsic that the fossil lower jaw of Homo Heidelbergensis is the most ancient relic of humanity yet discovered, being incontestably Pliocene. It is remarkable for its massive appearance, and the complete absence of a chin. He considers that it presents more primitive characters in some respects than those of the anthropoids, and that it is only superior to them in its projection and the form of the dental curve.

M. A. J. Reinach contributes to the same periodical the first portion of a learned dissertation on the arrow in Gaul; its poisons and their antidotes.

The Abbé Breuil and Señor Juan Cabré Aguila contribute a paper on the rock paintings of the lower basin of the Ebro, viz., those of Calapata to Cretas, in Lower Aragon, and the open-air frescoes of Copul, in the province of Lerida, Catalonia. Most of these are animal pictures or hunting scenes, but one is interpreted by the authors as representing a dance of nine half-clothed women around a nude man, suggesting the performance of some rite of initiation.

An exposition of Italian ethnography is being organized in connexion with the proposed festivities to celebrate at Rome in 1911 the fiftieth anniversary of the proclamation of the Kingdom of Italy.

Mr. F. J. Arne, of the Museum of National Antiquities at Stockholm, has discovered worked flints in North Syria, of Chellean type, where no previous discoveries of the kind had been made.

Dr. Joseph Bellucci furnishes L'Anthropologie with some observations on thunderstones and on the superstitions of the Soudanese peoples with regard to the flint implements so designated by them.

Dr. P. Rivet contributes the first part of a mathematical essay on the subject of prognathism, which he has studied from theoretical and critical points of view, and he expounds a new technical system for the measurement of the angles.

Dr. Chervin, a past president of the Society of Anthropology of Paris, and member of the Commission of Travel and Missions and of the Committee of Historical and Scientific Research at the Ministry of Public Instruction in France, has published a report on Bolivian anthropology in three volumes: the first relating to ethnology, demography, and metric photography; the second to anthropometry; and the third to craniology. In each volume the methods used are clearly described and fully illustrated.

THE TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN ON JUNE 16, 364.

30, Albany Road, Stroud Green, N.

THE elements of this particular eclipse are given in the 'Art de vérifier les Dates,' 1818, tome i., at the year-date; and also in the 'Canon der Finsternisse,' 1887, at No. 3738. The latter authority times true conjunction at 12 54 P.M., on the meridian of Greenwich. In the 'Iconographie zum Canon der Sonnenfinsternisse,' S. 151, the track of the lunar shadow is drawn across the map of Scotland in latitude 60°. This eclipse was observed at Alexandria, and commented upon by Theon, the father of Hypatia; and it was seen, and its date and circumstances recorded, at Binchester, in the county of Durham. The dated British record is preserved for us in the 'Grand St. Graal.' This romance was written about the end of the twelfth century by Robert de Borron, who (so we are told) turned it into French out of Latin. The original work is reported to have been compiled in "White" Britain, in about A.D. 750. Borron's French was edited by Eugene Hucher in 'Le Saint Graal, ou le Joseph d'Arimathie, première branche des Romans de la Table Ronde,' 1877, 3 vols., and it is on p. 405, vol. ii., that we find the record referred to. The eclipse was observed in a fortified city in Britain called "Orbérique," at the birth of a Christian prince of high lineage who was baptized "Celidoines." Orbérique, through a hypothetical form Corbérique, represents Corbenic or Corbin, the City of the Graal, which is also called Corbière, and "Monsalvatch," i.e., Mons Sylvaticus. This city I identify with Binchester, the "Uinouia" of the Itineraries, and the "Castellum Guinuion" of the 'Arthuriana' in the 'Historia Brittonum,' near the "Silua Celidonis." "Celidoines" is the Old French representative of the Latin name Chelidonius or Celidonius, the name of a fifth-century Bishop of Vesontio, inter al.; and it is the etymon of the early British name Celidón, the later Celyddon.

The record of the eclipse of 364 appears in the 'Grand St. Graal' as follows, reference being made to Celidoines:—

"...à son naissement avint en la cité d'Orbérique une moult grant merveille qui n'estoit mie acoustumée à véoir. Car il nasqui en un jour d'estet et molt biel, en droit midi, et si fu el secont jour des kalendes en jungnet. Et quant il fu nés, à cele eure comme vous avés oit, si avint cose maintenant que li solaus que en sa grant clartet et en sa grant calour devoit estre à ticle eure, s'aparut tout autressi apiertement com il faisoit au matin quant il liève, et la lune fu autressi clèrement véue comme s'il fust nuis, et les estoiles tout ensement...."

This account is obviously embellished by the statement that the moon was seen during the eclipse. The alleged appearance of the stars, also, may be an addition; but that point will be elucidated by Mr. P. H. Cowell of the Royal Observatory, who, at the request of Mr. Andrew Crommelin, made on my behalf, has very kindly applied his lunar tables to the calculation of the times and phenomena of the eclipse. Mr. Cowell regards it as certain that the eclipse was very large at Binchester, and it is his intention to deal with the record in an astronomical monograph.

The only real difficulty presented by the French report is conveyed by the date "II. Kal. Jungnet." Jungnet and Juignet are Old French forms of Juillet, and "el secont jour des kalendes en jungnet" may equate either June 30, the usual equation, or June 15-16, an abnormal one, the use of which can be paralleled in eighth- and ninth-century Frankish annals and other documents. The method employed consisted in making the calendar month commence on the day following the Ides of the preceding month, and end on its own Ides. In this way the Kalends were made to fall in the middle of the month: compare the phrase mense fere mediante in the report of the eclipse of October 29, 878, in the annals of St. Waast's ('Annales Vedastini,' ed. Pertz, 'M.G.H.,' 'S.S.,' i. 517). The Benedictines (u.s., ii. 21) give an extract from the ninth-century annals of Lauresheim in which August 14 (xix. Kal. Septembr.) is styled "in capite kalendarum Septembrium." The history of this practice is unknown. It may have been introduced among the Germans by the Northumbrian monks who converted them in the seventh and eighth centuries. The second day of the Kalends of July, computed in this way, is June 15, however, whereas June 16, Kal. iii., is required. But we do not know at what hour the British provincial who recorded the eclipse we are concerned with commenced the day. There were several commencements in early mediæval times: e.g., at vespers; at midnight; at dawn; and at half-an-ecclesiastical-hora after midday. The time last mentioned is that referred to as the one "quem diximus horarum terminum" by the fifth-century British monk who forged the Paschal Canon which the schismatic Scotto-British Churches in the sixth and seventh centuries attributed to Anatolius of Laodicea. Consequently the date "el secont jour des kalendes en jungnet" may have been systematic, and therefore correct. In any case the extremely rare occurrence of a solar eclipse at a certain hour, on a certain day, in any country, compels us to identify the eclipse recorded in the 'Grand St. Graal' as that of June 16, 364, at 12 o'clock noon.

I now come to the identification of Celidoines. In the famous Welsh tale of 'Kulhwch and Olwen' the hero introduces himself to King Arthur as "Kulhwch, the son of Kilydd, the son of Kelyddon Gwledig, by Goleuddydd, the daughter of Anllawdd Gwledig." It is this Kelyddon Gwledig, i.e., Celidonius, Dux Britannia, whom I identify with Celidoines, and for the following reasons. In the tale Arthur is made to call Kulhwch his cousin; which is quite correct, inasmuch as Arthur's mother Eigr was also a daughter of Anllawdd Gwledig. St. Iltyd, too, was a cousin of Arthur, being son of another daughter of Anllawdd. Arthur was defeated at "Camlan" in the 93rd year of the era of Stilicho's Consulship, i.e., in A.D. 492; and his victory at "Mons Badonicus" occurred in the 71st year of that era, i.e., in A.D. 470. The latter year saw the birth of St. Gildas, the son of Kaw, who was educated by St. Iltyd. Among Gildas's schoolfellows were St. Paul of Leon, who died in A.D. 573, aged one hundred years, and St. David of Menevia, the son of Sandde, who was born in the thirtieth year after St. Patrick's emigration to Ireland, namely, in A.D. 462. St. David's mother Nonn was daughter of Cynyr of Cair Gawch, or Coccium, a son of Anllawdd Gwledig by Gwen, daughter of Cunidda Gwledig, the "Telionatu Lander" of the Graal legend. Cunidda's son Ceredig Ceredigion was father of Cedig, St. David's paternal grandfather. I am setting down these genealogical data just as they occur in the Welsh pedigrees of the eleventh and twelfth centuries. If the false and late chronological notions which are allowed to distort and nullify the testimony of these historical documents could be set aside for a few moments, it would be perceived that the descents enumerated are in harmony with each other and with the date of the eclipse. The activity of Anllawdd Gwledig must be assigned to the first third of the fifth century. In all probability he was elected to fill the office of Gwledig Prydain, just as his grandson Arthur was. But Anllawdd's father-in-law Cunidda, and his daughter Goleuddydd's father-in-law Celyddon, were probably appointed to their office by imperial authority, and in the order in which I have named them. Ceredig Ceredigion was the fifth son of Cunidda; consequently, as Cunidda's great-grandson St. David was born in 462, Cunidda himself may have been rather older than Celyddon, who was born, as I have demonstrated, at midday, during the solar eclipse of June 16, 364, "el secont jour des kalendes en jungnet," "en droit midi."

ALFRED ANSCOMBE.

SOCIETIES.

BRITISH ACADEMY.—May 26.—Lord Reay in the chair.—Prof. W. Ridgeway, Fellow of the Academy, read a paper entitled 'Minos the Destroyer rather than the Creator of the so-called "Minoan" Culture of Cnossus.'

He said that when in 1896 he ventured to suggest that Cnossus would prove to be a great seat of the Aegean culture because of the legendary prominence of Minos, and from the ruins already known there, he was ridiculed for credulity by some leading archaeologists. In 1901 (in his 'Early Age of Greece') he repeated the belief that Cnossus would prove one of the chief foci of the Aegean culture, and before his book was printed off Mr. Evans had begun his splendid discoveries. Since then Minos has rapidly grown in popularity. Mr. Evans unfortunately did not follow the nomenclature adopted by the excavators of Troy and Phylakpi, &c., but had given the term "Minoan" to all strata later than the Neolithic period, dividing them into Early Minoan I., II., III.; Middle Minoan I., II., III.; and Late Minoan I., II., III., in fanciful allusion to the nine years of Minos when he became king. Mr. Evans applied the term Minoan to the whole Aegean Bronze Age culture, but others (e.g., Prof. Burrows) have gone much further, and speak of the Minoan language, and finally have made it ethnic, and call all the people of Crete and the Aegean Isles Minoans, wishing to substitute this term for historical names, such as Achæans and Carians.

Through the so-called Early Minoan I., II., III., Middle Minoan I., II., III., and Late Minoan I., II., there is a continual development of art, though there are marks of catastrophes at the end of the various periods. But with the destruction of the great palace at the end of Late Minoan II. there is an essential change. With Late Minoan III. comes a new era heralding the transition to the Early Iron Age. To this period belongs the hall with the throne, which Mr. Evans regards as that of Minos. But as Minos comes in the last of the nine periods called after him, it is as unscientific to use the term Minoan of the earlier period, as it would be to speak of the period from Elizabeth down to the present as Late Victorian, that from Elizabeth to the Norman Conquest as Middle Victorian, and that from the Conquest to the Stone Age as Early Victorian.

The destruction of Knossos at the end of Late Minoan II., was not from some petty revolt, but rather from some great potentate who brought in a different culture. The chronology of the Late Minoan period is fairly well fixed by a comparison with Egyptian frescoes (Rehmarra and Sen-Mut) which fall about B.C. 1450, but it is not likely that the destruction would follow immediately on the latest points of comparison with Egypt. Accordingly Prof. Burrows (a chief supporter of the current theory) would place with probability the date of the destruction shortly before B.C. 1400. Was there any great ethnic movement at that time, and was there any great name associated with such a movement, which might have caused the downfall of Knossos? Minos at once suggests himself. According to the Parian Chronicle, there were two kings of that name. Minos I., son of Zeus and Europa, and brother of "fair-haired" Rhadamanthus, is placed in B.C. 1406, which synchronizes curiously with the date of the destruction of Knossos arrived at by the archaeologists. This Minos was distinct from Minos II., who was his descendant, and flourished (Parian Chron.) about B.C. 1220. Diodorus and Plutarch substantiate the Parian marble, while the Homeric evidence points distinctly in the same direction. There is Minos son of Zeus and Europa, brother of Rhadamanthus ('Iliad'), who seems to be the judge of the dead ('Odyssey'); and there is the other Minos called "baleful-heart," father of Ariadne, &c. ('Od.' xi.). It is not likely that he of the "baleful heart" would be regarded as so just as to be made judge of the dead.

In 'Od.' xix., 168 sqq. the ethnology of Crete is given: there are Eteocretes, Cydones, Pelasgians, Dorians, and Achæans. That these Achæans were then lords of Knossos is proved by Idomeneus, one of the great Achæan chiefs, reigning there. His pedigree is also given. He was son of Deucalion, son of Minos. This Minos was Minos II. The Achæans had begun to make their way into the Eastern Mediterranean in the end of the fifteenth century B.C. At that time Architeles and Archandrus had made their way into Argolis, and Minos I., whose brother Rhadamanthus was xanthos, was probably one of the advanced guard of the new-comers. Not only does the physical type indicate that they are Achæans from Upper Europe, but also the divine pedigree. The Achæan chiefs in Homer are all Zeus-sprung, whereas the pre-Achæan families, as in Argolis, Arcadia, and Attica, all trace their descent from Poseidon. Not only were Minos I. and II. descended from Zeus, but it was the taking away of the bull formerly sacrificed to Poseidon, and giving it to Zeus, that led to the tragic history of Minos II. Poseidon instilled a passion for a bull into Pasiphaë, which resulted in the Minotaur. It was Minos II., mentioned by Herodotus, who established the great Thalassocracy, and who left his name in many towns round the Aegean named Minoa. It may well have been under him that the Achæans, if they are the Aquaiusha of an inscription of Rameses III., invaded Egypt.

The tombs of East Crete show an overlap between bronze and iron weapons similar to that which Prof. Ridgeway had pointed out in Homer, and the tombs with geometric pottery, fibulae, iron weapons, and cremation found in 1907 show a culture like that of the Achæan of Homer. Thus the material remains confirm the literary traditions.

Neither Minos I. nor Minos II. can be held to have done anything for the evolution of the Bronze Age culture of Knossos, Crete, or the Aegean, whilst all the evidence rather points to Minos I. as having dealt a blow to that old culture from which it never recovered.

ZOOLOGICAL.—May 25.—Dr. S. F. Harmer, V.P., in the chair.—The Secretary read a report on the additions to the menagerie during April.—Mr. J. L. Bonhote exhibited the skins of an example of a tetragen hybrid duck of the F₂ generation, which he had bred in his aviaries, and pointed out that the characters of this bird were a striking confirmation of the truth of Mendel's law. Mr. Bonhote also exhibited a pair of pentagen hybrids of the F₂ generation, which were interesting as showing to what extent cross-breeding could be carried among certain species, the hybrids proving fertile to at least the fourth generation since the last cross with a pure species.—Mr. L. Harding Cox exhibited a living specimen of the amblystone or transformed axolotl, and drew attention to the following distinguishing points of the terrestrial batrachian, viz. alteration in dentition, possession of lungs and eyelids, absence of gills and crest, and variation in colour. Mr. R. Lydekker exhibited the photograph of a young stag from Sikhim, now living in Nepal, which he believed to represent the shou (Cervus affinis), and, if so, to be the first picture of that deer which had been submitted to the Society since Brian Hodgson's time. Mr. R. Lydekker described the skull-characters of three local forms of the Southern sea-elephant (Macrorhinus leoninus), viz., the Falkland race, which had been named M. l. falcandicus; the Crozet race, for which the name M. l. crozetensis was suggested; and the Macquarie race, proposed to be called M. l. macquariensis. Mr. Lydekker also directed attention to the skin and skull of a black bear obtained by Capt. Malcolm McNeil in Eastern Tibet. For this the name Ursus torquatus macneili was proposed.—Mr. R. H. Burne read a paper on 'The Anatomy of the Olfactory Organ of Teleostean Fishes,' in which the chief structural variations were described in some fifty genera, mostly of common British species.—Dr. J. G. de Man presented a paper, communicated by Mr. R. I. Pocock, entitled 'Description of a New Species of the Decapod Crustacean Genus Alpheus, Fabr., from the Bay of Batavia.'

MICROSCOPICAL.—May 19.—Mr. J. F. Cheshire, V.P., in the chair.—A paper by Mr. Edward Heron-Allen and Mr. Arthur Earland 'On the Foraminifera of the Shore-sands of Selsey Bill, Sussex,' Part II., was taken as read.—Mr. J. W. Gordon's paper 'On a New Illuminator for the Microscope' was not read in extenso, but the construction and use of the apparatus were explained by reference to a diagram and by the exhibition of the instrument itself.—The following were elected Ordinary Fellows: Messrs. A. C. Butterworth, A. D. Ferguson, T. S. Stewart, and F. Langridge Winton.

PHYSICAL.—May 14.—Dr. C. Chree, President, in the chair.—A paper on 'A Bifilar Vibration Galvanometer' was read by Mr. W. Duddell.—A paper by Messrs. W. P. Fuller and H. Grace on 'The Effect of Temperature on the Hysteresis Loss in Iron in a Rotating Field' was read by Prof. Marchant.—A paper 'On a Method of testing Photographic Shutters,' by Messrs. A. Campbell and T. Smith, was read by Mr. Smith.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- Mon. Royal Institution, 5.—General Monthly Meeting.
- Society of Engineers, 7.30.
- Aristotelian, 8.—'Natural Realisms and Present Tendencies in Philosophy,' Dr. A. Wolf.
- Tues. Royal Institution, 3.—'Biological Chemistry,' Lecture II., Dr. F. Gowland Hopkins.
- Colonial Institute, 8.—'Indian Aspirations,' Sir Bampfylde Fuller.
- Anthropological Institute, 8.15.—'Prehistoric Human remains from Various Parts of England,' Dr. A. Keith.
- Thurs. Royal Institution, 3.—'A Modern Railway Problem: Steam v. Electricity,' Lecture II., Prof. W. E. Dalby.
- Royal, 4.30.
- Fri. Astronomical, 5.
- Physical, 8.—'The Arthur Wright Electrical Device for evaluating Formule and solving Equations,' Dr. A. Russell and Mr. A. Wright; 'The Echelon Spectroscope: its Secondary Action and the Structure of the Green Hg Line,' Mr. H. Stansfield; 'The Proposed International Unit of Candle Power,' Mr. C. C. Paterson; and other papers.
- Royal Institution 9.—'Problems of Helium and Radium,' Prof. Sir J. Dewar.
- Sat. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Vitality of Seeds and Plants: (2) The Life and Death of Seeds,' Dr. F. F. Blackman.

Science Gossip.

MR. MURRAY is publishing this month a new and revised edition of Mr. R. H. Lock's 'Recent Advances in the Study of Variation, Heredity, and Evolution,' in which the author replies to various criticisms of the first edition.

MESSRS. CASSELL are issuing next week a further volume—'Live Stock: Breeds and Management'—in their series of agricultural handbooks by Primrose McConnell, now being published under the title of "The Complete Farmer."

FROM the Honorary Secretaries of the Medical Library Association, the University, Manchester, we receive a request for the loan of the following articles, in connexion with the first meeting of the Medical Library Association, to be held in Queen's College, Belfast, during the last week in July: MSS. and early printed books, especially Irish; first editions of noteworthy volumes; books on tuberculosis and Celtic medicine; and photographs of libraries, rules, and statistical matter regarding the same, &c.

THE death in his sixty-seventh year is announced from Berlin of the distinguished chemist Dr. Adolf Pinner. He was for thirty-eight years Professor at the University of that town and lecturer to the Veterinary Academy. Among his works are 'Lehrbuch der organischen Chemie,' 'Lehrbuch der anorganischen Chemie,' and 'Gesetze der Naturscheinungen.'

SOME interesting particulars have come to hand about the expedition now being led by the Duke of the Abruzzi with the object of beating the record in Himalayan ascents. The Duke's immediate goal is the loftiest peak of the Karakoram or Mustagh range, known up to the present as K. 2, and of an estimated altitude of 28,250 ft. After leaving Skardu the party will proceed to the Bultaro glacier, which is one of a little knot of glaciers lying below K. 2. One of these, the Hispar, 25,000 ft., was ascended by Mrs. Bullock Workman last year. The Duke's party consists of his flag-lieutenant the Marchese Negrotto; Dr. Filippi, who is to be the chronicler of the expedition; Cavaliere Sella, an expert photographer; Signor Botta, and twelve Swiss guides. Whatever the result of the attempt on K. 2 the Duke will visit Nepal later with the intention of making an attempt on Mount Everest.

WE note with regret the death of Mr. T. Mellard Reade, of Blundellsands, near Liverpool, which occurred on May 26th, at the age of seventy-seven. Professionally an architect and surveyor, Mr. Reade took great interest in physical geology, and became an acknowledged authority on subjects in which dynamical questions were involved. His copious contributions to scientific journals in this country and America were not infrequently marked by evidence of original observation and profound thought. Mr. Reade published as independent works 'The Origin of Mountain Ranges,' 'The Evolution of Earth-Structure,' and 'Chemical Denudation in relation to Geological Time.' In recognition of the value of his researches, the Geological Society awarded to him in 1896 the Murchison Medal.

ANOTHER small planet was photographically discovered by Herr Kopff at the Astrophysical Institute, Königstuhl, Heidelberg, on the 13th ult.

MADAME CERASKI, in the course of her examination of photographic plates taken by M. Blazko at the Moscow Observatory, has detected variability in a star in the constellation Auriga. A comparison of a number of plates obtained during the last two or three years shows that the change is probably restricted between the tenth and eleventh magnitudes. M. Blazko considers that the period is either irregular or very short. The star will be reckoned in a general list as var. 18, 1909, Aurigæ.

A FAINT comet (α , 1909) was discovered by Prof. Brooks at the Smith Observatory, Geneva, N.Y., on the 28th ult.

FINE ARTS

JAPANESE PRINTS AT THE FINE-ART SOCIETY'S GALLERIES.

If the importance of an exhibition is to be measured by the number of fine things it contains, this is probably the principal show open in London for the time being. If, on the other hand, it is equally important that those fine things should be within the comprehension of the public, then such an exhibition of Japanese prints enjoys a more doubtful pre-eminence, for Oriental art has as yet received among us but little of that thorough comprehension which implies the power of reproducing the thing admired. A few artists have learnt from it, but there can be little doubt that it holds in reserve a more general influence—an influence which the younger generation of artists both here and abroad seem to be on the point of utilizing. It is somewhat of a disaster, therefore, that the colour-prints of Japan, which by their comparative plenty and initial cheapness were the natural missionaries of the new gospel, should have already received the barren admiration of the mere collector, so that their prices now place them beyond the reach of the more impressionable race of art-students.

To the latter such an exhibition as this is most instructive and encouraging—encouraging in that it offers for our study a record of the development of an art that has waxed and waned on lines very different from the great Italian School, which, from the unique completeness with which it has been presented to our view, we have come to regard as typical. Accepting this view, we have been inclined to suppose that every art must submit to the same general course of development, in which, from beginnings of archaic severity, naturalism shall be the liberating factor, urging the painter to a technique of greater and greater freedom and complexity, culminating in a burst of triumphant liberty, followed promptly by flaccid decline. How often have we seen painters (conscientiously convinced that they had no right to be able to enjoy the heritage of a school which had obviously passed its apogee) doggedly, and artificially, set themselves to put that heritage out of their minds and become again primitives. Are we not, indeed, urged to such a course by not a few of the most intelligent of critics? Yet the study of the minor art which is here more or less historically set forth suggests that this is by no means the only alternative.

The earliest work shown in the present collection is not at all severe, but of a barbaric exuberance; see Nos 1 and 4, or No. 7 with its riot of fluent, but not at bottom very highly related forms. They were doubtless originally natural forms, but natural forms modified by habitual intensification into a sort of decadent calligraphic flourish akin to the stylistic drawing of Rubens. The fine print by Kiyomitsu (41), which we take to be rather later in date, has the same tremendous vitality, but is more elegantly conventional; and when in Harunobu and his followers naturalism enters on the scene, it is felt as a restraining rather than a liberating influence. Line takes on primness (56), and colour, if more complex, is for that reason quieter and less assertive, being employed rather to split intervals than to push extremes. Used in this fashion by Harunobu in Nos. 47, 59, 61, or by his follower Harushige in No. 67, it produces prints which come as near to European art as does the work of any of the best Japanese print designers; but the tendency to subtle divisions of tones is always restrained by the fine technical sense which saves Oriental artists from our own frequent excess of naturalistic complexity. The complexity to which they were given was rather in the overlay of conventional pattern of a sort suggested by the technique—not always of the particular art they were practising. Embroidery, cloisonné, lacquering—all the arts were inclined to lend motives to one another; and doubtless to a race of craftsmen the enrichment was less confusing than to us, the familiar diaper being to their eye like a transparent colour to ours, through which the main design was clearly visible.

Harunobu seems to have used such devices less than most, his art being largely one of tranquil spaces, the trenchant divisions of which are broken by elegantly designed sallies carrying minor passages of one colour into the main body of another. Doubtless his fine taste suggested to him that his comparatively complex use of colour should be accompanied by a more sparing use of pattern, but even so the next general movement was for a greater simplicity of colour, the instinct in the East having been as strongly in favour of limiting and refining an art as it was towards extending its boundaries. The delicate purity of Kiyonaga's group in the snow (104), or the clear open space of his Ferry Boat (105), with the lines of wavelets rippling in delicious continuity right across the three prints, offers a purged and clarified version of Harunobu's fuller naturalism. Yeishi, with as limited a range of colour, has already turned his back on nature, and is inventing fantastic combinations—experiments in abstract colour of which Nos. 118 and 119 are brilliant examples, and among the most striking revelations the exhibition affords. On the other hand, we cannot quite see in Shunman's Night Scene (108) the high qualities attributed to it by Mr. Arthur Morrison in his notes to the catalogue, nor regard the use of semi-realistic lighting as other than an unfortunate aberration.

To find a follower worthy of Yeishi and Kiyonaga we must rather turn to Utamaro, in whom are united their tradition and that of the theatrical school of Shunsho, of Ippit-susai Buncho, and of Sharaku. If Sharaku resembles Lautrec, Utamaro may approximately be likened to Degas—a Degas with an added debt to his master Ingres, an artist combining in a high degree naturalistic vitality and classic style. The Rainstorm (194) is an example of the former, and in No. 196, a large five-sheet print of a festival subject, we see it combined with fantastic invention showing itself in a weird use of blacks akin to the art of Buncho. The early work of Toyokuni (199) is no less beautiful, having affinities with that of Botticelli. If, as Mr. Morrison opines, it be indeed the work of a youth in his teens, it is an amazing performance.

Hokusai is too various an artist to be bound lightly by generalizations, but it cannot be denied that, compared with the best work of the men we have just been discussing, many of his examples here seem defiantly, almost vulgarly bent on pushing the colour-print to its utmost pitch of actual brilliance. He stands for variety and vitality rather than repose and perfection, and never had poster-designer in Europe the tenth part of his superb audacity; see, for example, Nos. 224, 225, 244, 245, and 257.

With him and Hiroshige I., who is represented by three or four prints only, closes an exhibition of the utmost interest. We have endeavoured to treat it, however tentatively, from the point of view of the intrinsic qualities revealed as alternately in the ascendant. Japanese art has hitherto had too little of such study, and perhaps almost too much historical research. There will always be a slight temptation to critics trained in European art to find apparent parallels based more on history than intrinsic resemblance. It is perhaps more important to establish affinities, and to use the masterpieces of the school as a touchstone by which to revise our canons of art, with the assurance that those canons must be imperfect if they exclude so noble an art as this. It may be, moreover, that modern conditions, which keep before our eyes so considerable a record of the achievements of all ages, may have upon us an effect analogous to the natural conservatism of Orientals. Their reactions are so moderate, and their innovations so cautious, that it is only after a little examination that we perceive the ebb and flow, the zigzag course of progress. If European artists are ever thus to cease their periodic "clean sweep" of previous traditions, they may find here some encouragement by learning that many artistic differences are controlled by temperament, though archaeologists tell us they are matters of chronology.

A LOST MINIATURE.

Burgh House, Well Walk, Hampstead, N.W.,
May 21, 1909.

MAY I crave the hospitality of your columns to inquire concerning a miniature which has been missing for some years? In June, 1865, a portrait of Charles I. by Matthew Snelling, drawn in fine lines on paper prepared with a thin coating of plaster, was exhibited at South Kensington Museum by the Rev. James Beek. It was signed and dated M. S. fc. 1647, and was in the original tortoiseshell frame, covered with a thin piece of talc instead of glass. It was item 1450 in the catalogue. On June 9th, 1897, after Mr. Beck's death, the portrait was sold at Sotheby's, lot 657, for ten guineas, and bought by Mr. F. Gall of Vigo Street. This gentleman cannot remember for whom he purchased it, and he has unfortunately destroyed the marked catalogue with the name of his customer upon it. I have been striving for many years to find out who owns this miniature, inasmuch as it occupies an important position in the history of a special branch of portraiture, respecting which I am writing a book. If, therefore, any of your readers can assist me in tracing it, I shall be very grateful to them.

GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON.

RECENT DISCOVERIES AT COLOGNE.

I.

NEW LIGHT UPON THE CLARENALTAR IN THE CATHEDRAL.

THE discoveries relating to the restoration of works of art at Cologne, to which a brief allusion was made in The Athenæum of February 6th, are among the most sensational ever recorded in the history of art-criticism and have aroused the keenest interest and not a little dismay. The whole fabric built up by generations of art-critics has suddenly collapsed and for the moment it seems as though the very existence of the early School of Cologne, as we have thus far understood it, was threatened; for if the Clarenaltar, as is now certain, is not what it seemed, if the Madonna "mit der Wickenblüte" is a modern forgery, what next? we may well ask. Can we believe in the authenticity of many other vaunted masterpieces until they, too, have been subjected to the test of a severe examination, and under the relentless searchlight of the restorer's workshop have been forced to give up their secrets?

After the lessons taught by Herr Heinrich Fridt at Cologne it is impossible not to feel sceptical, and in consequence of his discoveries the history of the early School of the Lower Rhine will have to be thoroughly revised and in part re-written. His operations upon the Clarenaltar—consisting in the skilful removal of modern surface paintings which had completely concealed the original work, and the disclosure of the fourteenth-century compositions in an uninjured state—are still in progress, but the results thus far obtained have been made public, and some of the most competent authorities have now stated their views. The literature dealing with the subject—critical, technical, and polemical—will doubtless increase rapidly, but before we are overwhelmed by the flood it may be well to give a brief summary of the facts of the case.

In some admirable articles dealing with the general history of the pictures existing at Cologne in the nineteenth century,* Prof. Hansen, Director of the Archives, states that it was only after the suppression of the religious orders in 1803, when many pictures came into the market, that Canon Wallraf, the brothers Boisserée, and others began to collect what they termed "old German pictures," i.e., what would now be designated works of the School of Cologne, though at that date the idea that any of these pictures were by local artists had not even been mooted, and the first to give importance to the school, as such, seems to have been Friedrich Schlegel between 1805 and 1808, though without proposing the name of any definite artist in relation to the paintings which he extolled. In 1810 attention was drawn to a now famous passage in the Limburg chronicle relating to a painter at Cologne (c. 1380) called "Wilhelm"; and in 1815 Fiorillo, in his 'Geschichte der Zeichnenden Künste in Deutschland,' first published the name of "Meister Wilhelm," in connexion with a group of pictures assigned to the School of Cologne.

In 1824 Canon Wallraf the collector died, and bequeathed his pictures to the city of Cologne. According to Prof. Hansen, they were for the most part unrestored (a fact, however, disputed by other writers), and nameless. The last statement is an important point not to be lost sight of, for among the 309 paintings forming the "old German" section of Wallraf's treasures—the nucleus of the celebrated collection in the present Wallraf-Richartz Museum at Cologne—not one bore the name of Meister Wilhelm. The first Keeper of the collection, De Noël, devoted his attention more especially to this section, and attempted (what had not been done before) a systematic grouping of the pictures of the School of Cologne; at the same time he endeavoured by documentary research to recover the names of some of the forgotten painters of the school. It was De Noël who first proved that a painter Wilhelm von Herle was living at Cologne between 1358 and 1378, and who suggested the possible identity of this artist with the Meister Wilhelm of the Limburg chronicle. He then went a step further, and ascribed to Meister Wilhelm and his school a large group of pictures covering the period between 1350 and 1400.

From Prof. Hansen's very able and practical statement of the case we might infer that up to about 1826 the pictures were in a more or less damaged condition, and that the works seen and described by writers at that date were examples of the School of Cologne which had not been tampered with, and might therefore be regarded as, on the whole, in their original state. But it is only fair to mention that other critics take a different view, and believe that the repainting of many of the pictures was already in progress in the first decades of the nineteenth century. In any case restoration was in the air; between 1827 and 1829 De Noël had about fifty of the "early German" pictures restored, and numerous payments are recorded in these years to Antoine Lorent of Ghent, a very capable "peintre-restaurateur," whose father, Jean Lorent of Brussels, is celebrated in the annals of the restorer's art for his work upon the Van Eycks' altarpiece at Ghent. Antoine Lorent made several journeys to Cologne, and gave so much satisfaction to his employers that he appears in 1828 to have settled there, and to have continued operations upon the pictures at intervals until his death in 1861.

But besides Lorent we have to take into consideration numerous other restorers who were active at Cologne in the first half of the nineteenth century. Ramboux, a painter of considerable endowments and a remarkably clever copyist, returned to Cologne in 1812, after his training in Paris under David, and worked there for some years prior to his departure for Italy; in 1843 he succeeded De Noël as Director of the Gallery, and was very zealous in carrying on the work of picture-restoring. Beckenamp, Zimmermann, Max Heinrich Fuchs, and a host of other more or less capable painter-restorers are also known to have been employed at Cologne. It is a significant fact that the whole cult of the School of Cologne dates from this era of restoration—that the exaggerated enthusiasm of writers like Kugler, Schnaase, Förster, and many more (who alleged that paintings of the Meister Wilhelm style were the outcome of a certain phase of religious excitement, and the direct result of the teaching of fourteenth-century mystics) was evoked by the contemplation, not of original work, but of what can only be termed modern parodies. The principal point of departure for all these writers was primarily the Clarenaltar, and then the scarcely less celebrated Madonna "mit der Wickenblüte"; yet what they looked upon was not authentic, but was due altogether to nineteenth-century restorers, who in the case of the Clarenaltar covered the surface with their own work, and blotted out all trace of the original. Up to the present time this false conception of the School of Cologne has been the one universally accepted, and writers on the subject have one and all been misled and deceived.

We turn now to the Clarenaltar itself, and to the direct and far-reaching results of Herr Fridt's investigations. The sections composing the work formed the inner and outer shutters or doors of the altarpiece of the convent church of St. Clara "am Berlich" at Cologne, the centre having been designed originally to contain the tabernacle for the Host and compartments for numerous relics. The shutters were decorated with paintings, the compositions of the outer shutters being on canvas, those of the inner on panel. After the destruction of the church of St. Clara in 1804, the altarpiece was removed to the Cathedral, where it remained until 1908, being difficult of access and very imperfectly seen. The project of cleaning and restoring the paintings had long been under consideration, and last July the work was begun; the outer shutters were removed to the workshop of Herr Fridt, and in October the inner shutters were also consigned to his care.*

The result of his investigations and careful operations upon different parts of the outer shutters left no doubt in his mind as to the late character of the surface painting. Outlines of a totally different style soon became visible through the disfiguring layers of modern paint; the original heads, severe and impressive in type, with brownish-red flesh tones and white lights, distinctive drawing of the eyes and position of the pupil, and characteristic treatment of the hair, began to reappear; the late rococo patterns bordering some of the draperies vanished, and instead the original Gothic designs came to light once more; while the colouring of these early works—transparent and enamel-like in quality—differed widely from the tone of colouring usually regarded as distinctive of the Meister Wilhelm style.

Herr Fridt's views were unanimously confirmed by the best authorities at Cologne, among them such eminent experts as Prof. Paul Clemen, Dr. Firmenich-Richartz, and Dr. Alexander Schnütgen, one of the Cathedral dignitaries and the well-known editor of the Zeitschrift für christliche Kunst. Who the restorer was who has thus deceived many generations of art-critics is already a hotly disputed point; but whether it was Lorent of Ghent at some period between 1835 and 1861, or Ramboux in the first decades of the nineteenth century—whether it was one or other of the nameless painters who in 1816 and later were employed in making the Wallraf pictures "geniessbar," or some one of the many restorers known to us by name who worked in this field not necessarily with intent to deceive—is not a question of vital importance. The main point is that all critics are agreed in assigning the date of the surface painting to some period in the nineteenth century, and Dr. Firmenich-Richartz in his exhaustive article on the subject† gives an enlightening account of the condition of the various compositions, so far as they have been at present unmasked. Students of the School of Cologne will be well acquainted with this writer's earlier articles, in which he claimed for Hermann Wynrich von Wesel the principal parts of the Clarenaltar. Much of what he wrote in 1895 is now overthrown by recent discoveries, but the dignified manner in which he acknowledges that, in common with many fellow-critics, he has been misled by the amazing cleverness of the nineteenth-century restorer will certainly command respect, and the cogent arguments which he brings to bear on the case in proof of the modern nature of the repainting and of certain additions are of great value. For instance, in the lower row of the inner shutters—a series always regarded as the most important and characteristic portions of the entire altarpiece (works of Hermann Wynrich, according to Dr. Firmenich-Richartz in 1895)—we have groups of flying angels in the upper part of each panel, and above, half-lengths of the Evangelists, a Madonna and Child on the crescent moon, and a 'Coronation of the Virgin' in the Italian manner. With the exception of the angel in 'The Annunciation to the Shepherds,' which belonged to the original design, these compositions are all additions of very recent date, coarsely painted upon the tooled gold background. In the case of the angels, the reason is obvious; the background having been damaged in parts, the restorer, instead of attempting to renew the exquisite fourteenth-century work, resorted to the device of covering up deficiencies with compositions of his own; and in the case of 'The Flight into Egypt' this is so clumsily managed that the angel in the air is painted in part upon the original surface, and in part upon a modern gold background.* In the 'Christ upon the Cross with the Madonna and St. John' the various restorations are particularly striking, each renovator having in turn copied the work of his predecessor. Thus the cleaning has revealed no fewer than three versions of the composition, the original, which has now been reached, showing the severe and solemn mode of representation almost invariably followed in the fourteenth century, and familiar to all students of the miniature art of that epoch; while the date of the latest restoration is fixed by the discovery of a newspaper of 1861, which had been made use of in the preparation of the ground for the modern gold surface.

* 'Meister Wilhelm und die Kölner Malerschule,' Kölnische Zeitung, Nos. 31, 36, 41, January, 1909.

* Zeitschrift für christliche Kunst, Heft 11, Jahrg. XXI. ('Der Clarenaltar im Kölner Dom').
† Zur Wiederherstellung des Clarenaltars, Zeitschrift für christl. Kunst, Heft 11, 323-46

The portions which up to now have been recovered in their original condition are the following: the outer shutters containing externally the Crucifixion just alluded to, with figures of saints at the sides in an architectural setting, and internally the following compositions in two tiers: the Annunciation, Visitation, and Journey to Bethlehem; the Agony in the Garden, the Betrayal, and Christ before Pilate; the Massacre of the Innocents, the Return of the Holy Family from Egypt, and Christ among the Doctors; the Descent into Hades, the Noli me tangere, and the Ascension. Of these Dr. Firmenich-Richartz reproduces the Annunciation, Visitation, Descent into Hades, and Noli me tangere, and two of the single figures of saints, the SS. Catherine and John the Baptist. A comparison between the photographs of the Clarenaltar as it was, and these recovered examples of the original work, is little short of a revelation; the slim forms, the severe outlines, the simplicity and individual character of these distinctively fourteenth-century paintings, as seen more especially in the Annunciation and Visitation and in the extremely fine and statuesque figures of the saints on the exterior of the outer shutters, afford a striking contrast to the figures hitherto regarded as representative examples of the Meister Wilhelm style, with their feeble drawing, uncertain outline, and empty and vapid expression.

The saints of the outer shutters bear a remarkable resemblance to some fragments of fresco in the Cologne Museum, the last remains of the decoration of the Hansa-saal of the Rathaus, which were paid for on November 27th, 1370, the painter receiving a very considerable sum for his work. The name of the master is not known, but, for reasons not altogether conclusive, it has been assumed that he may be identical with Wilhelm von Herle. But whatever the name of the painter,† there is little doubt, after a comparative study of all these works, that the author of the Rathaus frescoes was identical with the Master of the Clarenaltar.

We have still to learn what is concealed beneath the repaint on the inner shutters of the altarpiece, which contain the series dealing with the early history of our Lord; and it seems, indeed, as though some courage were required on the part of the authorities to sanction the restoration of these panels, so long regarded as the most important sections of the altarpiece. It is certain, however, from what is now known about the matter, that there will be no cause to regret the disappearance of these reputed works by Meister Wilhelm or Hermann Wynrich, for the gain to the history of art will far outweigh their loss. What has already been achieved by Herr Fridt proves conclusively that in the Clarenaltar we have a work executed not by different painters at various periods, as formerly supposed (some critics had recognized in it as many as five different hands), but by one master of paramount importance, and produced at a date not later than 1370. Under its new aspect the altarpiece becomes a document of the utmost historical value, for it establishes as an indisputable fact the pre-eminence of the School of Cologne among all the schools of painting in Germany at that epoch.* In point of size, quality, and grandeur of conception and design, it was certainly one of the most notable achievements of its day, following closely, as regards development, upon the wall paintings above the choir stalls in the Cathedral at Cologne—a series of great importance in the history of German art, and among the most brilliant extant works of the mid-fourteenth century.

The final results of Herr Fridt's work upon the inner shutters, and the complete restoration of the entire altarpiece to its original condition, will be awaited with great interest by all students of the art of the Lower Rhine.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on May 25th the following etchings and engravings: D. Y. Cameron, The Doge's Palace, 35/-; Harfleur, 30/-; Sir F. S. Haden, Shere Mill Pond, 54/-; The Fortune-Teller, after Reynolds, by J. Jones, 31/-; Lady Hamilton as a Bacchante, after Reynolds, by J. R. Smith, 69/-; as a Bacchante, after Romney, by C. Knight, 63/-; Lady Elizabeth Compton, after Reynolds, whole-length, by V. Green, 388/-; Le Baiser Envoyé, after Greuze, by C. Turner, 120/-; Lady Elizabeth Compton, after Pieters, by J. R. Smith, 136/-; Lady Dover and Child, after Lawrence, by S. Cousins, 58/-; The Cries of London, after Wheatley, the complete set of thirteen, printed in colours, 787/-; Fresh Gathered Peas, by Vendramini, 29/-; Scarlet Strawberries, by the same, 28/-; Black Monday, after Bigg, by J. Jones, 25/-; Lavinia, and Hobbinol and Ganderetta, after Gainsborough, by Bartolozzi and Tomkins (a pair), 78/-; Children Fishing, and Children Gathering Blackberries, after Morland, by P. Dawe (a pair), 75/-; The Wood Girl, after Hoppner, by J. Gisborne, 42/-; Morning, or, The Fisherman's Departure, and Evening, or, The Fisherman's Return, after R. Corbould, by W. Ward, 52/-.

The same firm sold on the 27th ult. the following pictures: Cuyp, Distant View of a Town, with herdsmen and animals in the foreground, 178/-; Beechey, Lydia, Daughter of Sir Charles William Blunt, in white dress, red sash, and mauve scarf, seated, 215/-.

Fine-Art Gossip.

As we go to press, it is reported that the Holbein belonging to the Duke of Norfolk, which a firm of art-dealers has in hand for sale, has been secured for the nation; but official confirmation of this is as yet wanting.

FRA ANGELICO's late picture of 'The Death of St. Francis' has been recently sold out of this country to the Kaiser Friedrich Museum, Berlin. It was some years ago offered to the National Gallery and declined. The picture was exhibited by Mr. W. Fuller Maitland at the Old Masters Exhibition in 1873 (No. 190) under the title of 'The Brethren of his Order examining the Wounds of St. Francis of Assisi.'

THROUGH the kindness of Dr. Bakker, Mr. John's 'Woman Smiling,' included in the Fair Women Exhibition this spring, has been lent to the Dublin Modern Art Gallery.

OUR REVIEWER writes:—

"J. F. W.'s correction of last week is in the nature of a superfluity. My copy of W. F. Tiffin's 'Gossip about Portraits' is dated 1866, and bears the imprint of Henry G. Bohn."

THE sudden death of M. Guillaume Dubufe, the well-known artist, whilst on a visit to South America to organize an exhibition of works by French artists at Buenos Ayres, is announced. M. Dubufe was born in 1853, the grandson and son of artists. Two of his earlier works were vast canvases with the titles 'La Musique profane' and 'La Musique sacrée,' which are to-day at the museum at Amiens. Many of his allegorical pieces are in French public institutions—at the Comédie Française, the Sorbonne, the Élysée, and elsewhere. M. Dubufe was one of the founders and chief supporters of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts.

THE Rivista d'Arte, published at Florence and edited by Dr. Giovanni Poggi, now in the sixth year of its existence, has developed into a periodical of considerable size and importance. The March—April number contains, among other notable contributions, an article by Mr. Herbert Horne entitled 'A Commentary upon Vasari's Life of Jacopo dal Casentino.' The writer shows that Vasari was mistaken in describing the painter, who appears to have been already dead in 1349, as a pupil of Taddeo Gaddi; while the tradition, preserved by the Anonimo Gaddiano, that Jacopo was among the immediate followers of Giotto, is proved to be correct. Two illustrations of undoubted works by Jacopo dal Casentino accompany the article: the altarpiece known as the Madonna of the Mercato Vecchio, of which a detailed account is given, and a small signed triptych belonging to Guido Cagnola at Milan, a recent discovery which, as the writer points out, "affords a definite starting-point for a criticism of Jacopo dal Casentino as a painter"; chronologically, he places it "within some ten years of Giotto's death." The painter Matteo di Jacopo, whose name occurs in Florentine documents in 1354 and later, is almost certainly proved to be a son of Jacopo dal Casentino, and is probably identical with the painter of the same name who executed his will in August, 1417.

In the same number of the Rivista are reproduced a characteristic Annunciation by Fra Angelico in the church of S. Francesco at Montecarlo in Tuscany (a picture which, strangely enough, seems to have been overlooked by all the painter's biographers), and a St. Sebastian by Baccio da Montelupo in the Badia of S. Godenzo, near Vicenza. It was known from records that the sculptor had executed numerous figures carved in wood for the Badia, and among them a St. Sebastian; but all were believed to have perished. Recently, however, this fine St. Sebastian was discovered in the crypt, and there seems no doubt that it is identical with the one known to have been furnished by Baccio in 1506.

VARIOUS changes in the attributions of pictures in the Uffizi and Pitti are recorded. The head of Medusa once exhibited under the name of Leonardo, but long regarded by critics as a Flemish work, is now officially recognized as such, and has been removed to one of the rooms reserved for pictures of that school; a portrait, once thought to be of Raphael, by Leonardo (of which there is an old copy in the gallery at Vicenza), is now relegated to the Venetian School; and the Fates, long catalogued as

* It is to be assumed that these angels had already been added by the restorer before 1833, as they are mentioned by Passavant in a book published in that year.

† The names of many other painters are known whose reputation stood high at this date (cf. Merlo, 'Die Meister der altkölischen Malerschule,' Aldenhoven, 'Geschichte der Kölner Malerschule,' &c.).

* Cf. Prof. Clemen's article 'Der Clarenaltar im Kölner Dom: eine Revision' (Kunstchronik, Dec. 11th, 1908, p. 130).

by Michelangelo, are now officially recognized as by Rosso.

In Paris last week a second state of Rembrandt's famous 'Hundred Guilder Piece' ('Jesus curing the Sick') realized 61,500 francs, apart from the 10 per cent auction charges. On the same occasion a third state of Rembrandt's 'Three Crosses,' in fine condition sold for 17,000 francs.

EXHIBITIONS.

SAT. (June 5)—Onorato Carlandi's Pictures and Water-Colours, 'In the Land of the Latins,' Fine-Art Society's Gallery.
— Miss Lillian Cheviot's Paintings of Animals, Graves Galleries.
— Miss E. Fortescue-Brickdale's Water-Colours, 'The Poems of Robert Browning,' Dowdeswell Galleries.
— Willem Maris's Works, Mr. T. McLean's Gallery.
— Medici Society's Collotype Reproductions of Old Masters, Private View, 38, Albemarle Street.
— Old Masters' Drawings of the English, French, Dutch, and Italian Schools, Mr. Paterson's Gallery.
THURS. (June 10)—Mr. Arthur Studd's Paintings, Alpine Club Gallery.

MUSIC

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The King's Musick. Edited by Henry Cart de Lafontaine. (Novello & Co.)—This volume of over five hundred pages contains transcripts from the Lord Chamberlain's records as preserved in the Record Office, relating to music and musicians from 1460 to 1700, many of them exceedingly quaint. In 1612 we find mention of "Mr. Bull, Doctor of Musike to the King"; in 1620 of Thomas Lupo, appointed "composer for our violins, that they may be the better furnished with variety and choice for our delight and pleasure in that kind"; in 1633 of a warrant for the apprehension of Griffin Jones upon the complaint of John Heydon, "a musition for the violins, for abusive language given him, as 'fiding rogue,'" &c.; and in 1620 of payments for "musique books," also 3*l.* more "for two Italian musique cards to compose upon, at 30*s.* each." The records of the reign of Charles II. are voluminous. John Banister was appointed head of the King's band of twenty-four violinists in 1663, but three years later he and his violinists were ordered to "obey the directions of Mons. Louis Grabu, master of the private music." At the end of the volume there are valuable notes concerning important musicians mentioned in the records, and in reference to Banister we are told that the above order was "a knock-down blow" for him. From the State records we, however, know that he had only himself to blame for losing royal favour. The references to Henry Purcell are particularly interesting. Already in 1673 he is appointed assistant to John Kingston, "keeper of organs." In 1674 there is an entry of a "Bill for handkerchiefs for Pursell, a boy gone off from the chapel," i.e., the "Chappell Royall"; and another for a "felt hat" for him. Then on August 31st, 1685, among the musicians of James II. is mentioned "Harpiscall, Henry Purcell."

There are also some notes on 'Court Masques, particularly the Whitehall Masque of 1674.' The editor concludes, and on very good grounds, that this Masque of 1674 was Crowne's 'Calisto; or, The Chaste Nymph.' The music for that Masque was written by Staggin, who in 1674 took Grabu's place as master of the music. There is no mention of this music either in Grove or Eitner.

An Illustrated Catalogue of the Music Loan Exhibition at Fishmongers' Hall, June and July, 1904. (Novello & Co.)—A charter of incorporation was granted by King James I. to the Musicians' Company on July 8th, 1604. The Worshipful Company of Musicians resolved, therefore, to celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of that event, and held an exhibition of musical instruments, books, portraits, MSS., &c., relating to music. Among music printing exhibits were Johannes Gerson's 'Collectorium super Magnificat' of 1473, the earliest specimen of printed musical notation (in it the notes were printed at the same time as the letterpress, not stamped in afterwards); 'Agenda Parochialium Ecclesiarum' of 1488, a copy which Mr. Barclay Squire declares to be "probably unique"; and the earliest publication in England, viz., Higden's 'Polychronicon' of 1495. The score of Peri's 'Euridice,' published in 1600, "the actual starting-point of modern opera," was another valuable book. Among rare treatises were what is believed to be a complete set of the works of Franchinus Gafurius, Virdung's 'Musica getutscht' (1511), and the first edition of Playford's 'Breefe Introduction to the Skill of Music' (1654), with a facsimile of the title-page.

The word-book of the first English Opera, 'The Siege of Rhodes,' published in 1656, is of historic interest; unfortunately, the music by Lawes, Lock, and other composers was never printed.

Of instrumental music may be named 'The English Dancing Master' (1651); Purcell's 'Sonatas of III. Parts' (1683), with "manuscript figured bass additions, possibly by Purcell himself"; and J. S. Bach's 'Clavir Ubung, Partita III.,' said to have been engraved by the composer's own hand.

The musical autographs included 'The Messiah,' lent by the King; two of Haydn's 'London' Symphonies; orchestral pieces by Mozart; the Scherzo of Mendelssohn's Octet, as scored by the composer for the Philharmonic Society; and the full score of Purcell's 'The Fairy Queen.'

Of numerous letters and documents given in facsimile we name three: one a document by J. S. Bach, acknowledging the receipt of five thalers; a second a very long letter written by Handel from Dublin to Charles Jennens, of whom Lord Howe, the lender, is a descendant; and a third, a page of the libretto of 'Tristan' in Wagner's handwriting.

We have named only a few of the treasures described in this large Catalogue. The list of musical instruments exhibited occupies a third of the volume, and in addition to the valuable notes, there is a large number of splendid illustrations. The portrait section comprises oil paintings, drawings, engravings, caricatures, &c. The illustrations include Thomas Hudson's 'Handel' and Thomas Hardy's 'Haydn.' Only five hundred copies of this Catalogue have been printed.

Musical Gossip.

'FAUST' was given yesterday week at Covent Garden. Madame Kousnietzoff from St. Petersburg, who impersonated Marguerite, is an experienced artist. M. Affre in the title-part sang extremely well. On the following evening Bellini's 'La Sonnambula' was performed. This work had not been heard at Covent Garden for nearly twenty years. But for Madame Tetrassini it would not probably have been revived. She sang brilliantly, and the audience was satisfied.

ON Monday evening was produced Rossini's 'Il Barbiere,' and Madame Tetrassini impersonated Rosina. There is one scene in which the stage becomes a concert-platform, and the prima donna sang effectively the 'Polonaise' from 'Mignon' and the Proch Variations. There are, however, many touches in the opera which show that, though in some respects its age is evident, Rossini had true dramatic instinct and a strong sense of humour. With M. Marcoux as Basilio, M. Gilibert as Bartolo, M. Sammarco as Figaro, and last, but not least, M. Anselmi as Almaviva, together with Signor Panizza as conductor, there was a really excellent performance.

IN Verdi's 'Otello' on Wednesday evening Signor Slezak made a favourable appearance in the title-part. He sang well, and what he lacked in strength of voice he made up for by fine and restrained declamation. Signor Scotti's impersonation of Iago was artistic, though not sufficiently subtle. Madame Edvina was only fairly satisfactory as Desdemona. She was at her best in the "Willow" song, of which she gave an expressive rendering. Signor Campanini conducted.

MADAME NORDICA, who has not appeared in London for several seasons, gave a recital at Queen's Hall yesterday week. Her sympathetic voice, quiet, unpretentious manner, and intelligent interpretation of songs of very various character won for her a warm, yet thoroughly well-deserved reception. Even some good artists are too bent on making points, on attempting new readings; Madame Nordica leaves the music to create its own impression. As pianists play long works without book, and vocalists on the stage sing through a whole opera, singers at concerts might follow this lady's example, and dispense with music—not out of bravado, to show they have good memories, but to bring themselves into closer touch with their audiences. Madame Nordica gives an orchestral concert on the 17th inst.

MR. FREDERICK DELIUS's 'The Mass of Life' will be produced at Mr. Beecham's last concert next Monday evening at Queen's Hall. The North Staffordshire District Choral Society will take part in the performance.

THE general rehearsal of the forthcoming Handel-Mendelssohn Festival at the Crystal Palace will take place on Saturday, the 19th inst. On Tuesday, the 22nd, 'Elijah' will be given; and on Saturday, the 26th, 'The Messiah.' On Thursday, the 24th, the programme will include selections from Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The general rehearsal begins at noon, the other performances later. The principal singers for Handel will be Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Clara Butt, and Messrs. Ben Davies, Walter Hyde, and Watkin Mills; and for Mendelssohn, Sir Charles Santley, Mr. Kennerley Rumford, and Miss Gladys Honey. Dr. Frederick Cowen will be the conductor, and Mr. Walter W. Hedgecock will preside at the organ.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

MON.-SAT. Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
MON. M. A. Borchard's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Misses Nora and Frederica Conway's Concert, 3, Steinway Hall.
— Mr. Arturo Tihaldi's Violin Recital, 3.30, Æolian Hall.
— Mr. T. Beecham's Orchestral Concert, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
— Mrs. W. Onslow Ford and Mr. G. Elwes's Song Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
TUES. Nino Rossi's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Salle Erard.
— Miss Irene St. Clair's French Song Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
— Miss Elsie Hall's Pianoforte Recital, 3.15, Steinway Hall.
— Mr. H. Peyton's Song Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
— Misses A. and J. von Aranie and Mr. Donald F. Tovey's Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
— Mr. J. Campbell McInnes's Song Recital, 8.30, Æolian Hall.
WED. Miss Marie L. Gould's Concert, 3, Salle Erard.
— Miss Irene Gorainoff's Pianoforte Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
— Mr. Julien Henry's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
THURS. Mr. Frederick Dawson's Pianoforte Recital, 3, St. James's Hall.
— Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. G. Henschel's Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
— Mr. Fernand Rivière's Recital, 3, Salle Erard.
— Mr. Theodore Byard's Concert, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
— Herr T. von Raatz's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
FRI. Mr. Reginald Dawson's Concert, 3, Steinway Hall.
— Mr. Herbert Fryer's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
— Miss Sara Davies's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
— Miss Gladys Honey's Vocal Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
— Miss May Mukle's Cello Recital, 8.15, St. James's Hall.
— Miss Stubenrauch's Violin Recital, 8.15, Æolian Hall.
— Sunderland, Thistleton Concert, 8.30, Steinway Hall.
SAT. New Symphony Orchestral Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.

DRAMA

A New Variorum Edition of Shakespeare.
—Richard III. Edited by Horace Howard Furness, Jun. (Lippincott & Co.)

FROM 1873, when the first two volumes of this edition were issued, until the present day, when the fifteenth volume lies before us, is a far cry. Excellent though the results of these years of labour undoubtedly are, we cannot but regret that the rate of progress is so slow, bearing in mind the magnitude of the task which still remains to be accomplished. Although the present volume is the fifteenth of the series, it is but the fourteenth play—two editions of 'Macbeth' having appeared, the first by Dr. Furness himself, and the revised edition by Mr. H. H. Furness, jun. The volume now under review is the second contribution to this series by the latter gentleman, and it may be said without hesitation that in associating his son with this important work Dr. Furness has exercised a wise discretion. It is not vouchsafed to every scholarly father to be blessed with a son possessing the mind and the inclination to help and carry on the labours which have engrossed the best years of his own life.

In the laudable endeavour to compile an authoritative edition of 'Richard III.' Mr. Furness was confronted at the outset by more than ordinary difficulties. Few of Shakespeare's plays are furnished with so many varied sources from which the text may be drawn. Before the Folio of 1623 appeared, no fewer than six Quartos of 'Richard III.' had been issued, the first five during Shakespeare's lifetime, and the task of the editor in struggling with the variations and contradictions of the text must not be under-estimated. That he has emerged from the ordeal with conspicuous success is a standing tribute to his patience and powers of discrimination.

In discussing the debatable point as to the relation of the Quarto and the Folio, Mr. Furness quotes various authorities in support of the arguments respectively for or against the editions in question. The conclusion he arrives at—and we think the right one—is that the Folio is the version, or the nearest version, of the play as originally written by Shakespeare, while the Quarto is the playhouse or prompter's copy. It is, however, a subject over which controversy has raged without much practical result. To prolong an already attenuated argument can be of little real benefit, and as it cannot be stated with any degree of precision, at this late period, that either the Folio or the Quarto gives Shakespeare's own words, any settled general opinion on the subject is hardly likely to be reached. This being the case, the "Variorum Edition" will materially aid those engaged in the textual study of Shakespeare in forming individual opinions as to which is the most trustworthy authority upon which to found their literary faith.

With so welcome an aid to hand, we venture to urge the desirability of a readable text. The volume before us is so excellent that to ask for more may seem perhaps unreasonable. The exact orthography, punctuation, &c., are interesting and in fact indispensable in an edition of this nature, intended primarily as a work of reference; but for the ordinary reader it is nearly impossible to follow the text with any ease. As a matter of fact, the first five volumes of this edition were published in a readable form. We do not suggest that the "Variorum Edition" itself should be tampered with, but are of opinion that a collateral readable edition with its main results should be published.

The alleged sources from which Shakespeare drew the material for constructing the plots of his plays are dealt with at some length. In respect to 'Richard III.' the Preface says:—

"Seven versions of the story are extant, all of them antedating Shakespeare's play. Scarcely one has survived in popular remembrance. Shakespeare alone has made Richard III. live; the character drawn by that mighty hand is the one which all of us remember and accept as true in spite of all apologists. Whether or not it be Richard's true character need concern no reader of the play."

This is true enough, and might be taken to heart with advantage by those who confuse the playwright's art with the more precise cult of the historian.

An edition of this description aims at representing many varieties of opinion. That we should be disinclined to accept some of them as authoritative judgments is inevitable. For example, the present reviewer would place the character of Margaret of Anjou next in importance to the sinister figure of Richard. Although she is to all intents and purposes outside the actual movement of the play, her virile figure appears to dominate its action by its revengeful intensity. We certainly do not agree with the opinion expressed by Mrs. Jameson, as quoted in the notes, with reference to Margaret. According to this lady:—

"Margaret, as exhibited in these tragedies, is a dramatic portrait of considerable truth, and vigour, and consistency; but she is not one of Shakespeare's women. He who knew so well in what true greatness of spirit consisted—who could excite our respect and sympathy, even for a Lady Macbeth—would never have given us a heroine without a touch of heroism; he would not have portrayed a high-hearted woman struggling against the strongest vicissitudes of fortune, yet left her without a single quality which would excite our interest in her bravely endured misfortunes—and this in the very face of history; he would have breathed into the woman some of his own sweet spirit—he would have given her a soul."

What does the lady mean? That Margaret is unworthy of Shakespeare simply because the character is unsympathetic? The implication is trivial, and could only be dictated by an ultra-sentimentality which is out of place in dealing with a tragedy of this nature. Shakespeare in portraying the character of Margaret—hard and inscrutable as it undoubtedly is—was probably influenced by the fact that he wished it to be so, and by no other reason, historical or otherwise. To argue on any other basis is to conclude that he was not clear in his intentions. Brooke's summing-up of a notable creation is concise, to the point, and much to be preferred:—

"Margaret is a mighty figure—more Greek in conception than any other figure in Shakespeare—the Fate and Fury together of the play.... She is altogether joyless.... Her vengeance is felt, like an actual presence in the air, by all who die," &c.

The volume runs to some 641 pages, including the Preface and Appendix. The latter contains various notes on the text; opinions as to the date of composition; and the source of the plot, including Hall's 'Chronicle' and the Latin 'Tragedy of Richardus Tertius.' For the purpose of comparison, 'The True Tragedy of Richard III.,' a play by an unknown author, is inserted. The date of composition of this is put before that of Shakespeare's play, and although it is possible, and even probable, that Shakespeare read it, it cannot be said with any degree of exactitude that beyond a few ideas he was particularly indebted to it in the working-out of his own enduring conception. English and German criticisms are fully represented; likewise the distinguishing characteristics of the various actors of note who have essayed the interpretation of the character of Richard. There are also notes on Cibber's version of 'Richard III.,' on costume, and on the deformity of Richard; besides the 'Ballad of the Children in the Wood,' by Robert Farrington, 1601. The question of time-analysis is considered, and we find further a useful list of books referred to in the notes, arranged in alphabetical order, and an Index. The volume is admirably turned out, and in every way creditable to the publishers. A portrait of Richard III., reproduced from an engraving by Cross, forms the frontispiece.

THE WEEK.

ROYALTY.—What the Public Wants: a Play in Four Acts. By Arnold Bennett.

IT is a little singular that an actor-manager in want of some light and piquant entertainment which might enable him to compete with the outdoor attractions of London should have had to resort to the "theatre of ideas" to get what he needed. Yet this is the case with Mr. Charles Hawtrey, who is indebted to the Stage Society for a hint as to the sort of piece which may tempt Londoners during warm summer evenings. With a courage that deserves success, he is presenting at the Royalty that skit on the methods of the cheap press and its directors with which Mr. Arnold Bennett delighted the Stage Society three weeks or so ago; and if first-night receptions have any significance, the average playgoer seems likely to take kindly to its abundance of wit and good-humoured, but trenchant satire. Its very shortcomings may help to serve Mr. Hawtrey's turn, for since it has next to no plot, and is merely a series of laughable episodes, the "diner-out" can drop into his seat at any moment, and settle down to the enjoyment of Mr. Bennett's fun without being put to the trouble of piecing together the threads of any story. Whatever may be the time at which he arrives, he is pretty sure to find the newspaper-millionaire on the stage, and to be diverted by Sir Charles Worgan's ingenuousness in expounding the cynical principles according to which he "runs" his journals, or by his indignant protests against the obtuseness of those who disapprove of his conduct. Whether he is quarrelling with his dramatic critic over a split infinitive inserted in a notice, or teaching an uncompromisingly artistic theatrical manager how to make the drama pay, or demonstrating that "religion is not played out," or increasing the circulation of his Sunday paper by means of sensationalism and scandal, or assuming an air of injured innocence because his sweetheart, in sheer despair of making him see himself with the eyes of others, breaks off their engagement, he is a spectacle out of which the comic spirit can derive constant delectation.

Mr. Hawtrey has scarcely the manner or the appearance of a newspaper proprietor, nor is Sir Charles Worgan the sort of character which he would, we think, have instinctively chosen for himself. Nevertheless his sense of humour and admirable diction carry him through the part successfully, and he makes every speech and witticism tell. He is materially assisted by having Miss Margaret Halstan at hand to repeat a charming impersonation as the heroine; and Mr. Ben Webster and Mr. Louis Calvert are also in the cast, the latter gloriously truculent as the theatrical manager who refuses at all costs to come to terms with Mammon.

HICKS.—Eunice: a Play in Four Acts.
By Lee Arthur and Forrest Halsey.

It is depressing to find an actress of undoubted talent such as Miss Fannie Ward constantly associated with plays which by their crudity or insincerity tend to give a false impression of her abilities. Possessed of genuine, if somewhat undisciplined emotional power, capable of striking the true note of pathos if her playwrights will only allow her to be natural, she has to figure in stagey and artificial situations. Her latest choice of piece, 'Eunice,' offers no better scope for showing what she could do with worthy material than the half-dozen other ventures with which of recent years she has been connected. It is one of those drawing-room melodramas which American authors are rather fond of manufacturing, and from first to last Miss Ward is handicapped by being required to lend plausibility to a story which is artificial and stagey. The play might have been written a generation ago, so full is it of reminiscences of the younger Dumas, Scribe and Sardou. Even so its plot might have gained provisional acceptance, could Mr. Halsey and his colleague have emulated the neat craftsmanship and ingenuity of device which were the marks of the French school they have imitated. But they have no such qualifications; never once do their scenes seem to be other than arbitrary and mechanically prepared.

Eunice is a young girl who has allowed herself, under a promise of marriage, to be put in a false situation by a scheming and particularly heartless adventurer. This rogue sets before her the alternatives of being abandoned without resources, or being introduced as his daughter to some rich people whose son desires to make her his wife. She accepts the boy's offer, and enjoys years of happiness with him, but fails to explain to him what have been really her relations with her supposed father. The villain returns, and wishes to trade on her secret. Wrought to frenzy by threats of exposure, the girl stabs her tormentor to death. She is saved from the ordeal of a public trial, thanks to her father—a broken-down, drug-maddened butler—who takes her crime on his shoulders; and we are to suppose that the homicidal heroine and her forgiving husband settle down to a life of ease and mutual love.

Miss Ward has one or two very affecting moments; Mr. Reeves Smith is delightfully suave as the villain; and Mr. Cartwright and Miss Granville do their best with not very remunerative parts. But none of the players can put life into a story so unreal as that of 'Eunice.'

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—F. W. R.—J. M. C.—G. N.—
J. W.—Received.
C. B.—Many thanks.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.
We cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

We do not undertake to give the value of books, china, pictures, &c.

THE ATHENÆUM,
PRICE THREEPENCE.

Is published every FRIDAY in time for the Afternoon Mails. Terms of Subscription, free by post to all parts of the United Kingdom: For Six Months, 7s. 6d.; for Twelve Months, 15s. 3d. For the Continent and all places within the Postal Union: For Six Months, 9s.; for Twelve Months, 18s., commencing from any date, payable in advance to

JOHN C. FRANCIS,

Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENTS	662
BELL & SONS	684
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS	663
CATALOGUES	662
CONSTABLE & CO.	664
EDUCATIONAL	661
ENO'S FRUIT SALT	687
EXHIBITIONS	661
GREEN & SONS	686
HEINEMANN	687
LECTURES	661
LONG	688
MACMILLAN & CO.	664
MAGAZINES, &c.	686
MISCELLANEOUS	662
NOTES AND QUERIES	687
NUTT	664
PRINTERS	662
PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS	661
SALES BY AUCTION	662
SHIPPING	686
SITUATIONS VACANT	661
SITUATIONS WANTED	662
SONNENSCHN & CO.	687
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	662
UNWIN	686
WARD & LOCK	536

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

NOW READY, imperial 8vo, 15s. net.

MODERN HOMES.

Selected Examples of Dwelling-Houses Described and Illustrated.

By T. RAFFLES DAVISON, Hon. A.R.I.B.A.

With a Foreword by Sir ASTON WEBB, R.A., and nearly 300 Illustrations, chiefly from Pen-Drawings by the Author.

A book of typical specimens of modern country-house architecture, which should appeal to all who are interested in modern architecture, or who are contemplating building.

A STORY OF SUSSEX. NOW READY, cloth, 6s.

STARBRACE.

By SHEILA KAYE SMITH,

Author of 'The Tramping Methodist.'

In her new story Miss Kaye Smith provides a worthy successor to her first novel 'The Tramping Methodist,' which was very well received last year. Like its predecessor, it gives a graphic and vivid picture of eighteenth-century life in Sussex.

JUST PUBLISHED, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON'S LURE.

An Anthology of Prose and Verse Passages bearing on London.

By HELEN and LEWIS MELVILLE.

With Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers designed by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

"Here we have a collection of what a number of people, famous more or less, have written about London, and a very fine collection it is. The arrangement is admirable." Spectator.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Newly Translated, with Introduction and Notes,

By E. E. C. GOMME, B.A.

An entirely new and literal translation, chiefly from the Parker MS., but extracts have been made from the other MSS. wherever the difference of phraseology or fact justified their insertion. A very elaborate index is a special feature of this edition.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

"The new series of Bohn's Libraries, on which judicious bookbuyers have long learned to keep a careful eye."—Athenæum.

NOW COMPLETED IN TWELVE VOLUMES.

5s. each.

THE PROSE WORKS OF JONATHAN SWIFT.

Edited by TEMPLE SCOTT.

In 12 vols. small post 8vo, with numerous Portraits and Facsimiles.

Vol. XII. completing the Edition. Complete Bibliography by W. SPENCER JACKSON, and Full Index, with Essays on the Portraits of Swift and Stella, by the Right Hon. Sir FREDERICK FALKINER, K.C., and on the Relations between Swift and Stella by the very Rev. J. H. BERNARD, D.D., Dean of St. Patrick's. With 2 Portraits and a View of Woodpark.

"Messrs. Bell are to be warmly congratulated on the completion of their edition of Swift's Prose Works. Of the care and thoroughness of all concerned in it—editors, contributors, publishers, and printers—we cannot speak too highly. For the first time the student has a really complete and satisfactory edition of Swift's Prose Works, sufficiently annotated and provided with the needful bibliographical apparatus, issued in a very convenient form and at a very moderate price."—Athenæum.

* * This well-known Series now includes upwards of 800 Volumes of Standard Works in English Literature, and Translations from the Classics and all the Modern Languages.

Price 3s. 6d. or 5s. per Volume (with exceptions).

A Detailed Catalogue of the Libraries will be sent on application.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S LIST

NEW SIX-SHILLING FICTION

THE QUEST

JUSTUS MILES FORMAN

"Mr. Forman gives his well-woven events more than a touch of real romance, and his style is singularly good, even distinguished. This is a book to heartily enjoy."—Morning Leader.

JEANNE OF THE MARSHES

E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

"Mr. Oppenheim's admirers will thoroughly enjoy this story down to the very last page."—Nottingham Guardian.

NETTA

FRED M. WHITE

The unravelling of the many tangled skeins is a process that firmly holds the attention of the reader.

A VERY DOUBTFUL EXPERIMENT

L. G. MOBERLY

Miss L. G. Moberly is making a big reputation for herself as a writer of strong emotional stories, and this story will add considerably to her popularity.

A TRAITOR'S WOOING

HEADON HILL

"With marked fertility of imagination he has written a book strikingly real in dramatic detail and brilliant alike in descriptive sensationalism and characterization."—Irish Independent.

THE NECKLACE OF PARMONA

L. T. MEADE

"Mrs. L. T. Meade has already done fine things, but 'The Necklace of Parmona' is her masterpiece. It is delightful and really a work of art."—Dundee Advertiser.

SARAH TULDON'S LOVERS

ORME AGNUS

"Sarah Tuldon is a creation in the full sense of the word; a thing afire with life and the energy of a fearless paganism, that is yet clean as the open hills. Splendour is the word that most naturally links itself with her—splendour in courage, mastery, and laughter."—Manchester Guardian.

THE POWERS OF MISCHIEF

SIR WILLIAM MAGNAY

The book is written in a style delightfully fresh and natural, and does not contain a dull page. It is rich in striking situations, strong dramatic power, and a keen sense of humour, and is one the reader would fain finish at a single sitting.

THE SOCIALIST

GUY THORNE

"A work of absorbing interest, dealing with one of the burning questions of the day in a manner alike entertaining and instructive."—Irish Independent.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS'.

NEW VOLUME OF ANIMAL LIFE.

BY CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS, AUTHOR OF THE 'HOUSE IN THE WATER.'

THE BACKWOODSMEN.

With 20 Full-Page Plates.

THE WINDSOR FOR JUNE

COMMENCES A NEW VOLUME

with a large Instalment of a picturesque Serial by

MAX PEMBERTON

entitled 'WHITE WALLS.'

12 Beautiful Reproductions of Famous Pictures in

THE CHANTREY BEQUEST.

The Subject of

HORSE SHOWS, IN PURPOSE AND PRACTICE

Illustrated by many good Photographs and Drawings.

Introductory Note by

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD

TO 'PLAY CENTRES FOR POOR CHILDREN.'

COMPLETE STORIES BY

JACK LONDON, CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS, &c.

FAMOUS

SHILLING GUIDE-BOOKS

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, round corners.

With Maps and Plans and many Illustrations.

ENGLAND AND WALES.

ALDEBURGH and the Suffolk Coast.
BANGOR and North Wales.
BATH, Wells, Glastonbury.
BEXHILL and District.
BIDEFORD, Barnstaple, &c.
BOGNOR, Chichester, Selsey.
BOURNEMOUTH and District.
BRIDLINGTON and FILEY.
BRIGHTON and HOVE.
BROADSTAIRS and N.E. Kent.
BUXTON and District.
CANTERBURY and N.E. Kent.
CHANNEL ISLANDS.
CLEVEDON.
COLWYN BAY and North Wales.
CROMER, Sheringham, &c.
DARTMOOR.
DAWLISH and S.E. Devon.
DEAL, Walmer, &c.
DOVER, St. Margaret's Bay, &c.
DOVERCOURT, Harwich, &c.
EASTBOURNE, Seaford, &c.
ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT.
EXETER and S.E. Devon.
EXMOUTH and District.
PALMOUTH and S. Cornwall.
FELIXSTOWE and District.
FOLKESTONE, Hythe, &c.
HARROGATE, Ripon, &c.
HASTINGS, St. Leonards, &c.
HERNE BAY, Whitstable, &c.
ILFRACOMBE, and N. Devon.
ISLE OF MAN.
ISLE OF WIGHT.
LEAMINGTON, Warwick, &c.
LITTLEHAMPTON.

LIVERPOOL, Birkenhead, &c.
LLANDRINDOD WELLS and District.
LLANDUDNO and N. Wales.
LONDON and Environs.
LOWESTOFT and District.
LYME REGIS.
LYNTON and Lynmouth.
MALVERN and District.
MARGATE.
MATLOCK and District.
MINEHEAD, Exmoor, &c.
NEWQUAY and N. Cornwall.
NOTTINGHAM and District.
PENZANCE and W. Cornwall.
PLYMOUTH and S.W. Devon.
PORTSMOUTH and District.
RAMSGATE, Sandwich, &c.
RHYL and North Wales.
SCARBOROUGH and District.
SHERWOOD FOREST, Nottingham, &c.
SIDMOUTH, Seaton, &c.
SOUTHSEA and District.
SOUTHWOLD.
STRATFORD-UPON-AVON.
SWANAGE.
TEIGNMOUTH.
TENBY and South Wales.
THAMES, THE, from Putney to Cricklade.
TORQUAY, Paignton, &c.
WALES, NORTH (Northern Section).
WALES, NORTH (Southern Section).
WALES, SOUTH.
WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
WEYMOUTH and District.
WHITBY and District.
WORTHING and S.W. Sussex.
WYE VALLEY.
YARMOUTH and the BROADS.

SCOTLAND.

ABERDEEN and District.
EDINBURGH and District.
GLASGOW and the Clyde.
HIGHLANDS AND ISLANDS.
INVERNESS and District.
OBAN and the Western Highlands.

IRELAND.

ANTRIM, Portrush, Giant's Causeway, &c.
BELFAST and District.
CORK, Glengariff, Bantry Bay, &c.
DONEGAL HIGHLANDS.
DUBLIN and County Wicklow.
KILLARNEY and South-West Ireland.

HALF-CROWN SERIES.

These Volumes are issued in superior Cloth Binding, with many Maps and Street Plans of the principal Cities.

BELGIUM.
HOLLAND.
LONDON and Environs, with complete INDEX TO STREETS.
The London Guide is also in uniform 1s. edition.

PARIS and Environs.
The Paris Guide is also issued in the uniform 1s. edition, with plan of the City only.
SWITZERLAND.

OTHERS IN PREPARATION.

Magazines, &c.

A NOTABLE NUMBER.

THE EXPOSITOR.Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL,
M.A. LL.D.

Contents for JUNE.

HISTORICAL COMMENTARY ON THE FIRST
EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY. By Prof. Sir W. M. Ramsay,
D.C.L. LL.D. D.D.THE DATE OF Q. By the Rev. Prof. Kirsopp Lake
M.A., Leiden, Holland.THE SANCTIFICATION OF MAN. By the Rev. Principal
Alfred E. Garvie, M.A. D.D.

STUDIES IN CONVERSION.

3. St. Augustine. By the Rev. Prof. James Stalker, D.D.

PAULINISM AND THE RELIGION OF JESUS. By the Rev. George Milligan, D.D.THE CAREFULNESS OF LUKE THE PROPHET. By the Rev. Canon E. C. Selwyn, D.D.LEXICAL NOTES FROM THE PAPYRI. By the Rev.
Prof. J. H. Moulton, M.A. Litt.D., and the Rev. George Milligan, D.D.

NOW READY, price 1s. net.

HODDER & STOUGHTON, Warwick Square, London, E.C.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine
Street, London, W.C., JUNE 5, contains:—

A GERMAN PROFESSOR ON SEWAGE TREATMENT.

A NEW EXPERIMENT IN SCHOOL BUILDING.

REPORT OF ROYAL INSTITUTE OF BRITISH ARCHI-TECTS' DINNER.

NOTES FROM FRANCE.

ARCHITECTS' TECHNICAL BUREAU.

MUNICIPAL AND COUNTY ENGINEERS' MEETING.

REPORT OF BRITISH FIRE PREVENTION COMMITTEE DINNER.

SURVEYORS' INSTITUTION AND LAND TAXATION.

AND ILLUSTRATIONS OF

PULPIT, MESSINA CATHEDRAL;

NEW FRONTAGE, S.E. & C. RAILWAY, VICTORIA STATION;

HOUSE AT SCARBOROUGH;

HOUSES AT BRIXHAM AND GARDEN SUBURB,
HAMPSTEAD;KING HENRY VIII'S GATEWAY, ST. BARTHOLO-MEW'S HOSPITAL,

&c. &c.

ALSO SEE

THE BUILDER of May 15, page 586,
for Conditions of a Prize Competition for a
FOUNTAIN for a PUBLIC GARDEN.The Proprietors of the Builder offer a

FIRST PRIZE OF £20

and a

SECOND PRIZE OF £10

for the two best DESIGNS for a FOUNTAIN for a PUBLIC GARDEN.
Drawings are to be sent in by JUNE 23. The award will be made by the Editor of the Builder, in conjunction with Prof. Lethaby and Mr.
Walter Cave, who have kindly consented to act as joint assessors.From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all Newsagents.

JUST PUBLISHED, price 10s. 6d. net.

STUDIES IN EUROPEAN PHILOSOPHY.

By JAMES LINDSAY, D.D.,

Author of 'Recent Advances in Theistic Philosophy of Religion,' and other Works."It is a great style of work, for which one can only wish from the heart the most universal recognition."—Prof. ECKEN.

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

NOW READY, Price One Shilling and Sixpence net.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT, EXPOSITORY AND PRACTICAL.

Comprising:—

BRIEF NOTES ON THE PARABLES AND MIRACLES OF OUR LORD.

NEW TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY.

GEOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF PLACES NAMED.

APPENDIX ON SOME EUROPEAN TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.

With 5 Maps.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S. Associate of King's College, London.

Lay Reader in the Diocese of Southwark.

London:

SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

ELEVENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings net.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS: a Handy Book of Astronomy. Eleventh Edition. With 5 Plates. By W. T.
LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S."Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."
Guardian.

London:

SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

TENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, price Sixpence net.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES: a Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times. By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S."The booklet deserves to continue in popularity. It presents a mass of information in small compass."—Dundee Advertiser.

London:

SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

Shipping.PLEASURE CRUISES.*SPITZBERGEN.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 5.

JULY 1 to JULY 27.

SPITZBERGEN, NORWAY, &c.

Fares from 30 guineas.

NORWAY.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 6.

JULY 29 to AUGUST 11.

No. 7.

AUGUST 13 to AUGUST 26.

THE NORWEGIAN FJORDS.

BY

Fares from 12 Guineas.

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT "VECTIS."

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

In 2 royal 8vo vols. price £2 2s. net.

The Scottish
Grey Friars.

BY

WILLIAM MOIR BRYCE.

With Photogravures, Plates, and Illustrations throughout the Text.

Vol. I. HISTORY.

Vol. II. DOCUMENTS.

WILLIAM GREEN & SONS,

2 and 4, St. Giles Street, Edinburgh.

For Acidity of the Stomach.

For Heartburn and Headache.

For Gout and Indigestion.

DINNEFORD'SMAGNESIA.

For Sour Eructations and Bilious Affections.

A Safe and most effective Aperient for regular use.

TO BE PUBLISHED ON MONDAY.

With 8 Illustrations. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

NOTES BY THE WAY,

WITH

MEMOIRS OFJOSEPH KNIGHT,

F.S.A.,

DRAMATIC CRITIC AND EDITOR OF 'NOTES
AND QUERIES,' 1883-1907,

AND

THE REV.

JOSEPH WOODFALL EBSWORTH,

F.S.A.,

EDITOR OF THE BALLAD SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS.

BY

JOHN COLLINS FRANCIS,

Author of 'John Francis and the Athenæum.'

THE FOLLOWING ARE SOME OF THE CONTENTS:

JOSEPH KNIGHT.His Father and Mother—Education—King of the College—Life at Leeds—Leaves for London—Becomes Critic of the Athenæum—Editor of Notes and Queries—
Dramatic Critic of the Daily Graphic and of the Globe—
Contributions to the 'Dictionary of National Biography'—Writes Life of Rossetti—Sunday Evenings with the Marstons.JOSEPH WOODFALL EBSWORTH.His Life in Edinburgh—Affection for Scott—Exhibits at the Scottish Academy—Contributes to Hogg's
Instructor and Bradshaw's Magazine—Goes to Cambridge—His Ordination—Wins the Hearts of the Gipsies—Devotes Himself to Ballad History—His Friendships with Ellicott, Kingsley, George Gilfillan—
Writes on the Brontës—Letters from Patrick Brontë—
Dedicates 'Roxburghe Ballads' to Queen Victoria.LITERARY JUBILEES AND CELEBRATIONSDaily News*—Daily Telegraph—Guardian—Blackwood's
Magazine—Gentleman's Magazine—John Rylands
Library—Leisure Hour—Chambers's Journal—John
Cassell—John Limbird—Charles Knight—Globe—Field—
Saturday Review—Notes and Queries.LONGFELLOW.His Father—First Poem—Considers his Poetic Career Finished—His Marriages—Enthusiastic Reception in England—Visits Tennyson—Returns Home—Children
Celebrate his Birthday—Death and Funeral—Sorrow in America and England—His Bust in the Abbey.COWPER.His Sensitive Temperament—His Terrible Lines—John Newton's Influence Beneficial—Happy Years at Olney
—His Gratitude to Mrs. Unwin and Lady Hasketh—
His Lost Poem 'The Castaway'—Why the Name is Pronounced Cooper—'The Cup that Cheers'—Cowper
Anticipated—Maitland on Cowper's Works in America —Origin of "God moves in a Mysterious Way"—Letters
Sold at Sotheby's.AUCTION SALES.Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge—Hodgsons—Puttick &
Simpson—Trade Sales—Sale of Scott's Copyrights.THE CITY OF LONDON.Its Privileges—Its Roll of Fame—Guildhall Library—
Lord Mayor's Precedence—Street Improvements—
Cattle in Streets—Increase of Traffic—The Thames
Embankment—Bad Odours of the Thames—Rateable
Value—The Guilds—Financial History—Black Friday—
Baring Brothers—Goschen Converts the 3 per Cents—
Splendid Series of Records—Dr. Reginald R. Sharpe—
Educational Grants—Charitable Grants—City Temple Pulpit—Report on Coronation Privileges—Title of "Lord" Mayor never Officially Conferred.London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Adelphi Terrace.
Leipsic: Inselstrasse 20.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.UNDINE.

By DE LA MOTTE FOUQUÉ.

Adapted from the German by W. L. COURTNEY.

Illustrated by ARTHUR RACKHAM, R.W.S.

Mr. HEINEMANN has much pleasure in announcing that he will publish in the Autumn an adaptation, by Mr. W. L. COURTNEY, Editor of the Fortnightly Review, of FOUQUÉ'S UNDINE, with Fifteen Plates in Colour and numerous Text Illustrations by ARTHUR RACKHAM, R.W.S.

The ÉDITION DE LUXE, on Hand-Made Paper, with the Plates mounted, will be limited to 1,000 Numbered Copies at 25s. net. The Ordinary Edition, crown 4to, price 7s. 6d. net, will be issued later.

In order to prevent disappointment of many who failed to secure copies of the De Luxe Edition of Mr. Rackham's former Works, orders for this Edition should be given to the Booksellers without delay. THE EDITION WILL BE STRICTLY LIMITED TO 1,000 COPIES.

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

YOUR BIRTHRIGHT IS HEALTH.THE SCIENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

'Health is a Man's Birthright. It is as natural to be well as to be born. All pathological conditions, all diseases, and all tendencies to disease are the result of the transgression of physiologic and hygienic law. This is the science of health in a nutshell.'—DENSMORE.

Eno's Fruit Salt

IS NATURE'S ANTIDOTE FOR HUMAN ILLS
arising from the neglect or violation of her laws.

'Our Acts, our angels are, for good or ill, our fatal shadows that walk by us still.'

'And such is life, so gliding on, it glimmers like a meteor, and is gone.'

CAUTION.—Examine the capsule, and see that it is marked ENO'S 'FRUIT SALT.' Without it you have the sincerest form of flattery—IMITATION.

Prepared only by J. C. ENO (Limited), 'FRUIT SALT' WORKS, LONDON, S.E.

CLIFFORD'S INN.

For View of CLIFFORD'S INN, taken in 1892, see

NOTES AND QUERIES, April 2, 1892.

The same Number also contains Sketches of the ROLLS CHAPEL, OLD SERJEANTS' INN, the GATEWAY, LINCOLN'S INN, &c.

Price 4½d., free by post, of

JOHN C. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS,

Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co.
LTD.*SOME WORKS ON EDUCATION.*HEGEL'S EDUCATIONAL THEORY AND PRACTICE.

By MILLICENT MACKENZIE, M.A., Professor of Education, University College, Cardiff. With an Introductory Note by Prof. T. S. MACKENZIE, Litt.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. net.

THE CYCLOPÆDIA OF EDUCATION.

New and Revised Edition. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

REPORT ON THE TEACHING OF ENGLISH IN THE UNITED STATES.

By M. ATKINSON WILLIAMS, B.A., Lecturer in English at Southlands Training College, Battersea. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. net.

FATIGUE.

By A. MOSSO, Professor of Physiology in the University of Turin. Translated by M. and W. B. DRUMMOND. With Diagrams. 348 pp. 4s. 6d.

'A book for the student and educationist. The subject constitutes one of the most fascinating chapters in the history of medical science, and all educationists, at any rate, should obtain the book.'—Yorkshire Post.

THE CHILD AND THE CURRICULUM.

By CATHERINE I. DODD, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE TRAINING OF THE IMAGINATION IN CHILDHOOD.

By MARGARET MACMILLAN, Author of 'Early Childhood.' Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HOW TO TEACH A FOREIGN LANGUAGE.

By OTTO JESPERSEN, Professor of English in the University of Copenhagen. Translated from the Danish Original by SOPHIA GHLENOLSON BERTELSEN, M.A. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE CHILD AND CHILD NATURE.

By BARONESS BÜLOW. Eighth Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s.

INTRODUCTION TO HERBART'S SCIENCE OF EDUCATION.

By H. M. and E. FELKIN. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

THE SCIENCE OF EDUCATION.

By J. F. HERBART. Translated by H. M. and E. FELKIN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

LETTERS AND LECTURES ON EDUCATION.

By J. F. HERBART. Translated by H. M. and E. FELKIN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

HOW GERTRUDE TEACHES HER CHILDREN.

By J. H. PESTALOZZI. Edited and Translated by E. COOKE. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

OUTLINES OF PEDAGOGICS.

By Prof. W. REIN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

EARLY CHILDHOOD.

By MARGARET MACMILLAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION TO HERBARTIAN PRINCIPLES OF TEACHING.

By CATHERINE DODD. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS
YEARBOOK, 1909.

Nineteenth Year of Issue. 3s. 6d. net.

THE SCHOOLMASTERS' YEARBOOK
AND DIRECTORY, 1909.

Seventh Annual Issue. 7s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LTD.,
25, High Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

MR. JOHN LONG'S NEW BOOKS

GENERAL LITERATURE

BRITTANY TO WHITEHALL: Life of Louise Renée de Kéroualle, Duchess of Portsmouth. By

Mrs. COLQUHOUN GRANT, Author of 'French Noblesse of the Eighteenth Century,' 'Mother of Czars,' 'Queen and Cardinal,' 'Quaker and Courtier.' With Photogravure Portrait and other rare Portraits and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. (Illustrated Prospectus post free.)

Bookman.—"From Brittany to Whitehall came the lovely maid-of-honour who was to serve France's interests while delighting an English king; and as interesting and full of incident as a novel is this life-story of the celebrated Louise Renée de Kéroualle. The beautiful Breton girl, mistress of King Charles II., and afterwards Duchess of Portsmouth, was unlike many of the Sovereign's favourites, for she was of ancient and noble birth. Mrs. Grant has presented a moving and vivid picture of the Breton girl's loveliness and dignity, loveliness and power."

THE MAGIC OF SPORT: Mainly Autobiographical. By NAT GOULD. With Photogravure Portrait and over 50 Illustrations of notable Sportsmen, Horses, and Places. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. (Illustrated Prospectus post free.)

Field.—"There is no better-known novelist at the present day than Nat Gould. 'The Magic of Sport' is full of interest from start to finish, and at times one follows the course of the story almost greedily. The book should appeal not only to those who follow racing, but the community at large."

World.—"The Magic of Sport' is an indispensable addition to every sportsman's book-shelves."

THE GILDED BEAUTIES OF THE SECOND EMPIRE. By FRÉDÉRIC LOLIÉE. English Version by

BRYAN O'DONNELL. With 34 Portraits. Demy 8vo, 15s. net. (Illustrated Prospectus post free.)

[Nearly ready.]

THE REAL FRANCIS JOSEPH: the Private Life of the Emperor of Austria. By HENRI DE

WEINDEL. English Version by PHILIP W. SERGEANT. With Photogravure and numerous other Portraits. Demy 8vo, 15s. net. (Illustrated Prospectus post free.)

[Nearly ready.]

THE SECRET HISTORY OF THE COURT OF SPAIN, 1802-1906. By RACHEL CHALLICE, Author of

'Vexed Questions,' &c.; Compiler of 'Spanish Protestants in the Sixteenth Century,' 'Mystic Links of Life,' &c., and Collaborator in 'The Historians' History of the World.' Illustrations by JUAN COMBA, Artist by appointment to the Court of Spain. Demy 8vo, 15s. net. (Illustrated Prospectus post free.)

[Nearly ready.]

ETON MEMORIES. By an OLD ETONIAN. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

(Illustrated Prospectus post free.)

[Nearly ready.]

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS

MOLLIE DEVERILL. By CURTIS YORKE, Author of 'The Other Sara,' &c., with a Coloured Frontispiece. [Next week.]

THE RED-HOT CROWN. By DOROTHEA GERARD, Author of 'Pomp and Circumstance,' 'Itinerant Daughters,' &c. [Next week.]

THE HAZARD OF THE DIE. By a PEER, Author of 'The Hard Way.' [Next week.]

BURNT WINGS. By Mrs. STANLEY WRENCH, Author of 'Love's Fool.' [Shortly.]

SYLVIA AND THE SECRETARY. By OLIVIA RAMSEY, Author of 'The Marriage of Lionel Glyde,' 'The Girl from Gatford.' [Shortly.]

BIDDY THE SPITFIRE. By JOHN LANGFIELD, Author of 'A Light-Hearted Rebellion' (see below). [Ready.]

SATAN, K.C. By MARIE HARVEY (a new Author). [Ready.]

COQUETTE. By MURIEL DANCHE, Author of 'The Porters of Woodthorpe.' [Ready.]

STEPHEN THE MAN. By HENRIETTA HEILGERS (a new Author). [Ready.]

DIVIDED HOUSES. By F. C. GARDINER (a new Author). [Ready.]

THE MEMBER FOR EASTERBY. By JAMES BLYTH, Author of 'Amazement' and 'Rubina.' [Ready.]

A RUNNING FIGHT. By J. HELLEDORN (a new Author). [Ready.]

THE GIRL IN THE BLUE DRESS. By RICHARD MARSH, Author of 'A Woman Perfected,' &c. [Ready.]

THE VEILED LADY. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of 'No. 3, The Square,' &c. [Ready.]

THE FOUNTAIN OF BEAUTY. By L. T. MEADE, Author of 'The Courtship of Sybil,' &c. [Ready.]

WILL NOVEL READERS KINDLY NOTE THAT MR. JOHN LONG WILL SHORTLY ISSUE ANOTHER LIST OF NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS?

THE NEW HUMORIST

BIDDY THE SPITFIRE. By JOHN LANGFIELD, Author of 'A Light-Hearted Rebellion.'

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Mr. Langfield has given us a screaming farce. It is based on a brilliantly ingenious idea, and it is developed with rollicking high spirits and a most fertile invention. It is a book for all who would laugh to read."

JOHN LONG, 12, 13, 14, Norris Street, Haymarket, London.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4259.

SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

Lectures.

A SUMMER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY

(Open to Men and Women).

Will be held in OXFORD SEPTEMBER 13-24, 1909.

Among the Lecturers will be Profs. S. R. DRIVER, PERCY GARDNER, E. VON DOBSCHÜTZ, J. H. MOULTON, Drs. R. H. CHARLES, H. RASHDALL, J. E. CARPENTER, G. B. GRAY, Rev. GEORGE TYRRELL, Count GOBLET D'ALVIELLA, Mr. R. R. MARETT, and others.

The fee for the Course of about Fifty Lectures is 17.

Applications for details and Tickets to be made to

Rev. A. J. CARLYLE,

University College, Oxford; or

Rev. G. W. THATCHER,

Mansfield College, Oxford.

Secretaries.

Societies.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY

(Incorporated by Royal Charter).

An ORDINARY MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held at 7, SOUTH SQUARE, GRAY'S INN, on THURSDAY, June 17, at 5 P.M., when the Alexander Prize Essay on 'The Social and Economic Condition of the Unfree Classes in England in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries' will be read by Miss N. NEILD.

H. E. MALDEN, Hon. Sec.

THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—The CON-

CLUDING MEETING of the SESSION will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, on WEDNESDAY, June 16, at 8 P.M., when a Paper, by Col. SHAKESPEAR, entitled 'Folk-Tales of the Lusatian and Allied Clans,' will be read and illustrated by Lantern Slides.

F. A. MILNE, Secretary.

11, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.,

June 7, 1909.

Exhibitions.

THE MEDICI SOCIETY'S SUMMER

EXHIBITION of COLOURED REPRODUCTIONS after the Old Italian, Flemish, German, English, and French Masters, is now OPEN DAILY, from 10 to 6, Saturdays 10 to 2, at 38, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W. Admission free.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall, S.W.

The 96th Exhibition of Pictures now open

SELECTED WORKS BY

M. MARIS.

H. HARPIGNIES.

J. ISRAELS.

L. LHERMITTE.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S

SPRING EXHIBITION of PORTRAITS and LANDSCAPES by EARLY BRITISH and FOREIGN MASTERS is NOW OPEN. SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King Street, St. James's.

Educational.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION will be held on JUNE 23, 24, and 25 to FILL UP NOT LESS THAN SEVEN RESIDENTIAL and TWO NON-RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS and also some EXHIBITIONS. For particulars apply by letter to THE BURSAR, Little Dean's Yard, S.W.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

Fraulein BLUTH, Kapellenstr. 58, Wiesbaden, late of St. George's High School, Edinburgh, and Fraulein L. BLUTH, late of St. Elphin's Clergy Daughter School, Warrington. RECEIVE a LIMITED NUMBER of GIRLS for BOARD and EDUCATION. Good Music. Commodious House, with every modern comfort, latest Sanitary Arrangements, and large Garden. Terms 90l. Highest references to Parents of former Pupils: Mrs. Turner, 1, College Gardens, Dulwich Village, London, S.E.; Dr. J. Ritchie, 22, Charlotte Square, Edinburgh; G. Paul, Esq., Friarton Grove, Dundee; and others.

Fraulein Bluth will be in London, Edinburgh, and Dundee in June for personal interviews with Parents.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.

Preparation for Universities and Professions.

Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

EDUCATION (choice of Schools and Tutors

Gratis). Prospectuses of English and Continental Schools, and of successful Army, Civil Service, and University Tutors, sent (free of charge) on receipt of requirements by GRIFFITHS, SMITH, POWELL & SMITH, School Agents (established 1833), 34, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to

MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

Situations Vacant.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL AND COLLEGE.—Applications are invited for the Post of DEMONSTRATOR OF BIOLOGY. Particulars of duties and emoluments may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom ten copies of Application and of not more than three recent Testimonials should be sent before JUNE 17 NEXT.

May 27, 1909.

T. W. SHORE, Dean.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(University of London),

YORK PLACE, LONDON, W.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in FRENCH who will be Head of the Department. The appointment is open to Men and Women equally, and will take effect at the beginning of the Michaelmas Term.

Applications, with thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 19, to the Secretary, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

ETHEL T. MCKNIGHT, Secretary.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(University of London),

YORK PLACE, LONDON, W.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in LATIN who will be Head of the Department. The appointment is open to Men and Women equally, and will take effect at the beginning of the Michaelmas Term.

Applications, with thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 19 to the Secretary, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

ETHEL T. MCKNIGHT, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY OF SHEFFIELD.

APPOINTMENT OF LECTURER IN LATIN.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER IN LATIN. Salary 160l. per annum.

Applications must be sent in by JULY 1. Further particulars may be obtained from

W. M. GIBBONS, Registrar.

THE UNIVERSITY OF SHEFFIELD.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER IN EDUCATION and MASTER OF METHOD in connexion with the UNIVERSITY TRAINING COLLEGE. Salary 200l. per annum. Applications must reach the undersigned by JUNE 19.

W. M. GIBBONS, Registrar.

May 29, 1909.

HARTLEY UNIVERSITY COLLEGE,

SOUTHAMPTON.

Principal—S. W. RICHARDSON, D.Sc. M.A.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invite applications for the appointment of LECTURER in ENGLISH, vacant by the appointment of Mr. T. S. Sterling, B.A., to a post under the India Education Board.

Commencing Salary 170l. per annum.

Applications, giving particulars of age, training, qualifications, and experience, with copies of three recent Testimonials, must be sent to the Principal on or before June 19, 1909.

Further Particulars may be obtained upon application to THE REGISTRAR.

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

The CURATORS of the TAYLOR INSTITUTION will proceed, in the course of JULY, to the election of a LECTURER in ITALIAN for the Michaelmas Term, 1909. The appointment in the first instance will be for five years, with an annual Stipend of 200l., inclusive of any Fees.—Applications stating age and qualifications, accompanied by Testimonials, should be addressed to THE CURATORS, Taylor Institution, Oxford, on or before SATURDAY, June 26. Twelve copies of the Application and Testimonials should be sent.

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

An ELECTION to the TAYLORIAN PROFESSORSHIP of the ROMANCE LANGUAGES will take place in JULY NEXT. Candidates should send in their applications to THE REGISTRAR OF THE UNIVERSITY, Old Clarendon Building, Oxford, so as to reach him not later than JULY 1. Eight copies of the application, and of any Testimonials submitted, should be sent. The Stipend of the Professorship is 500l. a year.—Particulars as to duties may be obtained from THE REGISTRAR.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF DUDLEY.

DUDLEY DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

SENIOR LECTURER (MAN) WANTED for MIDDLE of SEPTEMBER NEXT. Must possess Degree from some British University and practical and theoretical knowledge of Educational Method. Salary 180l. to 220l. Also JUNIOR LECTURER (MAN) for Mathematics and Science. Salary 150l. to 180l., and JUNIOR LECTURER (WOMAN) for History and French. Salary 120l. to 150l. All should be able to assist in general subjects of Training College Curriculum. Forms of Application (on receipt of a stamped addressed foolscap envelope) may be obtained from the undersigned, and must be returned, with envelope endorsed "Training College," not later than JUNE 28.

Education Offices, Dudley.

J. M. WYNNE,

HOMERTON TRAINING COLLEGE,

CAMBRIDGE.

A LECTURER in FRENCH and ENGLISH will be REQUIRED in SEPTEMBER. Initial Salary according to qualifications and experience. Minimum 100l., Resident.

London B.A. Hons. in English and French, or Modern Language Tripos in these Groups suitable.

Early application to THE PRINCIPAL, at the College.

CITY AND COUNTY BOROUGH OF BELFAST.

MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL INSTITUTE.

The LIBRARY and TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION COMMITTEE invite applications for the following positions:—

LECTURER in COMMERCE. Commencing Salary 160l. per annum.

ART MASTER. Commencing Salary 120l. per annum.

Particulars of the duties and conditions of appointment, together with Forms of Application, may be obtained on applying, either personally or by letter, at the office of the Municipal Technical Institute, Belfast.

Applications on the Special Form provided for the purpose must be lodged with the undersigned, not later than 12 noon on WEDNESDAY, June 16, 1909.

Applications should be accompanied by copies of three recent Testimonials (original Testimonials must not be sent).

Canvassing will be held to disqualify a Candidate.

FRAS C. FORTH Principal

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

ROYAL BELFAST ACADEMICAL INSTITUTION.

The GOVERNORS are prepared to receive applications for the HEAD-MASTERSHIP of the ENGLISH DEPARTMENT.

The Candidate appointed will require to enter upon his duties at SEPTEMBER 1, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by copies of Testimonials, &c., to be lodged with THE SECRETARY not later than MONDAY, JUNE 28, 1909, from whom particulars may be obtained.

ROYAL BELFAST ACADEMICAL INSTITUTION.

The GOVERNORS are prepared to receive applications for the HEAD-MASTERSHIP of the MODERN LANGUAGES DEPARTMENT.

The Candidate appointed will require to enter upon his duties at September 1st, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by copies of Testimonials, &c., to be lodged with the Secretary not later than MONDAY, June 28th, 1909, from whom particulars may be obtained.

WANTED, a HEAD MASTER for KING'S

SCHOOL, LAGOS, SOUTHERN NIGERIA. Salary 600l. a year, rising by annual increments of 25l. to 700l. a year; also free quarters, a free passage to Lagos, and an allowance of 120l. a year payable while the Head Master is on duty in the Colony.

The appointment will be in the first instance for three years' probation. Leave of absence and Pension in accordance with the ordinary regulations of the Colony. Honours Graduate who has some knowledge of School Organization, Mathematics, and Latin, and is Athletic. Age preferably 35 to 40, but no objection to a somewhat younger man.—Applications should be sent, in covers, marked "C. A.," to THE SECRETARY, Board of Education, Whitehall, S.W.

UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS.

LADY WARDENSHIP OF UNIVERSITY HALL.

Applications are invited for the LADY WARDENSHIP of UNIVERSITY HALL, ST. ANDREWS (the Hall of Residence for Women Students of the University of St. Andrews), now vacant.

The Candidate appointed will be required to superintend, and be responsible for, the internal arrangements of the Hall and Overflow Houses occupied as auxiliary to it, including Housekeeping and Supervision of the Grounds, to Superintend the Students in Residence, and conduct all Correspondence relating to the Hall and Students in residence, and will be expected to reside in the Hall.

The Candidate appointed will enter on the duties of the Wardenship as at the date of appointment (about JULY 19, 1909).

The Applications, which should be accompanied by twelve printed or type-written copies of the Letter of Application and relative Testimonials, must be lodged, on or before JUNE 26, 1909, with the undersigned, from whom further information regarding the duties and emoluments of the Wardenship may be obtained. Candidates are particularly requested not to call on the Electors. Due intimation will be given to those selected for interview.

ANDREW BENNETT, Secretary of the University.

The University, St. Andrews, June 1, 1909.

CITY OF LIVERPOOL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

LIVERPOOL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, SHAW STREET.

The COMMITTEE invite applications for a CLASSICAL and HISTORY MASTERSHIP at the above SCHOOL.

High Academic qualifications are essential.

Salary to be at the rate of 180l. per annum.

For further particulars and Forms of Application apply to JAMES G. LEGGE, Director of Education, 14, Sir Thomas Street, Liverpool, with whom applications must be lodged not later than SATURDAY, June 19, 1909.

EDWARD R. PICKMERE,

Clerk to the Local Education Authority.

May 28, 1909.

KENT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

DARTFORD HIGHER EDUCATION SUB-COMMITTEE.

DARTFORD COUNTY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

WANTED, in SEPTEMBER NEXT, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS for the above-named School. Needlework and General Form Subjects necessary. Preference will be given to a candidate of experience holding a University Degree or its equivalent. Initial Salary 100l. to 110l. per annum according to qualifications and experience, with increments in accordance with the Committee's Scale. Further particulars and Forms of Application may be obtained from THE SECRETARY, County School for Girls, Dartford.—Applications must be forwarded, as early a date as possible, to Miss A. M. BRETT, County School for Girls, Dartford. Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.

By Order of the Committee,

FRAS. W. CROOK, Secretary.

Caxton House, Westminster, June 2, 1909.

KENT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

RAMSGATE HIGHER EDUCATION SUB-COMMITTEE.

RAMSGATE COUNTY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

WANTED, in SEPTEMBER NEXT, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS for the above-named School, well qualified in Modern Languages. Residence in France and training or good experience essential. Ability to organize Games and teach some English and Drawing desirable. Initial Salary 100l. to 120l., according to qualifications and experience, with increments in accordance with the Committee's Scale. Further particulars, and Forms of Application, may be obtained from Mr. A. R. FRANKS, Technical Institute, Ramsgate. Applications must be forwarded so as to reach the Head Mistress, Miss A. MERRYMAN, County School for Girls, Ramsgate, not later than JUNE 15. Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.

By Order of the Committee,

FRAS. W. CROOK, Secretary.

Caxton House, Westminster, S.W., June 5, 1909.

THE

AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

MONOCHROME COPIES

By the PERMANENT AUTOTYPE CARBON PROCESS OF PICTURES BY OLD MASTERS from the Principal Collections of Note.

NUMEROUS EXAMPLES OF WORKS BY MODERN ARTISTS.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY'S PROCESSES OF PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTIONS are extensively employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Local Government Board, many of the Learned Societies, and leading Publishers.

Copies of Coins, Seals, Medals, MSS., Drawings, Engravings, Art Objects, Microscopic Works, &c.

For Limited Editions the Autotype Processes of Book Illustrations are cheaper than any existing methods of Block Reproductions, and yield infinitely superior results.

Inquiries are invited from those requiring Book Illustrations of the very highest quality.

SPECIMENS AND ESTIMATES SUBMITTED.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

Open free daily, 10 to 6.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the following appointments.

(i) VISITING TEACHERS in the undermentioned Subjects for the SESSION 1909-10, commencing in SEPTEMBER NEXT. Applications (see below) must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on June 19, 1909. A separate Form must be used for each subject:—

(a) JEWELLERY at L.C.C. SCHOOLS OF ART. Fee 10s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. an attendance of about Three Hours, according to qualifications and experience.

(b) GENERAL ART STUDY at the L.C.C. CLAPHAM SCHOOL OF ART, 6, Edgeley Road, High Street, Clapham, on Two Evenings a Week (probably Monday and Thursday). Fee 10s. 6d. an attendance of about Three Hours.

(c) WOOD CARVING at the L.C.C. NORWOOD TECHNICAL INSTITUTE, Knight's Hill, West Norwood, S.E., on One Evening a Week. Fee 12s. 6d. an attendance of about Three Hours.

(d) FREEHAND AND MODEL DRAWING at the L.C.C. SCHOOL OF BUILDING, Ferndale Road, Brixton, on One Evening a week. Fee 10s. 6d. an attendance of about Three Hours.

(ii) ASSISTANT MISTRESS, specially qualified in Science and Mathematics, at the COUNTY SECONDARY SCHOOL, CHELSEA, to commence work in SEPTEMBER next, at a Salary of 120l. rising by annual increments of 10l., subject to satisfactory service, to 220l. Candidates must possess a University Degree or equivalent qualification. Applications (see below) must be returned not later than June 23, 1909.

Applications should be made on the Official Form, to be obtained from THE EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned by the times specified, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date.

All communications on the subject of the appointments (i) (a), (b), (c), and (d), must be endorsed "T. 1," and of appointment (ii) "H. 4," and a stamped addressed foolscap envelope must be enclosed. Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for employment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.
Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.
June 9, 1909.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

UNDER-LIBRARIAN.

An appointment will be made, during the Michaelmas Term, of an UNDER-LIBRARIAN, to enter upon his duties on DECEMBER 31. Stipend 200l., which may be raised to a maximum of 300l.—Candidates for the post, who must be not less than 25 or more than 40 years of age, should write in the first instance to THE LIBRARIAN, University Library, Cambridge, from whom particulars may be obtained. Formal applications for the appointment must be sent to THE LIBRARIAN not later than THURSDAY, September 30, 1909.

WANTED in SEPTEMBER next, a RESIDENT ASSISTANT MASTER. Good English Mathematics, Latin, and Sports essential. Salary 75l., rising by 10l. per annum, with Board, Lodging, and Laundry.—Apply, THE HEAD MASTER, Dronfield Grammar School, near Sheffield.

PUBLISHER seeks an energetic ASSISTANT, young and capable, with knowledge of the Publishing Trade.—Apply, stating age, experience, Salary, &c., to Box 1597, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Situations Wanted.

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN with best Literary, Architectural and Pecuniary training, Matriculated London University, Probationer Royal Institute British Architects, desires POSITION OF PRIVATE SECRETARY in ENGLAND, Type-writing and Shorthand if desired. Would drive Private Motor. Salary 150l. Good recommendations.—Box 1599, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

SHORTHAND-TYPIST (Expert, Medallist) requires POSITION. Six years' Legal and Commercial experience.—Apply Miss M. P., care of Miss Pepler's Type-Writing Office, 53, New Broad Street, E.C.

TO PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.—ESTIMATING CLERK, who has been with a well-known Publisher for six years, and who previously served his practical apprenticeship in all Branches of a large Printer's, is desirous of a FRESH ENGAGEMENT. Excellent References.—H. W., 81, Farringdon Street, E.C.

Miscellaneous.

OLD-ESTABLISHED MONTHLY MAGAZINE COPYRIGHT TO BE SOLD. Good Advertising revenue.—Address F. S. S., Box 1600, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TO TRAVELLERS AND OTHERS.—WRITER (LADY) would be glad to hear from Gentleman who has travelled extensively and had unique experiences. References exchanged.—TOWN, Box 1598, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 1062, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

REGINALD GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Cantab., undertakes GENEALOGICAL and RESEARCH WORK. Three years' experience in Ulster's Office, Dublin. Highest references. Terms moderate.—3, Chalonier Street, West Kensington.

HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL RESEARCH WORK undertaken. Moderate Terms. Excellent References.—Apply Box 1594, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TRAINING FOR PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK AND INDEXING.

THE SECRETARIAL BUREAU,
52A, CONDUIT STREET, BOND STREET, LONDON, W.
Founded 1895. Telephone: 2426 GERRARD.
MISS PETHERBRIDGE (Nat. Sci. Tripos).

EMPLOYED BY THE INDIA OFFICE AS—Indexer of the East India Company's Records, the new edition of the Imperial Gazetteer of India; Dutch and Portuguese Translator.
The Drapers' Company's Records Catalogued and Arranged.
The Library of the Rt. Hon. W. H. Long M.P., Catalogued and Arranged.

INDEXER OF—The Records of the County Borough of Cardiff; The Warrington Town Records; The Blue Books of the Royal Commissions on: London Traffic, The Supply of Food in Time of War, Motor Cars, Canals and Waterways, Coast Erosion, Shipping Rings; and of the Committees on International Exhibitions, National Guarantees for War Risks of Shipping, Oriental Studies; The Minutes of the Education Committee of the Somerset County Council.

MISS PETHERBRIDGE trains from Three to Six Pupils every year for Private Secretarial and Special Indexing Work. The training is one of Apprenticeship, Pupils starting as Junior Members of the Staff and working up through all the Branches. It is practical, on actual work, each Pupil being individually coached. The training consists of Indexing—which includes Research Work and Precise Writing—Shorthand, Type-Writing, Stenotypy, and Business Training. THE TECHNIQUE OF INDEXING. By MARY PETHERBRIDGE. 2s. 6d. post free.

Authors' Agents.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHESE, 24, Paternoster Row.

Printers.

HAVE YOU A FAMILY PEDIGREE which you would like to have PRINTED? Send it to us and it will be done under Expert Supervision at the lowest rates.—GERRARDS, Ltd. (The Westminster Press), Genealogical Printers, 411A, Harrow Road, London, W.

Type-Writers, &c.

TYPE-WRITING, 8d. per 1,000. MSS. intelligently, accurately, and promptly Typed. Special Terms for Novels, long MSS., &c. Satisfaction guaranteed. Specially recommended by Clients. Testimonials. References.—Miss LANGRIDGE, 19, Beauchamp Road, Bishopston, Bristol.

AUTHORS' MSS. TYPED from 6d. 1,000 words. Scientific from 9d. Accuracy guaranteed. Specimens sent.—Miss HABESHON, L.L.A. (St. Andrews), Hons. Science and Language, 101, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

TYPE-WRITING 9d. per 1,000 words; Carbons 3d. French and German Type-writing 1s. per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3s. 100 Copies (quarto), 15s. per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHORS' MSS. at 10d. per 1,000 words, inclusive. First-class Work only.—CHAS. KINSHOTT, 23, Castle Street, Cardiff.

TYPE-WRITING.—Intelligent, careful work; experienced in Medical and Technical Terms. References to well-known Authors if desired. MSS. 10d. 1,000 words. Prompt delivery.—Miss JOLLY, 43, Paddington Street, Baker Street, W.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

Catalogues.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner, Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated Books. Post free, Sixpence.—W.M. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

No. 365.

JUNE SUPPLEMENT TO GLAISHER CATALOGUE

Of Popular and Attractive Books at Cheap Remainder Prices.

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LIMITED,

Remainder and Discount Booksellers,

265, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON (and at 14, George Street, Croydon).
The Books are on view at both Addresses.

MAGGS BROS.,

109, Strand, London, W.C.

DEALERS IN RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS
PRINTS, AND AUTOGRAPHS.

CATALOGUES sent post free to all parts of the World

Export Orders Solicited.

Telegraphic and Cable Address: "Bibliolite, London."
Telephone: "Gerrard 4664."

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols., 2l. 10s.; Trigg's Art Garden Design, Italy, 3½ Guineas, for 21s.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols., 3l. 3s.

BOOKS in all Classes of Literature BOUGHT and SOLD. SECOND-HAND CATALOGUE, just published, sent post free.—HAROLD BROWN, Bookeller, 79A, Tottenham Court Road, W.

Sales by Auction.

IRELAND.

PALMERSTOWN HOUSE, STRAFFAN, CO. KILDARE.

A most interesting COLLECTION of OLD CHINA and POTTERY—fine Coloured Mezzotint and Line Engravings—Bronzes—Decorative Furniture—Old Bristol and other English Glass—Oil Paintings—Old French Fans—and Curios; also a very important Collection of Miniatures, a short illustrated notice of which appears in the Connoisseur of April last.

MESSRS. BENNETT & SON respectfully give notice that, acting under instructions from the Right Hon. the EARL OF MAYO, K.P. P.C. D.L., they will SELL by AUCTION, in the Mansion, as above, on WEDNESDAY, June 23, the above-mentioned valuable Fine-Art Property. The Old China includes Specimens of Worcester, Derby, Bristol, Bow, Chelsea, Coalport, and other English Factories—Dresden, Sevres, Vienna, Chinese, Japanese, and other Continental Porcelain—a few fine Pieces of Salt Glaze, Jackfield, Fulham, Wedgwood, Leeds, Liverpool, and Staffordshire Ware. The Prints include many fine Portraits and Fancy Subjects in Mezzotint—rare Coloured Sporting Prints. The Miniatures include fine Specimens of Zincke, C. Boit, J. Lee, H. Bone, D. B. Murphy, W. Essex, S. Cooper, Ozias Murphy, N. Dixon, G. Englehart, George Chinnery, and others.

Catalogues ready for distribution one week prior to Sale.
BENNETT & SON, Auctioneers and Valuers.
6, Upper Ormond Quay, Dublin.

The Library of the late Rev. Dr. HASLEWOOD, removed from Chislet Vicarage, Canterbury, and other Properties.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 17, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising Topographical and Genealogical Works—Sets of the Archeologia Cantiana, 28 vols., Sussex Archaeological Collections, 52 vols., and Suffolk Institute of Archaeology, 13 vols.—Howard and Crisp's Visitations, 15 vols.—Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica, 18 vols.—The Genealogist, with Cokayne's Complete Peerage, 37 vols., and Baronage, 5 vols.—Standard Books in Theology and Classical Literature, &c.; the LIBRARY of the late W. R. FISHER, Esq., removed from Ealing (by order of the Executors), including Works in Ornithology and Natural History—an interesting copy of Yarrell's British Birds, with Original Water-Colour Drawings of Eggs by W. R. Fisher—Guillim's Heraldry, Best Edition—Romefield's Norfolk, 11 vols.—Books relating to Yarmouth—Dibdin's Bibliographical Decameron, 3 vols., &c.—to which are added OTHER PROPERTIES, comprising Books in Old English Literature and a few MSS.—Chauncy's Hertfordshire, Original Edition—The Rowfant Library Catalogue—Grolier Club Publications—The Border Edition of Scott, 48 vols.—First Editions and Standard Works in General Literature—Prints and Engravings, Autograph Letters, &c.
To be viewed and Catalogues had.

An extensive Collection of English and Foreign Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at the END of JUNE, an extensive COLLECTION of ENGLISH and FOREIGN BOOKS, including Gould's Birds of Asia, 7 vols., Birds of Europe, 5 vols., and Mammals of Australia, 3 vols., Morocco extra—Hume's Stray Feathers, 12 vols., and other Books on Ornithology and Natural History, some extra-illustrated—Hutt's Library Catalogue, 5 vols.—Works in Classical Literature, History, and Philosophy, many in French and German.
Catalogues are preparing.

The Library collected by Dr. RICHARD WATSON, Bishop of Llandaff, during the later years of the Eighteenth Century, and now removed from Calgarth Park, Westmoreland.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., EARLY IN JULY, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising Topographical Antiquarian Books—Works on English Literature and History—an extensive Collection of Historical, Political, and Economic Tracts and Pamphlets—Early Bibles—curious Books on Alchemy, Chemistry, and Mathematics, &c.

Catalogues in preparation.

The valuable Collection of Japanese Colour Prints the Property of JOHN STEWART HAPPER, Esq., of New York City, U.S.A.

SECOND AND FINAL PORTION.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 14, and Four Following Days at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable COLLECTION of JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS the Property of JOHN STEWART HAPPER, Esq., of New York City, U.S.A.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had; illustrated copies, 5s. each.

Coins and War Medals.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, June 18, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of ENGLISH AND FOREIGN WAR MEDALS, AND DECORATIONS, the Property of a COLLECTOR; A small Collection of ENGLISH AND IRISH SIEGE PIECES, &c., the Property of a GENTLEMAN, and other Private Properties—Coin Cabinets, and Numismatic Books.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Engravings and Drawings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 21, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS AND DRAWINGS comprising English and Colonial Topographical Views, Mezzotint Portraits, Fancy Subjects, Modern Etchings, Old Sporting Prints, &c., and original Water-Colour Drawings, &c., by Romney, David Cox, Copley Fielding, Paul Sandby, Rowlandson, Bunbury, Harding, Prout, Ryland, Laurence Housman, Wild, Birket Foster, McWhirter, and others.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Rashleigh Collection of Coins.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 21, and Four Following Days, and on MONDAY, June 28, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the RASHLEIGH COLLECTION OF COINS, the Property of EVELYN W. RASHLEIGH, Esq., Stoketon, Saltash, Cornwall.

May be viewed two days prior. Illustrated Catalogues may be had, price 2s. 6d. each.

A Selected Portion of the Library of Col. COTES.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, June 25, at 1 o'clock precisely, Valuable OLD BOOKS, selected from the LIBRARY of Col. COTES, of Pitchford Hall, Salop, comprising chiefly Rare English Works of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries—First Editions of Classic English Poets and Dramatists, including Addison, Dryden, Beaumont and Fletcher, Cowley, Cleveland, Cartwright, D'Avenant, Milton, Pope, Waller, Warner, Wycherley, &c.—First Midsummer Night's Dream, and the Fourth Shakespeare Folio—the First Sarum Missal printed in England—fine Specimens of Binding by Le Gascon, Grollier, and Mearne—Works relating to America, Tracts, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 17, and Following Day, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including a SELECTION from the LIBRARY of the late Prebendary MEAD, removed from Balcombe; the LIBRARY of the late Prof. OGER, removed from Kensington, and other Properties (by order of Executors), comprising Standard Works in all Branches of Literature, valuable First Editions—Books with Coloured Plates, by the Cruikshanks and Rowlandson—a fine copy of Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery with Proof Impressions—Martial Achievements—a Collection of Works relating to the Fine Arts and Architecture—Dickens's Tale of Two Cities, in the Original Parts, an immaculate copy—the Set of Original Water-Colour Drawings by Stothard for Pickering's Edition of Walton and Cotton's Angler—Constable's Landscape Scenery in the Original Parts—Rowlandson's Oxford and Cambridge Views, coloured—Lyett's Views in Australia in the Original, 13 parts, Coloured Copy—Angar's South Australia, Coloured Plates—Short's Engraved Views of Quebec—Engravings—Autograph Letters, &c.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, June 14, the COLLECTION of OLD ENGLISH FURNITURE of H. P. DEAN, Esq.

On TUESDAY, June 15, and Two Following Days, a PORTION of the valuable LIBRARY of BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS formed during the early part of the last Century by HENRY B. H. BEAUFOY, Esq., and now sold by order of the Beaufoy Trustees on the removal of the remaining portion of the Library to Coombe House, Wilts.

On WEDNESDAY, June 16, OLD NANKIN PORCELAIN, the Property of FRITS HARTVIGSON, Esq., and Old English Furniture from various sources.

On FRIDAY, June 18, the BEAUFOY COLLECTION of COINS.

On FRIDAY, June 18, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS, the Property of the late JOHN HICK, Esq., and the Property of a GENTLEMAN.

On THURSDAY, June 24, and FRIDAY, June 25, the important COLLECTION of MODERN PICTURES and WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS of the late HOLBROOK GASKELL, Esq.

For Magazines, &c., see p. 714.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

SCENES AND PORTRAITS.

By FREDERIC MANNING,

Author of Vigil of Brunhild.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is excellent work of a rare kind, and will leaven a large lump of current literature."—Times.

"They have a curious originality, and though fantastic in the extreme, always singularly alert and attractive. They will be reclaimed because they contain much that is fresh, and unexpected, and stimulating."—Observer.

NEW NOVEL BY DOROTHY V. HORACE SMITH.

FRANK BURNET.

By the Author of 'Miss Mona.' 6s.

The scene is laid in an English Midland village. The interest centres about the vicarage, manor, and forge. The chief characters are Frank Burnet, the Vicar's son, and Wattie, the blacksmith's boy. The heroine is a type of woman fortunately less rare in actual life than in modern fiction. All three characters are essentially English. It is a present-day tale, dealing with the fundamental questions of life, love, and happiness.

LUCRETIVUS: Epicurean & Poet

Completing Volume. By JOHN MASSON, LL.D.
Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

A short supplementary volume was promised in Dr. Masson's book on Lucretius, published last year. It will appear next week, and deals with such subjects as the Borgian life of Lucretius, the relation of Lucretius's atom to the Daltonian atom and to the electron, the origin of Leucippus's atomic theory from earlier speculations, the central Epicurean doctrine of atomic declination, criticising the presentment of it by Guyau and Giussani, the evolution of the Epicurean conception of pleasure from that of the Cyrenaic school; also with the revival of Epicureanism by Gassendi, and other questions.

THE LIFE OF MAJOR-GENERAL SIR CHARLES W. WILSON, ROYAL ENGINEERS.

By Col. Sir CHARLES M. WATSON, K.C.M.G.
C.B., late Royal Engineers. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

THE LIFE OF MAJOR-GENERAL SIR JOHN ARDAGH.

By his Wife, SUSAN, COUNTESS OF MALMESBURY (Lady Ardagh). With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"Such a book as this is a valuable contribution to nineteenth-century history, and it is more than that—it is a profoundly impressive object-lesson in the triumph of character."—Daily Mail.

"His record is certainly one of the most remarkable in the annals of the military and diplomatic history of our generation."—Globe.

AN EGYPTIAN OASIS.

An Account of the Oasis of Kharga in the Libyan Desert. By H. J. LEWELLYN BEADNELL, late of the Egyptian Survey Department, &c. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ELLEN GLASGOW'S NEW NOVEL.

THE ROMANCE OF A PLAIN MAN.

By the Author of 'The Battle Ground,' 'The Deliverance,' &c., 6s.

"The book is one on which the authoress may be warmly congratulated. It has many excellences, charm, sweetness, atmosphere, artistic restraint, and, not least, a delicious, all-pervading humour."—Daily Chronicle.

"An uncommonly excellent tale.....On closing the book the reader experiences a feeling of regret akin to that one experienced on parting from old friends."—Planet.

NOTES FROM A PAINTER'S LIFE.

Including the Founding of Two Galleries.

By C. E. HALLÉ.

With Illustrations. Square demy 8vo, 6s. net.

"There are a great many things in the book which tempt to quotation. The reader must get it to see for himself. Mr. Hallé's 'Notes' shine out. They are full of life, humour, and varied interest."—Evening Standard.

GIUSEPPE BARETTI.

With an Account of his Literary Friendships and Feuds in Italy and in England in the Days of Dr. Johnson.

By LACY COLLISON-MORLEY.

With an Introduction by the late

F. MARION CRAWFORD.

With Photogravure Portrait. Demy 8vo,

10s. 6d. net.

RASPLATA (The Reckoning).

By Commander VLADIMIR SEMENOFF, Imperial Russian Navy. His Diary during the Blockade of Port Arthur and the Voyage of the Fleets under Admiral Rojdestvensky. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready next week.]

NELSON, AND OTHER NAVAL STUDIES.

By JAMES R. THURSFIELD, Joint Author of 'The Navy and the Nation.' With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

Contents. — I. Nelson. II. Trafalgar and the Nelson Touch. III. Duncan. IV. Paul Jones. V. The Dogger Bank and its Lesson. VI. The Higher Policy of Defence. VII. The Strategy of Position. VIII. The Attack and Defence of Commerce.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

KUROPATKIN'S REVELATIONS.

Suppressed by the Russian Government, entitled THE RUSSIAN ARMY AND THE JAPANESE WAR. Illustrations. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 28s. net.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

MACMILLAN'S LIST.

Oxford Lectures on Poetry.

By A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D., formerly Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.
COMPLETE IN 1 VOL.

The Golden Treasury

of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language.

Selected and Arranged by F. T. PALGRAVE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

1909 ISSUE NOW READY.

The Statesman's Year-Book.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1909. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

Greek Architecture.

By ALLAN MARQUAND, Ph.D. L.H.D., Professor of Art and Archaeology in Princeton University. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. net.

[Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities.]

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

THE WHITE SISTER.

A Story of Rome.

By the late F. MARION CRAWFORD.

G E R V A S E.

By MABEL DEARMER,
Author of 'The Alien Sisters,' &c.

NEW BOOK BY THE WRITER OF
'CONFESSION MEDICI.'

Faith and Works of Christian Science.

Extra crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

The Psychology of Thinking.

By IRVING ELGAR MILLER, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

Robert Y. Hayne and his Times.

By THEODORE D. JERVEY. Illustrated. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

Misery and its Causes.

By Professor EDWARD T. DEVINE,
Ph.D. LL.D. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

MACMILLAN'S EDITIONS OF SHAKESPEARE.

THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKESPEARE. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A. LL.D. 9 vols. 8vo, 10s. 6d. each.

THE EVERSLEY SHAKESPEARE. In 10 vols. With Short Introductions and Foot-notes by Prof. C. H. HERFORD. Globe 8vo, 4s. net each vol. The Plays may also be had in separate volumes, cloth, 1s. each; roan, gilt tops, 2s. each.

THE GLOBE SHAKESPEARE. Edited by W. G. CLARK and W. ALDIS WRIGHT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.; limp leather, gilt edges, 5s. net.

THE VICTORIA SHAKESPEARE. In 3 vols. Vol. I. COMEDIES. Vol. II. HISTORIES. Vol. III. TRAGEDIES. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

SHAKESPEARE'S SONGS AND SONNETS. Edited by F. T. PALGRAVE. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Golden Treasury Series.]

SHAKESPEARE. By WALTER RALEIGH. Globe 8vo, 4s. net. [Eversley Series.]

LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE. By WALTER RALEIGH. Crown 8vo, 2s. net. [English Men of Letters.]

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s LIST.

Memoir of George Howard Wilkinson, Bishop of St. Andrews. By ARTHUR JAMES MASON, D.D. With Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 28s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

"It only remains to thank Dr. Mason very heartily for the book he has given us."—Guardian.

"Dr. Mason deserves to be praised for his admirable work. The narrative is always clear and never dull, and he allows the man of the book to reveal himself."—Athenæum.

The Gospel and Human Needs.

Being the Hulsean Lectures for 1908-9. With Additions. By JOHN NEVILLE FIGGIS, Litt.D., of the Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

"A distinct and interesting contribution to modern Christian apologetic."—Athenæum.

A History of the Church of England. By the Rev. M. W. PATTERSON, Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Oxford, Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Exeter. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

"There ought to be a great chance for such a book as this.... The author is an Oxford tutor, who should know the way in which young students need to have the facts put before them, and how they should be taught to deal with the facts when they are once marshalled."—Outlook.

THE ANGLICAN CHURCH HANDBOOKS.

Edited by the Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, D.D., Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford.

Comparative Religion. By the Rev. W. ST. CLAIR TISDALL, D.D. Crown 8vo, 1s. net. (Inland postage 2d.)

The Sermon of the Sea and other

Studies. By the Rev. ROBERT KANE, S.J. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

These Studies, by a well-known Jesuit preacher, are an attempt at the expression of the great thoughts which come to all who listen reverently to Nature and Nature's God.

Cloister to Court.

Scenes from the Life of Charlotte of Bourbon, Abbess of Jouarre, Princess of Orange. By FRANCES M. COTTON-WALKER. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. (Inland postage 4d.)

"The book does not contain a dull page throughout. It teems with incident and picturesque narrative. In questions of historic detail it is thoroughly accurate."—Church Gazette.

The Annual Register: a Review

of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1908. 8vo, 18s. (Inland postage 5d.)

* * * Volumes of 'The Annual Register' for the years 1863-1907 can still be had, price 18s. each.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Industrial Efficiency: a Comparative Study of Industrial Life in England, Germany, and America. By ARTHUR SHADWELL, M.D. Crown 8vo, 6s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

"This is, perhaps, the most valuable and suggestive contribution to the burning question of international competition in industry that has yet been written."—Chamber of Commerce Journal.

Human Economics.

Books I. and II. Natural Economy and Cosmopolitan Economy. By ARTHUR H. GIBSON, F.C.A. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

Hydraulic Tables and Diagrams for Practical Engineers. By Capt. A. ff. GARRETT, R.E., Executive Engineer, Indian Public Works Department. 15s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

Railroad Promotion and Capitalization in the United States. By FREDERICK A. CLEVELAND, Ph.D., Author of 'The Bank and the Treasury,' and FRED W. POWELL, A.M. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Oxford University Press.

COMPLETION OF THE WORK.

THE IMPERIAL GAZETEER OF INDIA.

New Edition. In 26 vols. 8vo, cloth, 5l. net; morocco back, 6l. 6s. net.

The Four Volumes of 'THE INDIAN EMPIRE' separately, 6s. net each in cloth, or 7s. 6d. net with morocco back; the Atlas separately, 15s. net in cloth, or 17s. 6d. net with morocco back.

Each volume contains a Map of India specially prepared for this Edition.

ASOKA, THE BUDDHIST EMPEROR OF INDIA.

By VINCENT A. SMITH. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

SWINBURNE.

A Lecture delivered before the University. By J. W. MACKAIL. 8vo, 1s. net.

ORIGINS OF CHRISTIANITY.

By the late C. BIGG. Edited by T. B. STRONG. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

PLATO'S DOCTRINE OF IDEAS.

By J. A. STEWART. 8vo, 6s. net.

THE ELEMENTS OF NON- EUCLIDEAN GEOMETRY.

By J. L. COOLIDGE. 8vo, 15s. net. [Immediately.]

THE BRITISH ACADEMY. MILTON TERCENTENARY PAPERS.

NOW READY.

LINES BY GEORGE MEREDITH; ORATION by A. W. WARD; SUMMARY OF ADDRESS ON MILTON AND MUSIC, by Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE.

SAMSON AGONISTES AND THE HELLENIC DRAMA, by the late Sir R. C. JEBB.

MILTON AS SCHOOLBOY AND SCHOOLMASTER, by A. F. LEACH.

MILTON IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY (1701-50), by E. DOWDEN.

MILTON AS AN HISTORIAN, by C. H. FIRTH.

MILTON'S FAME ON THE CONTINENT, by J. G. ROBINSON.

A CONSIDERATION OF MACAULAY'S COMPARISON OF DANTE AND MILTON, by W. J. COURTHOPE.

The above seven British Academy Pamphlets on Milton have now been issued together in a Portfolio, price 5s. net. The Portfolio can be obtained for 6d. net by those who already possess the Papers.

Any of the Addresses may be obtained separately, price 1s. net.

A VINDICATION OF WARREN HASTINGS.

By G. W. HASTINGS. 8vo, 6s. net.

THE COPTIC (SAHIDIC) VERSION OF CERTAIN BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT FROM A PAPYRUS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Edited by Sir HERBERT THOMPSON. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUE (160 pages) post free on application.

London: HENRY FROWDE,
Oxford University Press, Amen Corner, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE LIFE OF MAJOR-GENERAL SIR JOHN ARDAGH	693
THE FRONTIERS OF BALUCHISTAN	694
SIR GEORGE MACKENZIE	695
RAMBLES IN SUSSEX	696
NEW NOVELS (The Red Saint; Henry in Search of a Wife; The Shuttles of the Loom; Where Billows Roll; The Wooden Horse; As It Happened; Their Oxford Year)	696-697
FOLK-LORE	697
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (The Annual Register; The Statesman's Year-Book; Mountaineering in the Land of the Midnight Sun; Around Afghanistan; Cornish Characters and Strange Events; Sir Robert Hart; Apollonius of Tyana)	699-701
FRENCH AND ENGLISH LITERARY SOCIETY; RE-MAINDERING	702
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	702
LITERARY GOSSIP	703
SCIENCE—DARWIN AND MODERN SCIENCE; THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	704-706
FINE ARTS—THREE BOOKS ON JERUSALEM; MODERN FRENCH AND DUTCH PAINTING AT THE FRENCH GALLERY; FRENCH AND DUTCH MASTERS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY; PATERSON'S GALLERY; THE NATIONAL GALLERY; THE CHAUCHARD LEGACY TO THE LOUVRE; RECENT DISCOVERIES AT COLOGNE; SALES; GOSSIP	706-709
MUSIC—DELIUS'S 'MASS OF LIFE' AND STANFORD'S 'ODE TO DISCORD'; PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF WAGNER; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	709-710
DRAMA—ADMIRAL GUINEA; VALE OF CONTENT; THE WOMAN IN THE CASE; A MERRY DEVIL; THE PLAYBOY OF THE WESTERN WORLD; DEVOR-GILLA; FURNESS'S VARIORUM 'RICHARD III.'	710-712
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	712

LITERATURE

The Life of Major-General Sir John Ardagh.

By his Wife, Susan, Countess of Malmesbury. With Portraits and Illustrations by Sir John Ardagh. (John Murray.)

IN reading this exhilarating record of a splendidly strenuous life we are chiefly struck by the variety of opportunity which opens out before a soldier who adopts the more intellectual and scientific lines of his profession. The fighting man is always the popular hero, and deservedly so: no one, certainly, in these days, can afford to depreciate the golden gift of courage. But battles are the purple patches of a soldier's life, the rare exceptions which break the long monotony of barracks.

Sir John Ardagh had these brief delights; he was at Teb, Tamai, and Ginnis—the last perhaps the most brilliant and important of all the fights with the Sudanis—where he narrowly escaped death. He was standing with General Grenfell when a bullet passed through his helmet, grazing his ear, and leaving him slightly deaf ever afterwards. Col. Ardagh's eyeglass was hanging down his back, in the way that eyeglasses do in moments of crisis, and his first business was to recover it; and when, after several desperate attempts, this was accomplished, he calmly fixed it in his eye, put his finger tentatively through the bullet-hole in his helmet, and then returned to observations through his field-glass. His boyish training would probably have fitted him for the dashing cavalry officer of earlier fiction; for his father, a sporting Irish parson of the county Waterford, kept his pack of hounds, in friendly co-operation with the parish priest, and young Ardagh acted as whip; he must have been a proud lad when the incomparable Whyte-Melville said of him: "That young fellow will go far. He rides straight and speaks to nobody."

He did go far, and he continued all his life to talk as little as he could, but he did not get on by riding. Fighting was a mere accident in his career. He happened to be placed in command of the Royal Engineers during the occupation of Alexandria in 1882, when "the tower and enceinte were strongly guarded by Capt. [Sir John] Fisher and Lord Charles Beresford"; and his duties in the army of occupation took him into the Eastern Sudan during the stirring times of Osman Digna's assaults. He was also A.A. and Q.M.G. and senior staff officer under Stephenson in the Nile expedition of 1885; but in Wolseley's relief expedition he had been kept back at Cairo to command the base—a post demanding arduous labour, and not the less difficult because he had consistently urged the Suakin-Berber route, for the relief first of the Sudan garrisons, and afterwards of Gordon himself, against the judgment of Lord Wolseley and the Government. It is, of course, unnecessary to say that when once the unfortunate decision was made Ardagh loyally and energetically did his utmost to promote success. "My present occupation," he wrote,

"is Commandant of the Base for the Nile Expedition. It is rather a delicate one in many ways, inasmuch as the arrival of Lord Wolseley and the flood of officers he brought out with him (to the disjuncting of all our noses here) produced a certain amount of bitterness between the old garrison and the new arrivals. I am the agent here for Lord Wolseley, and a sort of buffer between the Nile Expedition and the Army of Occupation; but being on the best of terms with both Lord Wolseley and Sir Frederick Stephenson, everything goes on with perfect smoothness. Possibly that may have been the reason why I was selected for this delicate and onerous post. They telegraph to me from everywhere up the Nile for every conceivable want: battalions, blankets, coals, coffins, goggles, groceries, locomotives, robes of honour, camels, and heaven knows what besides."

No doubt this appointment was due to that rare combination of judgment, firmness, and tact which pre-eminently characterized Ardagh. He had acquired his qualities partly by self-discipline, for as a boy he had been disputatious and quick-tempered. But self-repression and contact with the world had moulded him into the diplomatist and statesman. A man who goes into Woolwich second and comes out first, like the man who comes out first from the Royal Naval College, is of course marked for special employment, and naturally finds his work largely in those branches of his profession which are now classified as the Intelligence Department. After the usual engineer's duties, Ardagh was employed by the Foreign Office as early as 1869, before he was thirty years old, upon Continental observations and reports, which, like much of his most serious work, were confidential, and therefore unsuited for publication. He was in Paris in March, 1871, and saw the German troops march in, and out, and enjoyed the privilege of being shown by Holstein the preliminaries of peace lying on the table at Versailles with the ink of the signatures still wet. In 1876 he was on special service at the head-quarters of the Turkish army during the war with Servia, and made a remarkably rapid survey for fortified lines round Constantinople in case of need. He was with Sir Lintorn Simmons as military delegate on the Special Embassy to the Congress of Berlin, and an attaché remarked about that feverish assembly that "the only one who will keep calm and collected will be Capt. Ardagh, R.E. He will have plenty of cold water to check the warmth of the Russian military asseverations and protestations; but not a drop will either Eagle or Bear be able to pump out of him against his will."

He was on the Bulgarian Boundary Commission in 1878-9, and the Turco-Greek Boundary Commission in 1881, when Lord Dufferin, then Ambassador at the Porte, wrote officially to the Foreign Secretary that

"the labour and heat of the day has almost exclusively fallen upon his [Major Ardagh's] shoulders. The surveys have been altogether his work; from first to last he has exhibited an amount of conscientious energy and zeal which is deserving of the greatest credit; in every case where there has occurred any difference of opinion between himself and the other members of the Commission I have no hesitation in saying that Major Ardagh had the right upon his side, and throughout the entire proceedings he has shown great soundness of judgment."

Both Commissions involved very hard work and much exposure, and the later one was complicated by the attentions of brigands, who set a heavy ransom upon Ardagh's expected capture, and by the suspicions of the Turkish Commissioners, who deeply distrusted plane-tables, theodolites, and survey-marks. But Ardagh delighted in work, the harder the better:—

"Ardagh, or Ardour, as we have named him, is the most wonderful man I have ever met. He works about nineteen hours a day himself, and never tires, taking for granted that every one else can work at least twelve hours a day out of doors in a hot sun and feel none the worse for it. The only relaxations he ever allows himself are paying official visits (when he likes to be accompanied by the whole of his staff) and making sketches in water colours."

The sketches are well represented in this volume, but the encomiast forgot to mention that another "relaxation" of Ardagh's—not unknown among the most brilliant officers of the Royal Engineers, and to be expected in a favourite pupil of Sylvester's—was working out abstruse problems in higher mathematics. The same untiring energy and faultless tact which won him the admiration of Boundary Commissioners made him a perfect private secretary to Lord Lansdowne when Viceroy of India in 1888-94. Probably no more exacting or crucial subordinate post exists, and Ardagh came through the ordeal triumphantly, though we can believe that his grave taciturnity was somewhat alarming to the ceaseless stream of applicants at Government House. His idea of rest was to be in an express train for hours, "unmolested," as he used to put it, by the well-meant efforts of his friends to make him take 'exercise'—a thing he hated," like many another brain-worker.

Ardagh had been connected with the Intelligence Department as early as 1875, but in 1896, whilst busily engaged upon one of the various reorganizations of the War Office, he was appointed to the chief post of Director of Military Intelligence at Head-quarters. No man probably could be better qualified. To be "the brains of the army," as the phrase runs, demands exceptional gifts and acquirements. The true Intelligence officer must be not only a man of scientific attainments, able to survey and sketch plans, and therefore a mathematician and draughtsman; he must also be an international lawyer, linguist, diplomatist, geographer, statistician—in short, he must know everything. It was his wide attainments, proved in many tests, that procured Ardagh this supremely important post, and gave him his seat at the Hague Conference of 1899. His obligatory absence there was in one way a dangerous loss, for his department missed his guidance in the critical moments before the South African War. The Intelligence people were violently abused by ignorant critics for miscalculations of the enemy's strength; but the subsequent official inquiry showed that Ardagh had been extraordinarily accurate in his estimates, and that he had repeatedly and urgently warned the Government of what they had to expect in the event of war. As Mr. Justice Bigham, himself a member of the Martial Law Commission, wrote: "If in earlier days his warnings and advice had been listened to, we should perhaps have been spared the costly and disastrous war in South Africa." His department, at least, came out of the investigation unscathed.

Lady Malmesbury has written her husband's life with rare discrimination and reticence. Readers who regret that so little is told of his personal life and habits should recollect how intensely distasteful such revelations of his privacy would have been to Sir John Ardagh's reserved nature. Lady Malmesbury was bound to share such a feeling. We wish, however, that she had printed more of the diaries. The extracts dealing with the Germans in Paris and the Bulgarian and Greek Boundary Commissions are vividly interesting, though not written with any effort at literary style. Humour is not conspicuous in Ardagh's writings, nor is wit, which is stranger in a genuine Irishman. There is a lack of "good stories," though we note an amusing anecdote of Pius IX. and Irish Protestants, and some queer scenes of Russian officers' festivities in camp. There is also a dearth of letters. Most of those given are really testimonials. But the book is an admirable record of the work of a great servant of the State, and it should be in the hands of every young soldier.

The Frontiers of Baluchistan. By G. P. Tate. With an Introduction by Col. Sir A. H. McMahon. Illustrated. (Witherby & Co.)

THE chief importance of this work is derived from the fact that it furnishes the first record of two pacific expeditions which in the stress of more sensational matters did not receive the notice they deserved. Reference is made to the joint commission for the delimitation of the frontier between British Baluchistan and Afghanistan, and to the arbitration award with regard to the boundary between Afghanistan and Persia in Seistan. Both these arrangements have contributed to the removal of causes of strife in a region which must sooner or later become of the first importance in the development of the problem (which is as much commercial as political) of the Middle East.

Mr. G. P. Tate, who says in his Preface that he must have been predestined to be a wanderer as his travels began in his infancy, is a member of the staff of that admirable department called "the Indian Surveys." He was attached to the Commission under Capt. (now Sir Henry) McMahon which between 1894 and 1896 demarcated the southern frontier of Afghanistan from Domandi on the east to Malik Siah Kuh on the west; and in 1902 he was nominated chief Survey officer with the mission sent under the same leader to define the limits of authority in Seistan.

The bulk of the book relates to the second experience, the earlier being dismissed in a single chapter. In two preliminary chapters Mr. Tate gives a vivid description of the state of things that formerly prevailed in Mekran when bandits like Azad Khan held the sparse population of these desert tracts in subjection, and plundered with impunity the few caravans that ventured into the region through which has now been established our Nushki-Seistan trade route. The marked change that British influence has produced over the conditions of life here is revealed in a few telling sentences. Ido the Mamasseni, a typical robber, has given up his old ways to become a champion of peace and good government; their former active amusements being no longer practicable, the nomads tell stories round the camp fire which offer a new field of research to the ethnologist. The first basis of an orderly community has been laid in the very spot where less than seventy years ago Forbes and Pattinson were murdered.

The larger and more serious part of the volume relates to Seistan, the royal province of Kai Khasrau, whose descendants still survive, not in regal state, but in penury and obscurity. Although Seistan could hardly be described as a land flowing with milk and honey, it seems most attractive to those who have just left the barren wastes of Mekran. The country is fertile; cultivation is easy; the inhabitants have their home industries, chiefly carpet-making; and the character of the people is pacific and free from prejudice. But this present prosperity is only a shadow of the high civilization and human activity which prevailed in this region before the arrival of the Arab invaders in the eighth century. The Seistanis have a carefully organized system of local self-government, each township being under a Kad Khuda, or mayor. It is curious to learn that outside his residence is placed a large drum which is beaten whenever it is necessary to summon a public meeting. Women enjoy far more liberty in Shia than in Sunni countries, and Seistan has even a Lady Mayor, who discharged her duties so excellently that she received the title of "Lady Virtuous." More familiarly this Persian Suffragette is spoken of as "the masculine woman." The Farsiwan women are generally comely, and are described in attractive terms by the author; but he dwells upon the want of interest in their lives, the absence of any necessity to work hard or continuously, and the addiction of the whole community to the use of opium.

Seistan presents many features of interest to the student of archæology and of nature. It is clear that great discoveries await those who unearth the remains of Kaianian greatness. The works of nature are not concealed, and the extraordinary annual visitation called "the wind of 120 days" is one of them. It used to be declared that it arrived punctually at the end of May, but in 1902 it was six or seven weeks late. Whether punctual or not, it lasts always the prescribed period, and blows always across Seistan from the north-west direction. Speaking of this wind, a native of Seistan said: "The wind of Seistan wears away the walls of our buildings as the whetstone wears away steel"; and Mr. Tate gives at least one instance of the extreme discomfort he suffered from it when sitting inside his tent covered with a sheet. Every time he got up, he shook pounds of dust out of it.

This prolonged gale is not, however, the greatest infliction of Seistan. The flies of the province possess and deserve a far worse reputation. Mr. Tate describes the sufferings of himself and his party from their attacks in one short ride of seven miles. The travellers reached their destination with their hands and the quarters of their camels streaked with blood. It is the practice of the inhabitants to protect their horses picketed in the open with trousers and swaddling bands; but even these precautions are not infallible. While Mr. Tate does not lay on the flies the whole blame for the great animal mortality in Seistan, he adds the significant remark: "There is no doubt they play a very important part in spreading disease by inoculation."

The volume contains many graphic sketches of the different nationalities with whom the writer came in contact—Baluchi camel-men and ex-swashbucklers; Afghan officials and soldiers, the latter described as "a smart set of fellows"; Persian officials and Farsiwan settlers, including the bedraggled descendants of Kai Khasrau; and, last, but not least, the Cossack guard of the Russian Consulate at Nasratabad, the little-known and rarely named capital of Seistan.

In his Introduction Sir Henry McMahon refers to the peculiar fascination a desert exercises on the mind of those who have sojourned in or even only traversed it. The reader of this work will discover that Mr. Tate has turned the spell to profitable account, for his descriptions of men and scenes are vivid, full of local colour, and free alike from prejudice or straining after effect. The excellent photographic plates and maps deserve a special word of commendation.

Sir George Mackenzie, King's Advocate, of Rosehaugh: his Life and Times, 1636 (?)–1691. By Andrew Lang. (Longmans & Co.)

THROUGHOUT the Restoration period of Scottish history, which popular writers represent as a mere carnival of religious strife, it is easy to trace the development of ideas which came to fruition when James VII. had forfeited his crown. Indeed, if we were asked to name the period when the secular temper first prevailed in politics, we should place it as far back as the battle of Dunbar in 1650. Ultra-Presbyterianism had then discredited itself as extravagant and unpatriotic; and the free trade with England, opened, or rather legalized, by Cromwell, gave an impetus to the industrial movement which culminated in the Darien scheme and the Union. The Government of Charles II. was not wholly occupied in supporting an unpopular episcopate. It inaugurated with great vigour what we should now call a policy of tariff reform; and several of its members and supporters held the tolerant opinions which found expression, however imperfect, in the Revolution Settlement. One of these is the subject of this work; and it is curious to find a kinship in charity between the persecuting Lord Advocate and the saintly Bishop of Dunblane. "Seeing all Christians are but pilgrims here," wrote Sir George Mackenzie in his 'Religio Stoici', "I admire that these pilgrims should leave off to journey, and stand skirmishing and fighting with all such as will not travel their road." This is in the spirit, and even in the manner, of Leighton; and heartily would he have approved Sir George's better-known aphorism: "In religion as in heraldry, the simpler the bearing be, it is so much the purer and the ancients."

Mackenzie during his first six years in Parliament was an opponent of the Court; and Mr. Lang seems hardly to appreciate the new temper of Scottish politics when he calls this "perhaps the least interesting and characteristic period of his life." He tells us that the Lords of the Articles were restored, but does not mention the considerable restriction of their power. Instead of assembling merely at the beginning and the close of the session in order to elect this packed Committee and give a formal assent to its Acts, Parliament, after the Restoration, met several times a week, and discussed and even amended measures which the Articles had approved. It is from Mackenzie's 'Memoirs' that we gain our best idea of a House very unlike the old Scottish Estates—a House which was sometimes "overawed," sometimes "gained to a compliance," and in which there were lively debates, narrow majorities, and a "throng of speakers." Mackenzie was associated with the commercial, no less than the constitutional, activities which anticipated the Revolution; and the claim of burghs not royal to a share in the municipal monopoly of foreign commerce, which was admitted by Parliament in 1672, had apparently his personal as well as professional support. It is remarkable that he opposed Lauderdale when that statesman was the hope of humane and upright politicians, and joined him when the last of these had withdrawn—when Kincardine had been dismissed from the Council and Leighton had resigned his see. Mr. Lang supposes that "as a stalwart patriot" he resented the alliance of his associates with Shaftesbury and the English Whigs, and, with more reason, that he was moved to support authority by the astonishing outbreak at this period of field conventicles. Desire of office must surely, however, have been one of his motives; and one recalls another Scottish lawyer who, a century later, was violently attacking Lord North, and within a few months had become his Solicitor-General. But Mackenzie cannot be charged, like Wedderburn, with a complete change of front; for, as the author points out, his opposition to Lauderdale had not "committed him to the cause of the Presbyterians." Questions of trade and finance were, indeed, the chief causes of contention in Parliament; and we find a clerical annalist complaining that in such disputes "the name of religion" was not so much as mentioned.

Mr. Lang is more interested in the repressive Minister than in "the earnest young Liberal member of Parliament"; and the public, which cares more for the bickerings of Scottish history than for its wider issues, will probably agree with him. He is invariably judicious, and has no occasion to apologize for "the partiality of a biographer"; but, without defending Lauderdale's cruelty, he thinks it easier to blame the Government than to suggest what they were to do—with no money and a handful of troops—when "Scotland," in Kirkton's expressive phrase, "broke loose with conventicles." The Western clergy had to be protected against these hordes of armed men; and thirty years earlier a mob of fanatics from this district had captured Edinburgh. We think, however, that Mr. Lang attributes too much to a policy of blood and iron when he says that in Scotland as in Spain, persecution had at least the merit of success—that by such means Catholicism and ultra-Presbyterianism were alike crushed. This seems to us a short-sighted view. If Catholicism had not been moribund at the Reformation, it could not have succumbed so easily to penal laws; and, though Lauderdale succeeded in separating "the vast body of Presbyterians from the irreconcilable Remnant," he merely completed a schism which had been in progress—with other important things—since the battle of Dunbar. But for the excesses and absurdities of Warriston and Guthrie, the King's Advocate, in our opinion, would have persecuted in vain.

Mr. Lang deals fully with the cases in which Mackenzie acted as prosecutor, and finds scope for his ability as a solver of mysteries in several plots. Thorough and illuminating is his account of the Argyll case, 1681; and no one who reads this chapter, which is largely new to history, can doubt that the enmity Argyll had aroused in the Highlands, and not his reluctance to take the Test, was the real cause of his fall. The character of Mackenzie is thus neatly summed up: "The struggle of his life was to keep his official and actual self in separate compartments."

His writings, literary and historical, are ably treated. Attention is directed to "the curious puzzle," apparently insoluble, presented by his 'Memoirs'; and the references to his 'Vindication', as recorded in a good index, will enable the student to make a discriminating use of that tract. Monotony would be broken, and charity preserved, if Mr. Lang would occasionally mention Dalrymple without calling him "the man of Glencoe." A more generous, and no less just epithet, would be "the man of the Union." There was no "Dean of Hamilton." The Ramsay mentioned on p. 169 was minister of Hamilton and Dean of Glasgow. There are three excellent portraits and an engraving of Mackenzie's tomb.

Solid and valuable as this work is, we are by no means delighted with its style. Much of it strikes us as rather the raw materials of biography than the finished product, and there is too much use of parentheses and italics. For example, on p. 180 the author summarizes Mackenzie's argument for the absolute power of Scottish kings; and then, within brackets, comes this breathless sentence, over-running its commas:—

"Act 15 of the first Parliament of Charles II., and other Acts, buttressed by the opinion of Bodin and Blackwoodius, and several others, Charles has the right to do whatever any other king can do, see Barclay, who places his authority on a par with that of the kings of France and Spain."

Occasionally, but too seldom, there are gleams of Mr. Lang's pleasant humour. We read of a tariff reformer, born out of due season, who was "zealous unto slaying"; and here in a flash is the aimless, rain-soaked Pentland Rising: "They walked about the country, getting very wet, and renewing the Covenant."

Rambles in Sussex. By F. G. Brabant. (Methuen & Co.)

WHILE reading Mr. Brabant's book on Sussex we have often wished that he had allowed himself, with his publishers' connivance, two volumes instead of one in which to express himself. He has said much in a small space, but there is a great deal more to be said pertinently, and we feel that he both wants to say it and could say it well. Possibly one volume could have been made over to West, and another to East Sussex; or the division might have been between the forest ridge, its southern spurs, and the Weald on the one hand, and the lower green sand, the South Downs, and the sea plain on the other. Thus much we suggest because in many places our guide shows signs that he would fain linger in some quaint village street or over a fine view, but is bound to hurry on in order to keep his appointment with printers and publishers. If we want more of Mr. Brabant, it is no doubt largely due to the alluring character of the Sussex scenery he has chosen to wander in; but undoubtedly his own qualities as a Rambler contribute generously to our enjoyment.

There is already much on the subject: we are familiar with Lower, Horsfield, the 'Sussex Archaeological Collections,' Mr. Lucas's 'Highways and Byways,' the big 'Victoria History' (2 vols.), and Mr. Brabant's little pocket companion. But though such a volume as this is bound to contain much that has been often said, Mr. Brabant is so obviously a practical wanderer with an enthusiasm for the county that he nowhere offends us with the quality of mere bookishness. His volume necessarily challenges comparison with Mr. Lucas's just mentioned. If in the matter of style Mr. Brabant has not quite the light, poetic, and imaginative touch of his rival, he is somewhat more patient and conscientious, and manages to get more information into his pages. He has not grasped, or perhaps despises, the grammarian's rule as to "and which." His grouping into different rambles of the places of interest is, however, particularly skilful. So far as books are concerned, Mr. Brabant has had an advantage over Mr. Lucas in being able to refer to the two volumes of the 'Victoria History' mentioned above. His plan also is somewhat different, as he deliberately omits items of purely local interest, and includes "only what would be of permanent interest to intelligent travellers, such as the characteristic features of the scenery, the history and architecture of every old building, and the manifold points in which the county touches the general history and literature of England."

Sussex is rich in historical associations, and not less in scenery. There is a variety of landscape combined with a remarkable simplicity in the disposition of scenery. Mr. Brabant, with his usual sanity of view, hits off the facts succinctly:—

"Chalk and sand are the two principal elements in the formation of the scenery of our south-eastern counties. Wherever the soil is mainly clay, the landscape is flat and comparatively uninteresting. But when chalk or sand takes its place, hills at once appear—in the former case, bare, steep-sided downs with swelling outlines and grassy slopes; in the latter, sand-hills, usually covered with thick-growing forest, interspersed with tracts of heathery common. The best scenery is when these two varieties of hills are brought close together, and it is this feature which gives the counties of the Weald (Kent, Sussex, and Surrey) their greatest charm. Sussex owes its attractiveness to two sandy regions and one chalk region."

Mr. Brabant proceeds, for the purposes of his descriptions, first from various southern centres—Chichester, Midhurst, Arundel, Bramber, Brighton, Lewes, Eastbourne, and Hastings. The northern districts he covers by first travelling along the southern forest ridge from Hastings to Horsham (which he uses as a centre for the Wealden country west of it), and then turning eastward again along the main forest ridge to Tunbridge Wells. His pages are adorned with interesting reflections and historical matter, and though he has a liking for legends, he has also a ready pin wherewith to prick bubbles of untrustworthy romance. One of his best qualifications is his knowledge of and enthusiasm for architecture, though in this sphere he seems to us to tend slightly to dogmatism. His taste in churches is almost fastidious, and he has no mercy for bad restorations and "churchwarden work." Happily, when he treats of geology, he gives us a practical sufficiency of information without a disquisition on the order in which weald, and down, and sandy regions were formed. Bird-life interests him, but he is mainly content with the opinions of Mr. A. E. Knox's 'Ornithological Rambles in Sussex,' a book for the reprinting of which he pleads. He is sensitive to the charms of scenery, and his pen is adequate to the description of it. Indeed, from our own experience of a large part of the routes he travels, we know that he is a wideawake and well-informed guide: he is also very companionable. When we add that he appreciates the literature, prose and poetry, ancient and modern, that bears on the county, and has included excellent photographs of typical Sussex subjects, including several Turner pictures, it will be clear that he has provided a pleasant medley.

Mr. Brabant pleads judiciously for the reasonable opening to visitors of art treasures and antiquities; but we wish that he had been moved to devote a few of his pages to a plea for the public rights (which seem to be fast fading into oblivion) in St. Leonard's Forest. Lawsuits have been fought in this connexion, but the public knows little of its position. Private owners have monopolized the frontages to the three main roads through or round this sylvan district, and it is difficult to get through to the thousands of acres of wild land where the visitor may wander and be free to his heart's content. However, Mr. Brabant can hardly be asked to fight their battles for the people of Horsham, who stand at the gate of the forest and are its natural custodians, responsible to the nation for the maintenance of public rights in the home of the fabled dragon.

NEW NOVELS.

The Red Saint. By Warwick Deeping. (Cassell & Co.)

UNDOUBTEDLY Mr. Deeping is the ablest and most picturesque writer of the school that is derived from Mr. Hewlett. He has an individuality which is showing itself, but he has not yet shaken off his master's abruptness of method. It is a difficult matter to write mediæval romance so as to convince, or even to interest readers. At its worst it is "tushery" of the most wearisome sort. At its best it may be a 'Forest Lovers' or a 'Cloister and the Hearth.' Mr. Deeping's heroine, of many sorrows, is an attractive figure; the pictures of the time (that of Henry III.) are vivid and conscientiously reproduced; and the action is full of vigour. The plot is simple, but exceedingly well devised; and the style is good and clean and strong.

Henry in Search of a Wife. By Alphonse Courlander. (Fisher Unwin.)

AN idle and conceited sentimentalist writing in the first person is generally an irritating character, and in this novel he increases the reader's vexation by getting a great deal more than he deserves. Mr. Courlander does scant justice to the piquant idea expressed in his title, and his heroine makes too tame a surrender. Henry Tressingham's Continental travel yields little of value to the story, though many will chuckle over the anecdote of the Swiss couple who, to avoid expense, obstinately refused to sanctify their union by marriage till, in their old age, the pastor of the village where they dwelt offered to marry them for nothing.

The Shuttles of the Loom. By K. M. Edge. (John Murray.)

MISS EDGE (MRS. C. T. CAULFIELD) knows India well, and her description of life in the forests of the Vengaimalais gives an impression of remarkable fidelity. Her hero, John Grange, is a forest officer who has given the best years of his life to the Empire, and a "Government that had selected him as a man of capacity and courage had afterwards neglected him." When he considers that his work is finished, Grange returns to England, and the greater part of the story is concerned with the inevitable disappointments which await him and the development of the sentimental side of his character. This is very well done, but the heroine, with her incomprehensible past and ever self-conscious present, is a less convincing type than the young girl to whom at first Grange is instinctively drawn. The conclusion, which takes us back to the Indian forest, is melancholy, but consistent with Grange's strenuous sense of duty.

Where Billows Roll. By Allen Raine. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THE stories of the late Allen Raine are chiefly remarkable for the charming pictures she gives of Welsh life and scenery, and for her sympathetic interpretation of the peasantry. This last from her pen is a pretty romance of a young Welsh girl whose happiness is nearly destroyed by a death-bed promise which is given by her lover to his father, and is responsible for serious misunderstandings. A crime for which the innocent suffer rescues her from an unhappy marriage; and there is more than a touch of mysticism introduced into the story in the persons of the god-like twins Iolo and Iola. But the sadness which permeates the book is of a gentle kind, and the conclusion is entirely happy.

The Wooden Horse. By Hugh Walpole. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THE Colonial hero who, after an absence of twenty years, returns to the ancestral home to find himself unappreciated by his relations, including his own son, offers scope for originality of treatment. Here Mr. Walpole has succeeded, if he has not altogether resisted the temptation to overdo the situation. The extreme gentility of the Trojans, and their progressive, even radical tendencies where the picturesque village at their feet is concerned, suggest rather a self-made suburban family than a Cornish stock of incalculably ancient lineage and prejudices. The breezy Colonial has every right to be shocked and disappointed; and the manner in which, when his son behaves more like a cad than a Trojan, he seizes the opportunity to assert himself, is ingenious. As a satire of some modern manners, the story has good points, but it is overweighted by the classical allusion in the title.

As It Happened. By Ashton Hilliers. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THIS work has the circumstantiality of the eighteenth-century masters. It combines wealth of incident, variety and originality of character, fine descriptions, and battle-pieces by sea and land. Tom Furley, the gunner turned Quaker, is an historical character. Like most of the other figures, he revolves round that of the orphan heroine, a fine conception. Two old scholars; a good and modest soldier who is a kind of more martial Dobbin; an immodest Irish major who is the villain of the piece; and a strange sectary, the Anointer, make up the cast. Historically the story begins with the mutiny at Madras, and ends with the defence of Gibraltar by Elliott, of whom we see a good deal, with glimpses of Secretary Jenkinson and "old Q." We are not confident in our author as an Indian historian: he follows Wilks and Mill too much; but he is always interesting. The presence of a Highland officer and his uncle gives excuse for two scraps of Gaelic, both wrong. Per contra, the East Anglian dialect of Furley and his mates is excellent.

Their Oxford Year. By Oona H. Ball. Illustrated. (Methuen & Co.)

MRS. BALL writes very pleasantly, if somewhat discursively, about Oxford life, which she evidently knows well from the inside—far too well, in fact, for her lady visitor from across the Atlantic to be altogether convincing when professing to record her first impressions. Homage to the spirit of the past is duly rendered by the clever device of causing the heroine to dip into various quaint authors instinct with the genius loci. Indeed, we venture to prophesy that the Bodleian attendants will be sore put to it to cope with the demand on the part of Mrs. Ball's readers for the inimitable Dr. Robert Plot, or for Barré Charles Roberts, so pathetically short-lived. As for the spirit of the present, that too receives its meed of attention, though we should have thought that a lady who makes fatuous errors about the games she goes to watch, and is evidently rather proud of the fact, belonged rather to the generation of one's maiden aunt. The curtain appropriately falls on Commemoration and a proposal of marriage. If, however, we know the College Don of the shy type—the author prefers them shy—a fervent passage of Browning recited by a match-making Professor with a "beautiful voice" at the critical moment would scarcely incite him to commit himself. That kind of quarry is not to be approached down wind.

FOLK-LORE.

THE second title of The Childhood of Man, by Leo Frobenius (Seeley & Co.), is "a popular account of the lives, customs, and thoughts of the primitive races," and it embodies the conclusions which that authority has reached by long study. It has been admirably translated by Dr. A. H. Keane, who contributes a preface. Besides the illustrations in the text, derived from the author's own collections and other sources, the English edition is embellished by reproductions (from the originals in the British Museum) of some of the drawings made by John White, who was Governor of Virginia in 1587, representing the native Americans of his day, their dwellings, their fishing, and their agriculture, as well as their ceremonial dances.

The author treats his subject under 32 heads, and in doing so discards the classifications which depend upon physical anthropology, and deals only with the product of man's inventive faculties. His first sensation is that of amazement at the diversity of independent phenomena. In personal adornment each of many hundred tribes works out its own methods according to its own ideas. Tattooing, for example, which was preceded by body painting, is practised in many different ways and upon various portions of the body. The mutilations upon entry into manhood and other physical deformations differ widely among different peoples. M. Frobenius, indeed, finds in the desire for personal adornment the first incentive to labour. The wampum belts of the American Indians served another purpose, as the record of treaties between them. The necessity of communicating with others at a distance gave rise to the invention of sign and gesture language. In this connexion M. Frobenius refers only to the North American Indians, and does not note the remarkable sign language discovered by Mr. W. E. Roth in North-West Central Queensland. A code of 213 gestures is pictured in that writer's 'Ethnological Studies' of the aborigines of that district. M. Frobenius collects, however, illustrations of a drum language from Africa, Polynesia, Oceania, and South America; and gives some description of the methods of counting winters kept by the Dakotas of North America, as published by the Bureau of Ethnology.

The author accepts the theory that animism, which he defines as "a view of the world in which the mental qualities of the animal enjoy greater rights than those of man," corresponds to the stage of development of the African bushmen; and that the next period is the stage of intuition in which death has been discovered, and in which all views culminate in the measure of influence exercised by the souls of the dead, which he calls man-ism. Under this head the belief in ghosts, skull-worship and head-hunting, ancestor-worship and fetishism, secret societies and masks, are described. A good account is given of the ceremonies of the Mida, among the Chippeway Indians of Lake Superior, and of those of the Tiwah among the Dayaks of Borneo.

M. Frobenius then proceeds to discuss a vast number of traditions existing among widely distributed races, which he refers to sun-worship. In his own words, he summons the solar gods from all parts of the world:—

"Come hither, Maui, radiating a glowing warmth, deeply honoured lord of the Polynesian gods! Hither, Litaolane, from Africa, to tell us of thy fortunes; and come, knavish Yelkh, leaving the North-West American domain, for a while forego thy fooleries and try to make thyself clear and intelligible. As for Melanesian Quat and the genial Kamakayakau, you have surely no occasion to be ashamed of your legendary graces in the exalted company of the higher deities."

It will be seen that the author's desire to popularize his subject sometimes leads him to the verge of the frivolous. He is perhaps too astute in tracing evidences of sun-worship in many of the traditions and observances to which he refers. The myth of Quat, which he ascribes to Aurora Island, and that of Kasimbaha, which he ascribes to Bantik in Celebes, are identical in many respects with the story of Harata Kunwar, as transcribed by Mr. Stack from the dictation of Sārdokā, and translated by Sir Charles Lyall in his book on the Mikirs of Assam (Athen., Oct. 17, 1908). This story, like that of the orphan in the same book, which is current not only among that people, but also among Tibeto-Burman tribes at a great distance from them, raises the difficult question how far the materials of folk-lore have an independent origin and how far it is necessary to assume their transmission by intercommunication.

The Nandi: their Language and Folk-Lore, by A. C. Hollis, with an Introduction by Sir Charles Eliot (Oxford, Clarendon Press), is a companion volume to the author's work on 'The Masai: their Language and Folk-Lore,' issued in 1905, also with an Introduction by Sir Charles Eliot. After the preparation of that book Mr. Hollis returned to East Africa, determined to pursue his studies in the languages, folk-lore, and customs of those tribes inhabiting our protectorate that form an offshoot of the Nilotic stock. In studying the people of Nandi he had difficulties to contend with on account of distance from their country, but obtained the services for some months of two boys, one a Masai-speaking Nandi, and the other a Swahili-speaking Lumbwa, and by their help acquired a mastery of the languages. While in Mombasa he also gained much useful information from two interned prisoners, and finally secured the services for two years of a warrior who had been wounded in the punitive expedition of April, 1906. By these means he has compiled an English-Nandi vocabulary of over 80 pages, and a grammar of equal length. He has also made a collection of folk-tales, proverbs, and riddles, giving for each the Nandi text with a literal translation interlined, and a free translation. Except in Mr. Hollis's previous work on the Masai, the student has never before, we think, been furnished with the materials for acquiring so thorough a knowledge of the language of an East African tribe.

The linguistic part of the work is preceded by a full account of the history, industries, customs, and beliefs of the tribe. The Nandi formerly occupied a considerable territory adjoining Kavirondo, but as they persisted in interfering with the construction of the Uganda Railway, they were removed to a reserve further away from that undertaking. In Mr. Hollis's opinion, they have settled down quietly in their new territory, and give promise to become a law-abiding tribe. Their land is some of the best in the protectorate, and in the early part of 1908 he "passed through miles of country made ready for the sowing operations which had just commenced." He thinks that their suspicious attitude towards the administration, and their fear and dislike of the white man, have now entirely disappeared; and that "it only rests with those officials who, by sympathetic treatment, have successfully won their affections, to develop the best qualities of these people and make them useful members of the community." In view of the facts that this tribe was ten or twenty years ago busied in intercepting caravans and killing traders, and that the division of it which lives to the south of the main branches, and is called "Lumbwa," was so named in contempt, as having given up the noble art of war and taken to agriculture, Mr. Hollis's opinion (if not based on too hasty generalization) is strong testimony to the civilizing result of good administration. A map of the territory of the Nandi and allied tribes is appended to the work, but a better idea of their distribution is given by the two maps illustrating Sir J. R. L. Macdonald's paper in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, xxix. 226. Mr. Hobley's map in his 'Eastern Uganda' is also useful for comparison. Mr. Hollis acknowledges that he has freely consulted these works and others.

The book is illustrated by 44 plates and 53 figures in the text. These adequately portray the physical features, the dwellings, the costumes, the weapons, and the industries of the people. The dwellings are isolated circular huts, built of wattle and mud mixed with cowdung to a height of about four feet, and surmounted by a conical grass roof. They are divided into two compartments by a wattle-and-daub partition—the one the kitchen, living-room, bedroom, and storehouse of the family, the other a shelter for the cattle.

The costume of the Nandi is scanty. They stretch the lobe of the ear by inserting enormous pieces of wood. They shave the head, except that some adult women wear a short crop of hair over the crown. The eyebrows are shaved off. The two middle incisors of the lower jaw are extracted; but Mr. Hollis discredits the statement of Sir H. Johnston and Mr. Hobley that a chief or medicine man has a tooth of the upper jaw also removed. The whole country acknowledges the overlordship of the chief medicine man; but each district has two governors—one selected by and representing that chief, the other called the spokesman or counsellor, and chosen by the people. The male population is grouped according to age into seven classes; and once in 7½ years the duty of guarding the land of their fathers is transferred from the class of warriors formerly entrusted with it to the next younger class, and the retiring class leave off their warrior garments, and don furs as elders.

The folk-tales are of ordinary types. There is an accumulative one, like 'The House that Jack Built'; also a story of the beginning of the earth—that, when the sun-god came to the earth to prepare the present order of things, he found three beings there, the thunder, the elephant, and a man of the Dorobo tribe, closely akin to the Nandi, all living together. The thunder declared that he was afraid of the man, who could turn over from one side to the other when asleep; and the thunder fled to the heavens, where he has remained ever since. The man had been afraid of the thunder, but did not mind the elephant; so he shot him with a poisoned arrow, and thus man became great in all the countries. Another tale is that in olden times dogs were like men, but the two having engaged in war, the dogs were beaten, and became the slaves of men; still another, that in olden days cattle were like men, had feet and not hoofs, and could talk.

Some of the 57 proverbs throw light on character. "One does not slaughter a calf before its mother's eyes" reminds one of the Hebrew prohibition of seething a kid in its mother's milk. "A man does not wash a woman's hand" and "Send hares to the elephant, not elephants to the hare," are rules of domestic discipline. "Do not be puffed up like the people of Chaptol" is explained by a tradition that when that people projected a raid on the cattle of a neighbouring tribe, they were so certain of success that they killed and ate all their own cattle first, and had to return empty-handed to empty kraals.

A single example of the 76 riddles will suffice: "My girl sings as she goes to the cattle-kraal, but is silent as she comes back." The answer is "the milk-calabashes," which knock against each other and make a noise when taken out empty, but make no sound when carried back full.

Mr. Hollis has spared no pains in making his account trustworthy and complete.

From the majority of readers Ancient Tales and Folk-lore of Japan, by Richard Gordon Smith (A. & C. Black), is sure of a welcome. The wealth of Japanese legend is immense, and each collection may be expected to have the charm of novelty. This volume has been extracted from illustrated diaries kept during nine years' stay in the country, where the compiler was engaged on a scientific mission. While searching for specimens, dredging and trawling in the Inland Sea, or rambling in the mountains, he met with natives of all sorts and conditions—fishers, farmers, priests, doctors, children—and the stories they told him were many. Those published here are connected with mountains, flowers, trees, and historical places and persons, and cover a period of more than two thousand years, from the third century B.C. to our own day.

Yet different as they are, and far apart in time, the spirit which they breathe is the same throughout. The prevailing atmosphere is one of tragic gloom. We pass through lowering woods, up precipitous rocks, to temples inhabited only by ghosts; along desolate shores, among the horrors of storm and shipwreck; or under the depths of the sea, to the haunts of man-eating monsters. Even in less lurid scenes, in the stir and hum of cities, despair and death are never far away: the hero too often bleeds, the youth and the maiden love to their own undoing. In this home of ancestor-worship, where even to-day the individual is merged in the family, the marriage of convenience is the rule, the love match, the exception. Hence the love-tales of Japan are most often tales of woe and thwarted passion, of sickness and suicide. The lovers meet only to separate; between them are the barriers of caste, as in 'The Ghost of the Violet Well,' of race-hatred, or religion; or, like O Kimi and the painter Sawara, they are the playthings of cruel circumstance. Sometimes the mountain-god, the spirit of the tree, the willow and the cherry put on human form and lie in wait for mortals, to delight, it may be, but to madden and destroy them.

If the victims of love are many, the victims of honour are even more numerous. In no other land has the maxim "noblesse oblige" been interpreted with such pitiless precision as in old Japan. None but the lowest were allowed to live unto themselves. The freedom of the individual was hampered by custom, public opinion, and conscience, and as he rose in the social scale, these became more and more exacting. The position of the Samurai or military noble strikes the Westerner as little short of intolerable. For all wrongdoing, even unintentional, for bringing misfortune upon others, for failure in the discharge of duty, for incurring the frown of a superior, for every breach of discipline or etiquette, however slight, there was one atonement only; nothing but hara-kiri or suicide could satisfy the demands of honour. Instances of this practice and the motives prompting it are frequent in these pages. Ippai beheads the lotus-spirits, mistaking them for children—he takes his own life; O Cho's beauty stirs up broils in Hatsushima—she drowns herself; Iganosuke is robbed of the golden Kwannon—he prepares to die; the headmen of Yabuki-mura consent, through ignorance, to the felling of the sacred camphor—that they should kill themselves is the foregone conclusion. Most striking of all are the cases in which this self-immolation is intended to point a moral, as in the tale of 'The Chess-board Cherry-tree.' Ukon desires to rebuke his overlord for the overlord's own good. To do so would be to infringe the feudal code. There is only one way open to him: he speaks, but he disembowels himself first.

Yet, in spite of its gloom and weirdness, the effect of this volume is not entirely sorrowful. If the hero does not live happily ever after, if to our ideas much of the suffering is needless and the "pity of it" great, we are vexed by nothing sordid or ignoble: the moral victory is always assured; and everywhere in these pages high failure is seen to triumph over low success. They derive further relief from the feeling for colour which we invariably connect with Japan. Nor is humour of a gravely ceremonious order lacking: we smile over the courtship of Heitaro and the willow, or the conversion of the monkeys for whom the priest of Kinoto transcribed the sacred books. Even here it is the tragic motive that predominates. The willow tree is destroyed, and the apes are cut off untimely, digging potatoes for the holy man.

The stories, which were written down while they were fresh in the mind of the collector, retain as much as possible of the original flavour, and the effect of novelty and strangeness is not diminished by the vivid pictures executed by native artists after Mr. Smith's own sketches. In one respect he has not satisfied our anticipations. His title led us to hope for special chapters on native rites and customs, on superstitions, games and songs, but on these topics we must be content with scattered allusions. Apart from this omission Mr. Smith has treated us liberally.

Miss Eve B. Simpson's little book, Folklore in Lowland Scotland (Dent & Co.), is entirely "popular." "We" (the Lowland Scots) "are of Oriental origin." Our ancestors "from the East had brought with them their language"—which appears to have been Semitic—"as well as their reverence for Baal. Fire was his earthly symbol, and from his name, Baal, Lord, and the Celtic tein, fire, comes Beltane, a word which lingers as a beacon light in Scottish place-names." We thought that Baal, with Miss Simpson's etymology of "Beltane," had "gone to his own herd" long ago. Our author derives the origin of the saying, "Peebles for pleasure," from the May Day fair at Peebles, celebrated, she says, by James I. The king has lost that rose from his chaplet, but Miss Simpson quotes 'Peblis to the Play' as given in 'The King's Quhair.' Has she found it in that poem? The true saying is, "They speak weel o' Paris, but gie me Peebles for pleesure and deevilment." We have a mystic Beltane ceremony, "handed down from Baal's votaries," says Mr. Guthrie ('Old Scottish Customs,' 1885), whom Miss Simpson quotes; and it appears that Mr. Guthrie himself saw the ritual, and the kinds of oat cake "each dedicated to some particular being, the supposed preservers of their flocks and herds, or to some animal, the real destroyer of them." Where did Mr. Guthrie see all this? Certainly in some place where eagles were, actually or traditionally, destructive. Could this be in the Lowlands? We are not told. Whatever be the etymology of "Hogmanay," it is not "au geux menez"; aux gueux menez may be intended. If Hogmanay comes from "a word meaning 'the night of slaughter,'" Miss Simpson might give the word, whether Semitic, Celtic, Pictish, or what not. But she has not taken the trouble, though the context suggests that she conceives the "word" to be French. The father of Sir James Simpson (Miss Simpson's father) had taken part in burying a cow alive, to stay a murrain. That cruel rite has been performed in Galloway well within the memory of the living. Miss Simpson's great-grandfather had a "Goodman's Croft," dedicated to the Deil—a custom not obsolete, according to our author. "Throughout Scotland these crofts may be seen," and we do not know the custom elsewhere. That Herodotus was engaged on his history as early as 500 B.C. is a chronological fact not usually known. Mr. S. Laing is quoted approvingly for the rather hasty generalization that there would have been no Reformation, no freedom of the Press, "if three boats from the north of the Elbe had not landed at Ebbsfleet in the isle of Thanet fourteen hundred years ago," while "the same people" kept on invading up to 1066. This is folk-lore with a vengeance! It is unkind to give no reference for the recent discovery, in Fife, of "a man all in shining armour clad," at Norrie's Law. The man's mail was of silver, and one would gladly know where it is to be seen. Near Balachulish it can be inspected by those who are lucky enough to meet the spectre of "the Great Man" who wears it. Probably the silver mail of Norrie's Law went to the melting-pot. Miss Simpson tells us that "the Rev. Mr. Kirk of Aberfoyle" published his book on fairies at the beginning of the nineteenth century! A hundred copies of an imperfect MS. were issued by Sir Walter Scott, anonymously, in 1815; the tract is not mentioned by Lockhart. Mr. Kirk had died, or, as was believed, had been carried into fairyland, about a hundred and twenty-five years before he "published a book at the beginning of last century." Miss Simpson thinks that the "orrick" (the Highland brownie), evolved into the banshee, but these beings are of distinct species. The Queensferry custom of "the burry man," still extant, rests on a folk etymology. Lads with flowers headed by one whose clothes are all stuck over with burrs, go round making a quète early in August. Possibly the original name is "the borough man," like the "burly men," who "ride the burly," at Selkirk Common riding (they ride the bounds of the town's lands); and "borough man" being pronounced "burry man," the leader is now made "burry" by having his clothes covered with "burrs." We read that the custom "foiled the antiquarian research even of Sir Walter Scott," but are not referred to any passage in which he discusses the Queensferry custom.

Miss Simpson has a legend to the effect that Thomas of Ercildoune unearthed the book of Michael Scott from his grave in Melrose Abbey, and thence learnt how to overcome the evil Lord Soulis by boiling him in lead. As far as we know, all the tale of Michael Scott with his buried book at Melrose is an invention of Sir Walter. In any case, there is a variant. People pestered Robert Bruce about the misdeeds of the invulnerable Lord Soulis, and, to quote the ballad, the King swore profanely, and added, Saints assoil him!

If you place no hope in steel or rope,
Why, take the man and boil him!

Which was done. The story is as true as the statement that "brave Dunbar" asked Thomas the Rhymer,

What man shall rule the Isle Britain
Even from the north to the southern sea?

and that the Rhymer answered in the well-known lines. Is the poet Dunbar the person of whom "a ballad" tells the anecdote? We have here True Thomas's prediction of the "great storm," which was interpreted as the death of Alexander III. Now the odd fact is that a furious storm did occur, atmospheric merely, and is recorded in the 'Lanercost Chronicle.' Manifestly Thomas only aimed at a "weather forecast."

Mere genealogical research can find nothing about the elopement of a daughter of the Earl of Haddington, wife of Lord Cassilis, with Johnny Faa, who was hanged with fifteen of his company. The ballad appears to be accepted as history by Miss Simpson: the lady, she says, was shut up for life. But has she found evidence for all this in 'The Haddington Book' of Sir William Fraser? If she has found it, there or anywhere, and found a record of the hanging of Mr. Faa, "himself the sixteenth," she does not quote her authority.

She has a Victorian story of the man who shot at the hare, and wounded the witch. The event has recurred in the Edwardian era, in a glen of which we name not the name: the new witch, being young, appeared as a leveret. "Not long ago, some Irish were sure a woman near them was a witch, and she was done to death." This appears to refer to the burning of a woman, by her husband and her relations, on the plea that she was, not a witch, but a fairy changeling. The Irish, and the Scottish Celts, have never been witch-burners; witch-burning in these countries is later than the Reformation, a Protestant exercise.

Miss Simpson gives the story of a Scot who, nobly intoxicated, was asked by his wife where he had been: "I'm no sure if it was a wedding or a burial, but it was a right fine affair"—not a Scots phrase. A preferable variant has it that a man, in the condition with which, as Dumas says, all noble souls sympathize, arose, at a funeral feast, and proposed the health of the bride. A friend pulled him down, and told him the state of the case. "Weel," he said, "be it burial or be it bridal, it's graund."

Miss Simpson writes learnedly:—

"All the time-tried imperishable favourites, Puss in Boots, Red Riding-hood, Cinderella, Blue Beard, Jack and the Bean-Stalk, &c., folklore has saved to us, showing the oneness in speech of the Teutonic races."

The first four of the five stories are literally translated from the French of Charles Perrault, not a Teutonic authority.

We said that Miss Simpson's book is "popular." It is certainly remote from the scientific. But it is pleasantly written, and ought to be popular among people who hate science: it is a survival of pre-scientific folk-lore.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Two old friends among books of reference reach us together. Of both we have proposed improvement in our notices of several successive years: but all such changes in old-standing undertakings are troublesome, and may be dangerous. The Annual Register for 1908, published as usual by Messrs. Longmans, continues the form and system of index and chapter titles which was suitable a hundred years ago, but of difficult application when the events to be chronicled, if less important, are infinitely more numerous. Those who are used to consultation of the older series in historical research naturally prefer to keep the form they know, permitting as it does rapid comparison between different years in reference to similar events. The index of 'The Annual Register' in itself is good, but consultation of the new series is not easy, even with this index. The execution of the volume presents no unusual features. The chapters on foreign countries vary in merit, as has always been the case, and some are written in a sense too friendly to the countries described, while others convey the censures directed against a national policy by local oppositions. The French article, like French newspapers of weight, opposes the taxation suggested, not only by the present French Minister of Finance, but by his more Conservative predecessor, M. Poincaré. The colour thus given to the chapter is not consistent with the impartiality of the record of our own Parliamentary proceedings. The German chapter gives a view of German foreign policy which is probably true, but of which the truth is more generally recognized in this country than in others, unless it be in Russia. The Austrian policy is described in similar fashion, and in language assuming the criminality of an annexation to which this country had in fact consented before the meeting of the Congress of Berlin. The remarkable fact about it is, after all, its long postponement.

The other annual volume to which we refer is The Statesman's Year-Book, 1909, again edited by Dr. Scott Keltie and Mr. Renwick. In several previous notices of earlier issues we have pointed out shortcomings, some of which have been dealt with, and others not. In our notice of June 8th, 1907, we offered observations in continuation of those of June 9th, 1906, which we need not now repeat, though many of them are still applicable to the present issue. In the tables concerning products of the British possessions we again note the absence of general treatment of subjects always sought for in a more general form for purpose of comparison. All the facts concerning the wheat imports on which we live, and the wheat exporting countries who are the rivals of our own possessions, are to be found within the volume. But the index does not help, and much time is wasted, with the result that other sources have to be consulted, when 'The Statesman's Year-Book' might by re-arrangement present the facts in the form required. So too with tea and gold, both topics of immediate interest. The Times has recently published useful articles upon all three—wheat, tea, and gold. We note, without censure, that the figures printed in The Times on the 24th May last in an article 'The Empire's Wheat' do not exactly tally with those in 'The Statesman's Year-Book.' It is, however, because The Times article gives the facts for which most inquirers search that we repeat the suggestion that there should be a complete revision of the index of the book, so that all the statistics of such trades should be brought into view together. The Times article showed clearly the data for future as well as present comparison between the wheat fields of the British Empire and South America: "Outside the British Empire, in the possibilities of increase in wheat production, Argentina comes first." The statistics given in The Times are essential for purposes of argument. Our suggestions with regard to the treatment in 'The Statesman's Year-Book' of such eccentric governments as those of the Isle of Man, Jersey, and the other Channel Islands, have in some degree been followed, but not, we think, sufficiently, inasmuch as the reader would not gather from these pages the fact that an annual Customs Bill is passed by the Imperial Parliament for the Isle of Man, and not for either of the two Governments of the Channel Islands group. A reference should be given to the report of the Commission to inquire into the laws of the Channel Islands, published by Clowes in 1848. The amount of the French debt, long given and criticized by The Athenæum, is omitted so far as the doubtful details go. But we think that under 'Books of Reference concerning France, Official Publications,' the entry "Foreign Office Reports, London," is not sufficient to guide readers to the excellent account in a large pamphlet written by the Hon. R. Lister, and published (under the title 'Report on the French Budget for 1907') in July of that year. The Report was more detailed and useful for inquirers than have been later documents affected by the changing, and as yet unvoted projects of the present French Minister of Finance. The Report in question is based on the situation as accurately described by his predecessor, M. Poincaré. The account of Old Age Pensions in this country is accompanied by notes on foreign systems, while under France, and in other places, further information is to be discovered by those who hunt for it. But here is another case of the need for a subject index as regards topics of the day. The account of Swiss religions has been modified after standing unchanged for many years, but still appears to lump Old Catholics with "Roman Catholics," or in any case not to distinguish the former, who, though diminishing since they have ceased to be a State Church in Geneva, are still strong.

Mountaineering in the Land of the Midnight Sun. By Mrs. Aubrey Le Blond. Illustrations and Map. (Fisher Unwin.)—The true lover of mountains—who is not identical with "the complete mountaineer"—takes his pleasure on the verges of the wilderness. He flies from the occupations and distractions of the town to lead a simpler life. Of late years he—or she—has been driven further afield. Within living memories St. Moritz was a remote Swiss Bath, where English five-pound notes were looked on with suspicion. Mrs. Le Blond has done much towards making it the favourite resort of the wealthy idler. She now has fled from her own creation to furthest Norway, to Arctic Lapland, and has again taken the world into her confidence. Possibly there is not any immediate risk that the world will follow her to her new playground; for delightful as camping-out may be under favourable conditions, existence in a small tent in a very damp climate, amongst swarms of mosquitoes, is not without drawbacks.

The district to which Mrs. Le Blond introduces us, and in which she has spent five summers in climbing and fishing, the Lyngen Peninsula, lies just south of Tromsø, and two hundred miles within the Arctic Circle. Thanks, however, to the Gulf Stream, it enjoys warm summers which allow the growth of a luxuriant vegetation in the valleys along the seaboard. But it is mainly for its mountains that a few enthusiasts have visited it. It is a land, a labyrinth, of mountains, their rocky crests rising to from 5,000 ft. to 6,000 ft. above sea-level. This means as much of a climb as the Titlis above Engelberg. Mrs. Le Blond finds climbing in the soft, tepid air of the firds less exhausting than in the thin atmosphere of the High Alps. Her experience is, we think, exceptional; but the list of her ascents at the end of the volume justifies her statement in her own case. The rockpeaks are arduous, but do not present exceptional difficulties, except in the shape of the loose stones that harass all first-comers on a mountain. The author, who herself employed two Alpine guides, recommends the region as a good training-ground for guideless climbers. She insists particularly on the advantage they will enjoy in never being hurried by the approach of darkness in a land where during the visitors' season it is always afternoon, until it is to-morrow morning.

Mrs. Le Blond furnishes a simple, straight forward account of her experiences. The general reader will regret that she has preferred to give a condensed diary of her numerous expeditions in place of fuller accounts of a few of them and more descriptions of the general aspects of the country. Summaries tend to become monotonous, and the Lyngen peaks are very like one another, at least on paper and in photographs. They do not appear to rival in boldness those of the neighbouring Lofoden Islands. No doubt they depend for much of their attraction on the atmosphere and tender colouring of the Far North. Mrs. Le Blond's photographs, with which the volume abounds, are most attractive when there is a foreground of mist or laughing sea to relieve the monotony of clustered pyramids and icy hollows.

In her final chapters the author sets out the opportunities open to the sportsman and fisherman in a land where most of the moors and waters are free. She has many good words to say for the intelligence and honesty of the inhabitants of the coast and the nomad Lapps who wander over the hills with herds of reindeer. A good map of the district would have been welcome. There are considerable glaciers between the ridges, and all the ordinary Alpine precautions are essential.

Around Afghanistan. By Major de B. de Lacoste. (Pitman & Sons.)—Major de Lacoste, a French officer with some earlier experience of Asiatic travel, came to the decision in 1906 that, as the Amir of Afghanistan would not allow travellers within his dominions, he would give himself the pleasure of going all round them, a feat which he literally accomplished. In a well-written preface, which bears the title 'The Asiatic Problem,' M. Georges Leygues sums up the achievements of his fellow-countryman, and claims for him that he is "a penetrating observer" as well as "a daring and cheery traveller." We fear that there is not much in the volume to justify the former of these claims. For instance, the author has not a word of comment or criticism on the administrative systems in the four separate realms through which he travelled—yet a comparison between the Asiatic rule of Persia and China, and the European rule of England and Russia, would have been interesting. We must take the French traveller as we find him, a pleasant compagnon de route, whose equanimity in the face of hardship and discomfort is un-failing. He has certainly an eye for trivial detail, which most persons would not see, or would forget.

The interesting part of the journal relates to the crossing of the Pamir plateau into Chinese Turkestan, and the journey from Yarkand to Kashmir via the Karakoram pass and Leh. If the scientific or general information is meagre, there are many passages of graphic description; for instance, that of the sinister entrance to the Pamirs, where the wind-storms are more trying than the severe cold. An occasional glimpse is furnished of the sort of life the few Russian officers stationed at the different posts pass in this inclement region, and the author exclaims: "To bear this existence one must have the special temperament of those Northern giants whose stoic endurance we must unreservedly admire." How easily one may lapse from the high level of civilization to a primitive state was proved when the French travellers—the Major being accompanied by a brother officer and a French resident in Russian Turkestan—on reaching a Russian station where they were entertained by the commandant, discovered that "the mirrors reflected, to our astonished eyes, the faces of savages, peeling noses, beards unkempt, and brick-coloured cheeks." With Parisian gaiety Major de Lacoste adds, "But it was not necessary to wear a white tie!"

The entrance into Chinese territory in the Sarikol region is extremely difficult and un-inviting, stone-encumbered tracks, raging torrents, and the absence of all facilities for locomotion or transport making the task of the traveller doubly arduous. When the party reached Tash Kurgan in the hope of following M. Dauvergne's short route, it was discovered that no rafts or other means were available to cross the Raskem, with the result that the travellers had to make a wide detour to Yarkand.

It is disappointing to find Major de Lacoste as reticent about the Chinese as he is about the Russians. His account of Yarkand, which he describes as looking "like a plague centre," is not at all inviting, and there is nothing to give the impression that the rest of the country is much better. Only when he reaches Little Tibet does Major de Lacoste indulge in terms of praise and satisfaction. In Kashmir he compares Srinagar to Venice, and refers to an interview with the Maharajah, who, finding his visitor a Frenchman, gave him an interesting account of his efforts to promote silk culture and manufactures.

The tour did not end in India, for the French officer had to fulfil his "vow" of getting all round Afghanistan, so he proceeded to Baluchistan. At Kelat he had an interview with the Khan, who received him in his curiously intricate palace fort, and welcomed him by paying France a neatly turned compliment. In some respects the description of Baluchistan, although the least attractive subject, is the most graphic portion of the book. It makes us the more regret that the Major did not devote his powers of observation to the systems in force under Russian and Chinese rule, which are comparatively little known. The volume is well illustrated with photographs from the author's own collection.

One of the best of Mr. Baring-Gould's recent volumes of a scrapbook nature was that which dealt with 'Devonshire Characters and Strange Events.' He has now put forth a similar work, devoted to Cornish Characters and Strange Events (John Lane). His object has been

"not to retell the lives of the greatest of the sons of Cornwall, for these lives may be read in the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' but to chronicle the stories of lesser luminaries, concerning whom less is known and little is easily accessible."

The volume is as a whole distinctly entertaining, and contains only a few well-known or hackneyed subjects. To give a rough idea of the nature of its contents, we may name the subjects of the first six sections, which may fairly be taken as a sample of the rest.

The book opens with a brief account of the career of William Pengelly, a noted geologist (1812-94), whose chief work was the laborious scientific exploration of the great bone-cave near Torquay known as Kent's Cavern. The second section gives a sketch of Sir Charles Wills, General Commander of the King's Forces, who died on Christmas Day, 1741, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. The third describes and illustrates the well-known mischievous action of Lieut. Goldsmith, R.N., in deliberately upsetting the Logan Rock in 1824, and the steps that were taken to compel him to replace it. This is followed by an account of that strange being Hugh Peters the regicide, accompanied by a reproduction of an extraordinary old engraving of Peters with a windmill on his head and a realistic devil whispering in his ear. The fifth subject is Henry Trengrouse of Helston (1772-1854), the inventor of the rocket apparatus for saving life at sea. Though he got comparatively little honour, and no pecuniary reward for his humanitarian invention during his lifetime, Trengrouse deserves a foremost place amongst the worthies not only of Cornwall, but also of the whole country. As he lay on his death-bed, his last words to his son were: "If you live to be as old as I am, you will find my rocket apparatus all along our shores." His invention is now established at 300 stations on the English coast. The Board of Trade return for 1907 states that during that year 268 lives were saved by this apparatus, the total number since 1870 being at that date 8,924. The sixth section, entitled 'The Botathan Ghost,' is a quaint story of an apparition, first published by

Defoe in 1720, in his 'History of the Life and Adventures of Mr. Duncan Campbell.'

Sir Robert Hart. By his Niece Juliet Bredon. Illustrated. (Hutchinson & Co.)—We are so apt to associate Sir Robert Hart with Custom House returns and Post Office figures that we are inclined to forget that there is another and more human side to his character. Miss Bredon shows this in the work before us, and explains that kindness, consideration, and tact form an important side of the man, with a considerable dash of superstition.

Sir Robert was brought up in the strictest sect of the Wesleyans, and was educated in Dublin and at Queen's College, Belfast. At the latter he graduated, and gained such distinction that when he appeared among the competitors for an appointment in the China Consular Service, a nomination was at once given to him, without examination. Shortly after his arrival in China he was appointed to a post in the British Consulate at Ningpo, and gained such prominence that he was made secretary to the Allied Commission governing the city of Canton. In 1859 he resigned his office in the Consular Service, and joined the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs at the invitation of the Viceroy Lao. This Customs service came into existence in a haphazard way at the time the T'ai-p'ings were in possession of the city of Shanghai. In these circumstances the Chinese Imperial authorities found a difficulty in collecting the dues from foreign vessels visiting the port, and they invited the foreign consular staffs to do this work. The British, French, and American Consuls formed themselves into a committee to undertake it, and so well did they succeed that the Chinese Government invited them to take over the foreign customs at the four Treaty Ports in addition to Shanghai. By degrees the French and American Consuls retired from the Committee, leaving Sir Thomas Wade, the representative of the British Consulate, to fill the gap alone. After a time he also resigned, and was succeeded by Mr. Horatio Nelson Lay, who when at home on leave undertook to purchase a fleet of steam war vessels and engage an English commander, primarily as a defence against the T'ai-p'ings, but also to serve as the nucleus of a national fleet. Capt. Sherard Osborn was selected for the command, but after a disagreement between himself and Li Hungchang he resigned the post, and the ships were sent back to England for sale. The rupture, moreover, between Lay and Li had become so acute that Lay resigned his post as Inspector-General of Customs, and was succeeded by Hart, who during the absence of Lay had accepted the acting appointment.

From the first the Tsungli Yamên employed Hart as an intermediary in all disputes with foreign Governments, and on one notable occasion at this time he did them a special service. The T'ai-p'ing commanders had surrendered the important city of Suchow to Gordon on condition that their lives should be spared. This solemn engagement Li Hungchang ignored, and beheaded them all. This breach of faith so outraged Gordon's code of honour that he lost control of himself, and started off wildly in pursuit of Li with the intention of executing summary justice upon him. Fortunately Li had notice of his intention, and escaped. But the position was critical. If Gordon had in his anger followed the example of Burgevine and gone over to the rebels, the result would probably have been disastrous to the Imperial cause. In this emergency Hart was sent to make peace between the two men. After great difficulty he came up with Gordon's force and succeeded in reconciling the two chiefs. It is curious to notice the different accounts that are given of this episode. In one Gordon is said to have pursued Li with a rifle; another says that he carried nothing more offensive than a Malacca cane; while a third credits him with a revolver. The last, given here, is, we believe, the correct version.

Soon after the conclusion of the T'ai-p'ing rebellion Hart was ordered to Peking, and there, with the exception of one or two short interludes, he has remained ever since. By all those who were behind the scenes his influence has been looked upon as most beneficent.

Apollonius of Tyana: a Study of his Life and Times. By F. W. Groves Campbell. With an Introduction by Ernest Oldmeadow. (Grant Richards.)—This book has been written with a definite and peculiar purpose. The writers of it discovered that the only English version of the life of Apollonius of Tyana by Flavius Philostratus has become exceedingly rare, and they conceived the idea that a new translation ought to be made to fill this gap in English libraries. Before undertaking the task, however, they wished to interest a sufficiently large public in Apollonius and his biographer, and this volume is intended to discover whether such a public can be found. The book consists of a preface written by Mr. Ernest Oldmeadow, and an account of Apollonius by Dr. Campbell. The former summarizes the various opinions entertained by previous scholars in regard to Philostratus and his 'Life of Apollonius,' and within his limited space his essay is a good attempt.

Dr. Campbell's production is of a different nature. He tries to realize the circumstances in which the activity of Apollonius is described as taking place, and to explain the prevalent ideas of the times in which he is supposed to have lived. This part of the work is a piece of poetic prose, full of fine writing. The style of Dr. Campbell can be better presented by comparing an extract from it with an extract from the version of Berwick, the author of the only complete English translation now existing. In Berwick's translation the birth of Apollonius is thus described:—

"Apollonius was born in Tyana, a town founded by Greeks in Cappadocia. He was called Apollonius from his father, his family was ancient and might be traced to the original settlers....Of the manner of his birth, no one should be ignorant. When his mother was near the time of her delivery, she was warned in a dream to go and gather flowers in a meadow; when she came there, whilst her maidens were dispersed up and down, employed in their several amusements, she fell asleep on the grass. In this situation a flock of swans that was feeding in the meadow, formed a chorus around her, and clapping their wings, as their custom is, sung in unison, all the time the air was fanned by a gentle zephyr. The singing of the birds caused her to start out of her sleep, and at that moment she was delivered of a son—premature labours being sometimes the effects of sudden alarms....All the people of the country say that Apollonius was the son of Jupiter, but he constantly called himself the son of Apollonius."

This is how Dr. Campbell relates the subject:

"A wondrous child surely—born at early morn, just at the time when, doubtless, the finely fashioned feet of the Sun-God fevered the mountain tops and his purple mantle trailed gloriously through the dark vales. For in the imaginative appreciation of a later day (the only original appreciation, based on fragmentary facts and floating fancies, which has come down the centuries to us) it is recorded that Apollo was his reputed father and that birth was given to him in the flowering fields around Tyana. Thither his mother, attended by her maidens, had gone forth to gather the gentle buds still sealed with dew, plucking, so to say, the sweet blossom of maternity to the joyous chants of swans, sacred birds consecrated to the God of Light, which with glad rush of wing and vent of voice circled the mead wherein she lay, presaging, as it would seem, in some sort, the perfect purity of the man that was to be."

Mr. Oldmeadow and Dr. Campbell do not seem to be aware that within recent times two works have appeared in English treating of Apollonius. The one is written by Mr. Mead, and the other by Mr. Whittaker. The volume by Mr. Mead runs exactly in the lines of this work, but its introduction is more erudite than the preface of Mr. Oldmeadow, and the account of the life of Apollonius as written by Philostratus is fuller and more representative of the original, both in substance and style, than Dr. Campbell's. In fact, it is more calculated to draw the attention of the public to the subject than Dr. Campbell's. But the original book, though it contains a great deal of curious matter, is full of absurd discussions, and though it has some fine rhetorical passages, the style is generally bald and unattractive, and the old appeal which used to be made to it, to show that there were others than Christ who performed miracles, is now no longer in vogue. It is doubtful, therefore, whether a large public will be found for a new translation of Philostratus.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH LITERARY SOCIETY.

AN article of interest appears in the current number of the Mercure de France on the English friends of Alfred de Vigny. It announces in the title that it contains unpublished letters, but a good many of them, although never published in the original form, have appeared in England in various volumes of memoirs. Among these are those of Lady Blessington and of Macready, as well as writings of Walter Savage Landor, and 'Three Generations of English Women,' by Janet Ross. In the last-named book will be found some of the letters of Sarah Austin, while we are able to refer readers interested to another source for the same persons, namely, the correspondence of Alexis de Tocqueville. It may, perhaps, be hoped that the coming publication by Mr. Elliot of a selection from the correspondence of J. S. Mill long lost in New Zealand may give us his letters to Tocqueville and Sarah Austin, in which Alfred de Vigny will be mentioned. Among those named in connexion with Vigny's first visit to Lady Blessington in the winter of 1838-9 are our musical critic Chorley, the two Bulwers, Horace and James Smith, Tom Moore, and Lady Duff Gordon, Mrs. Austin's daughter. Lord Durham, of course, figures, but we now have the far more vivid portraits of that "vainest of men" by the Duchesse de Dino and Princess Lieven. There is a short biography of Sarah Austin, but it teaches nothing to the readers of Tocqueville's correspondence.

REMAINDERING.

15, Brunswick Terrace, Brighton.

MAY I be allowed to enter a protest, in the interest not only of authors, but of the book-buying public, against the practice of publishing a book with the deliberate intention of remaindering it? A reprint of my 'Feudal England' has been issued by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. on their own initiative, without giving me any voice in the matter. I endeavoured in vain, through my solicitors, to obtain from them some assurance that the book would not be prematurely remaindered, as was, I gathered, their intention. I then formally and expressly reserved to myself "the right of protesting in any way that may seem best to me" against "its premature remaindering and reduction in price."

The book was published last February at 12s. 6d. (Publishers' Circular), and as the market has been flooded with copies offered at 5s. 6d., or thereabouts, for some time, I have made inquiries, and learn that the book has been a remainder since the beginning of March, although the demand for it had been so great, that, as some booksellers had pointed out in their catalogues, second-hand copies of the original edition had been fetching thirty shillings and upwards.

Apart from the serious injury, direct and indirect, inflicted on authors by such a practice, its unfairness to the public is the point that specially concerns me. I hope, therefore, that you will allow me to make it known through your widely read columns, that I am in no way responsible, though those who may have bought the book at its published price will naturally feel aggrieved.

J. H. ROUND.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Abbott (Edwin A.), The Message of The Son of Man, 4/6 net. An investigation of the meaning of "The Son of Man."
 Adams (Thomas), Sermons, 1/6 net. A selection from a Puritan theologian edited by John Brown.
 Clark (F. E. and H. A.), The Gospel in Latin Lands, 2/ net. Outline studies of Protestant work in the Latin countries of Europe and America.
 Dearden (Rev. H. W.), Modern Romanism Examined, 1/6 net. With introductory notice by Rev. R. Sinker, and prefatory note by the Right Rev. H. C. G. Moule. Third Edition.
 Hall (C. Outhbert), Christ and the Eastern Soul, 6/. The Barrows Lectures, 1906-7.
 Pfeiderer (Otto), Primitive Christianity, Vol. II., 10/6 net. Its writings and teachings in their historical connexions. Translated by W. Montgomery. One of the Theological Translation Library. For notice of Vol. I. see Athen., May 25, 1907, p. 631.
 Sharman (H. B.), The Teaching of Jesus about the Future according to the Synoptic Gospels, 13/6 net. The results of study here set forth were presented first, in their main features, at a joint meeting of the New Testament and Systematic Theology Clubs of the University of Chicago, on February 23, 1904.
 Splendour of God, 2/ net. Being extracts from the sacred writings of the Bahais, with introduction by Eric Hammond. One of the Wisdom of the East Series.
 Wilson (John), How God has Spoken; or, Divine Revelation in Nature, in Man, in Hebrew History, and in Jesus Christ, 5/ net.
 Wordsworth (John), Ordination Problems, 2/. Reordination and ordination "per saltum" and home reunion.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Bryant (Jean), Le Livre du Chastel de Labour. A description of an illuminated manuscript of the fifteenth century, belonging to George C. Thomas, Philadelphia, with a short account and synopsis of the poem.
 Coomaraswamy (A. K.), Medieval Sinhalese Art, 63/ net.
 Dalton (O. M.), Catalogue of the Ivory Carvings of the Christian Era, 42/. With examples of Mohammedan art and carvings in bone in the Department of British and Medieval Antiquities and Ethnography of the British Museum.
 Davenport (Cyril), English Heraldic Book-Stamps, 25/ net. Herein is presented a valuable collection of about 300 English Armorial Bearings, which appear, mostly in gold, on the outside of books.
 Dearmer (Percy), Everyman's History of the English Church, 1/ net. With over 100 illustrations.
 Dutch Bulbs and Gardens, described by Una Silberrad and Sophie Lyall, painted by Mima Nixon, 7/6 net. Contains 24 full-page illustrations in colour.
 Exhibition of Japanese Prints, 1909. Illustrated catalogue with notes and an introduction by Arthur Morrison.
 Modern Homes, described and illustrated by T. Raffles Davison, 15/ net. Selected examples of dwelling houses, with a foreword by Sir Aston Webb.
 Porter (A. K.), Medieval Architecture, its Origins and Development, 2 vols., 63/ net. With lists of monuments and bibliographies.
 Stabb (John), Devon Church Antiquities, Vol. I., 6/ net. A Description of objects of interest in the old parish churches of Devonshire, illustrated with 138 reproductions of photographs taken by the author.
 Worcestershire, described by A. G. Bradley, painted by Thomas Tyndale, 7/6 net. Contains 24 full-page illustrations in colour.

Poetry and Drama.

- Carruth (W. H.), Each in his own Tongue, and other Poems, 3/6 net. New Edition.
 Gale (N.), A Book of Quatrains, 2/6 net.
 Davidson (John), Fleet Street, and other Poems, 5/ net.
 Leigh (E.), Verses.
 Marjoram (J.), New Poems, 2/ net.

- Morris (Sir Lewis), Llywelyn ap Gruffydd Ein Llyw Olaf, 6d. net. An ode.
 Pritchard (L.), Elijah: an Ascent, 1/6 net. A poem in three parts.
 Shakespeare: King Henry the Sixth, 2 Parts, 2/6 net. Edited by H. C. Hart. A carefully annotated text. In the "Arden" edition.
 Sophocles, Trachinian Maidens of, 1/6 net. Translated into English verse by Hugo Sharpley.
 Synge (John M.), Poems and Translations. Issued in admirable form by the Cuala Press.
 Williamson (K.), Cambridge, 2/. A poem together with Indian and other verses and notes. No. 1 of The Fenlight Booklets.
 Wyndham (Horace), The Magnificent Mummer, 1/ net. Some reflections on the twentieth-century stage, its status and pretensions.

Music.

- Graves (Charles L.), Ode to Discord, 2/ net. Described as "A Chimerical Bombination in four bursts," and set to music by Sir C. V. Stanford.

Bibliography.

- Book-Prices Current, Vol. XXIII, Part II. A bi-monthly record of the prices at which books have been sold at auction.
 Carlisle Public Library, Catalogue of the Bibliotheca Jacksoniana. The Bibliotheca Jacksoniana consists of books, prints, manuscripts, &c., relating to or in some way connected with Cumberland, Westmorland, and Lancashire-north-of-the-Sands.
 Fifty-Seventh Annual Report of the Trustees of the Public Library of the City of Boston, 1908-9.
 Harris (W. J.), The First Printed Translations into English of the Great Foreign Classics, 2/6. A supplement to textbooks of English literature.

Political Economy.

- Devine (E. T.), Misery and its Causes, 5/ net. One of the American Social Progress Series.
 Vane (Captain Sir Francis), On Certain Fundamentals. Essays on current politics.

History and Biography.

- Church (Rev. C. M.), Four Somerset Bishops, 1136-1242, 1/6 net. From documents in possession of the Dean and Chapter of Wells.
 Ferrero (Guglielmo), Characters and Events of Roman History from Cæsar to Nero, 7/6 net. A series of studies of the great men and ladies of ancient Rome, and critical moments and events in Roman history. Translated by Frances Lance Ferrero. The Lowell Lectures of 1908.
 Forrest (G. W.), Life of Field-Marshal Sir Neville Chamberlain, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., 18/ net.
 Friedländer (Ludwig), Roman Life and Manners under the Early Empire, Vol. II., 6/. Authorized translation of the seventh enlarged and revised edition of the Sitten-geschichte Roms, by J. H. Freese and L. A. Magnus.
 Jervey (Theodore D.), Robert Y. Hayne and his Times, 12/6 net.
 Krüger (Gustav), The Papacy, 5/ net. The idea and its exponents, translated by F. M. S. Batchelor and C. A. Miles.
 Morgan (G. E.), R. C. Morgan: his Life and Times, 5/
 New History of Methodism, 2 vols., 30/. Edited by W. J. Townsend, H. B. Workman, and George Eayrs. Illustrated.
 Nine Famous Birmingham Men, 2/6 net. Lectures by various authors delivered in the University, including studies of Priestley, Newman, John Bright, Westcott, Burne-Jones, and R. W. Dale. Edited by J. H. Muirhead.
 Phillips (Rev. James), The History of Pembrokeshire, 12/6 net.

Geography and Travel.

- Belloc (H.), The Pyrenees, 7/6 net. With 46 sketches by the author and 21 maps.
 Cook (E. C.), London and Environs, 6/. With 24 new maps and plans by Bartholomew, revised by E. T. Cook. Fifth Edition. One of the Darlington Handbooks.
 Hutton (Edward), In Unknown Tuscany, 7/6 net. Contains 8 illustrations in colour by O. F. M. Ward and 20 other illustrations, with notes by William Heywood.
 Marson (C. L.), Glastonbury. A historic guide, with sketches by H. S. Stewart, and other illustrations.
 Unstead (J. F.), The Oxford Geographies: Practical Geography, Part II., 1/6

Education.

- Experiment in Educational Reform and a Plea for a Royal Commission on Public School Education.
 Stainer (W. J.), Bell's New Practical Arithmetic Test Cards, Second to Seventh Year, 1/3 net.

Philology.

- Handbook of Foreign Study, 6d. net. Compiled and edited by H. J. Darnton-Fraser, with an Introduction by the Right Hon. R. B. Haldane.
 Jones (Daniel), The Pronunciation of English, 2/6 net. Phonetics and phonetic transcriptions.
 Morrice (Rev. J. C.), A Manual of Welsh Literature, 2/6 net. Contains a brief survey of the works of the chief bards and prose writers from the sixth century to the end of the eighteenth.
 Texts relating to Saint Ména of Egypt and Canons of Nicaea in a Nubian Dialect, 12/. Edited by E. A. Wallis Budge. With facsimile.
 Weston (Jessie L.), The Legend of Sir Perceval, Vol. II. The prose Perceval according to the Modena MS., 15/ net. Studies upon its origin, development, and position in the Arthurian cycle.

Science.

- Astronomer Royal to the Board of Visitors of the Royal Observatory, Report, Greenwich. Read at the Annual Visitation.
 Cleveland (F. A.), Railroad Promotion and Capitalization in the United States, 7/6 net.
 Garrett (Capt. A. ff.), Hydraulic Tables and Diagrams for Practical Engineers, 15/ net.
 Jessop (C. M.) and Havelock (T. H.), Elementary Mechanics, 4/6
 Journal of the Marine Biological Association of the United Kingdom, Vol. VIII, No. 4, New Series, 1/

Lorentz (H. A.) The Theory of Electrons, 9/ net.
 Marshall (A. Milnes), The Frog. An Introduction to Anatomy, Histology, and Embryology, Edited by F. W. Gamble, Tenth Edition.
 Robertson (W.) and Porter (C.), Sanitary Law and Practice, 10/6 net. A handbook for students of public health and others.
 Walton (G. L.), Practical Guide to Wild Flowers and Fruits, 6/ net.
 Xydís (C.), Handbook on Tacheometrical Surveying, 6/ net.
 Youngson (P.), Slide Valve Motion for Marine Engineers, 5/ net.

Juvenile Books.

Ewing (Juliana H.), Mrs. Overthway's Remembrances, 2/6 net. Illustrated by W. V. Wheelhouse.

Fiction.

Albanesi (Madame), A Young Man from the Country, 7d. net. New Edition. For former notice see Athen., June 2, 1908, p. 662.
 Andom (R.), The Runaways, 6/. Some early adventures of Troddles and Us. Illustrated.
 Baillie-Reynolds (Mrs.), The Ides of March, 7d. net. New Edition.
 Crawford (Oswald), The League of the White Hand, 6/. Annals relating to the cases of The Kidnapped Cabinet Minister, Mr. Gordon's Cryptogram, The Lady with the Crooked Finger, and The Kensington Gang.
 Dawson (L. H.), Exiled Workers, 3/6. A study of employment, socialism, &c.
 Gerard (Dorothea), The Red-Hot Crown, 6/. A semi-historical romance.
 Gould (Nat.), A Stroke of Luck, 6d. New Edition.
 Grant (Robert), The Chippendales, 6/. Shows the difference existing between the old society and the new in Boston (Mass.).
 Hard Way (The), by a Peer, 1/ net. New Edition.
 Hazard of the Die (The), by a Peer, 6/. A story of smart, idle society.
 Lee (Charles), Our Little Town and other Cornish Tales and Fancies, 3/6. Cornish tales and fancies.
 Lighthall (W. D.), The Master of Life, 1 dol. 50. A romance of the five nations and prehistoric Montreal.
 Macleod (Fiona), The Dominion of Dreams, 2/6 net. A volume of short stories, most of them printed for the first time.
 MacMahon (Ella), Fancy O'Brien, 6/. Story of lower-class life in Ireland.
 Magnay (Sir W.), The Powers of Mischief, 6/. A romance of adventure.
 Morgan-de-Groot (J.), The Affair on the Bridge, 6/. Depicts rural life in Holland.
 O'Neill (Rose), The Lady in the White Veil, 6/. An adventurous story of love and deceit. With illustrations by the author.
 Pinkerton (T.), The Adoption of Rhodope, 6/. A chronicle of Thames.
 Secret Terror (The), by Brenda, 6/. Has to do with a victim of alcohol.
 Shaw (Capt. Frank H.), A Daughter of the Storm, 6/. A story of the sea, which shows incidentally the risk to our mercantile service of engaging alien sailors. With a frontispiece by E. S. Hodgson.
 Smith (Dorothy V. Horace), Frank Burnet, 6/. The story of an English Midland village.
 Stevenson (G. H.), The Silver Spoon, 6/. Deals with an unsuccessful marriage.
 Swayne (Martin L.), The Bishop and the Lady, 6/. Concerned mainly with the vagaries of a young and pretty widow.
 Thorne (Guy), An Officer and a Gentleman? and other stories, 1/ net.
 Warren (Maude R.), Peter-Peter, 6/. An American romance of sentiment, with illustrations by Rose O'Neill.
 Whitelaw (David), Moon of Valleys, 6/. A sensational extravaganza concerned with the fortunes of the "Moon," an Oriental jewel. With a frontispiece by H. R. Millar.
 Williamson (W. H.), A Family of Influence, 6/. Tells of a struggle of talents and character against family position and influence.
 Yorke (Curtis), Mollie Deverill, 6/. The story of a marriage de convenience which ended in love.
 Yver (Colette), The Doctor Wife, 6/. A translation of 'Princesses de Science.'

General Literature.

Burgoyne (Alan H.), The Naval Review, June, 6d.
 Freeman (W. M.), The Law Affecting Dogs and their Owners, 8vo, 5/ net.
 Gomme (E. E. C.), The Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, 6/ net. Newly translated.
 McCormick (Frederick), The Tragedy of Russia in Pacific Asia, 2 vols., 21/ net. With illustrations by the Author, half-tones from photographs, and maps, &c.
 Maxtee (J.), Scotch and Irish Terriers, 1/ net. Their history, breeding, and management, with special sections on housing, training, and minor diseases of terriers in general. Illustrated. Being Part II. of British Terriers.
 Neale (C. M.), The Early Honour Lists of the University of Cambridge from 1493-9 to 1746-7, 6/ net.
 Nevins (Henry W.), Essays in Freedom, 6/. Dedicated to Henry W. Massingham, Editor of The Nation.

FOREIGN.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Fontainas (A.), Frans Hals, 2fr. 50.
 Martin (H.), Les Peintres de Manuscrits et la Miniature en France, 2fr. 50.

Music.

Saint-Saëns (C.), Portraits et Souvenirs, 3fr. 50.

Bibliography.

Singer (A.), Bismarck in der Literatur: Ein bibliograph. Versuch, 10m.

Philosophy.

Petersen (J.), Kausalität, Determinismus u. Fatalismus, 4m.

Political Economy.

Kostanecki (A. v.), Arbeit u. Armut, 3m. 50.
 Zepler (G.), Neue Demokratie: Richtlinien f. bürgerl. Politik, 3m.

History and Biography.

Handelsman (M.), Napoléon et la Pologne, (1806-7), 5fr.
 Holzapfel (H.), Handbuch der Geschichte des Franziskanerordens, 9m. 50.
 Loliée (F.), Le Duc de Morny et la Société du Second Empire, 7fr. 50.

Science.

Flammarion (C.), Contemplations scientifiques, 3fr. 50.
 Lesueur (D.), Le Droit à la Force, 3fr. 50.

General Literature.

Maël (P.), La Main d'Ombre, 3fr. 50.

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

AFTER an interval of some six years, a new story by Mr. James Lane Allen will be published in July by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., under the title 'The Bride of the Mistletoe.' The scenes are laid in Kentucky, the country which has provided the background of Mr. Allen's earlier works.

'THE LIFE AND TIMES OF LAURENCE STERNE,' by Prof. Wilbur L. Cross, of Yale University, will be published shortly by the same firm.

THE Concordance Society, under the presidency of Prof. A. S. Cook, of the same University, has been engaged on Wordsworth since the beginning of the present academic year. The resultant volume will be under the editorship of Prof. Lane Cooper, of Cornell. Collections are also being steadily made for a Spenser concordance.

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co. will shortly publish a small volume on 'Islam: Her Moral and Spiritual Value,' written by Major A. G. Leonard, to which the well-known writer on Islam and Mohammedan Law, Syed Ameer Ali, has written a Foreword.

IN the July issue of Chambers's Journal Mr. R. L. Jefferson describes 'The Turk at Home,' and the Rev. C. H. Dick 'Some Galloway Lochs.' Miss Mary W. Porter writes on 'Ancient Marbles used in Modern Times'; Mr. Norman Murray of Montreal on 'Lord Strathcona and Louis Riel,' and Mr. R. H. Brewer on Greta Hall, Southey's home at Keswick.

MR. GILBERT HUDSON writes, concerning the review of 'Vanderdecken, &c.':

"Your reviewer has committed to paper a misrepresentation, in condemning my 'Christmas Carol' for my 'profuse indulgence in italics.' Now, these italics are employed merely to distinguish a series of answers from a series of questions. A typographical expedient should not be quoted as a literary fault."

The injudicious use of italics is in our opinion a literary vice. Mr. Hudson employs them, as he says, "merely to distinguish a series of answers from a series of questions," but their effect is to draw unmerited attention to the "answers," which are neither striking nor unexpected.

IN our review of the papers of the Oxford Congress of Religions, Laing's 'Making of Religion' should be Lang's. Mr. Lang is just writing a preface for a new edition of this book, which first appeared in 1898.

THE HON. VICARY GIBBS has been long at work on a new edition of his uncle Mr. G. E. Cokayne's 'Complete Peerage,' the best book of its kind. He is trying to call mediæval folk by the Christian names and surnames which they actually bore, and not by their charter-Latin names, or the anglicized forms of these. Thus he writes "Maud Montagu," and not "Matilda Montacute" (de monte acuto). But difficulties will arise. Is Drogo to be "Drew"? Is Eubulus (Lord le Strange) to be Ebles, or what?

MISS JESSIE L. WESTON is preparing a series of translations or modernizations of mediæval English romances and other texts for Dr. Schofield of Harvard.

MR. R. A. PEDDIE writes:—

"I notice that you review a novel by F. C. Philips entitled 'One Never Knows,' in your issue for May 22nd. Is not this the same book that was published in 3 vols. in 1893, and reviewed by you on Dec. 23rd of that year, p. 878? The new edition appears to be issued without any note of its previous publication."

FROM a memorandum issued by Sir F. D. Lugard it appears that an English University is in a fair way to be started at Hongkong. A public-spirited citizen, Mr. H. N. Mody, has made a large offer of money for the necessary buildings. It is dependent on the appeal for endowment funds, which is having satisfactory results. The University will incorporate the existing College of Medicine, and will begin with medical and engineering courses.

THE 'Correspondance entre Victor Hugo et Paul Meurice' is shortly to appear in Paris.

THE death of Mr. Andrew F. Tait, at the age of sixty-four, after only a short illness, removes a bookseller of the old school who had an excellent knowledge of books. It was through his expert knowledge that the Caxton recently sold at Messrs. Sotheby's for 2,600*l.* was discovered. Mr. Tait had been for many years connected with the firm of Jones & Evans, and became joint manager with Mr. W. T. Whittaker when it was converted into a private company. He served his apprenticeship with Mr. William Paterson of Glasgow.

THE death, in his fifty-ninth year, is announced from Baden-Baden of the distinguished writer and politician, Dr. Theodor Barth. He was one of the most zealous supporters of free trade in Germany, and ably upheld his views in the Nation. Among his writings may be mentioned 'Gegen den Staatssocialismus,' 'Amerikanisches Wirtschaftsleben,' and 'Politische Porträts.'

AMONG recent Parliamentary Papers we note: 'A Return relating to the Training of Teachers in Wales' (1*d.*); 'Regulations for Secondary Schools in England' (2*d.*); and 'A Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, providing for the allocation of the balance of the Education Fund for 1909-10' (3*d.*).

SCIENCE

Darwin and Modern Science. Edited by A. C. Seward. (Cambridge, University Press.)

THIS volume is a worthy tribute to the labours of a great man. It is no ordinary panegyric, but an examination of the principles of Darwinism in the light of our present knowledge. In a series of twenty-nine essays, written for the most part by leaders of scientific thought of our day, it shows how the seed that Darwin sowed has stood the test of fifty years of criticism, and has fructified, prospered, and extended into all departments of biology and beyond. It is published under the auspices of the Cambridge University Press to commemorate both the centenary of Darwin's birth and the fiftieth anniversary of the publication of 'The Origin of Species.'

Most of those who were in the thick of the contest of fifty years ago have long passed to their rest, but Sir Joseph Hooker, Dr. Wallace, and Dr. Galton are still with us. The first of these, in an introductory letter, truly says that these essays cannot but prove to be of enduring value, whether for the information of the general reader or as guides to investigators of similar problems. They are edited by Prof. Seward of Cambridge, and introduced by a short epitome of Darwin's life. The contributors are numerous and of different nationalities. Biological subjects are dealt with by Profs. Weismann, de Vries, Bateson, and Goebel. Prof. Haeckel writes a characteristic article on 'Charles Darwin as an Anthropologist.' Other titles are: The Palæontological Record; The Influence of Environment, and of Geographical Distribution, upon Plants and Animals; Darwinism and Sociology, by Prof. Bouglé; Evolution and the Science of Language, &c. An essay is contributed by Mr. Francis Darwin upon his father's work on the movements of plants, and by Sir George Darwin on the genesis of double stars. Prof. Höffding deals with the influence of the conception of evolution on modern philosophy, and Father Waggett with Darwin's influence upon religious thought. Prof. Bury writes upon Darwinism and history, and Mr. Whetham upon the evolution of matter.

This enumeration of the contents of the book by no means exhausts its subjects or contributors. Two particularly interesting essays are those by Prof. Sedgwick upon 'The Influence of Darwin on the Study of Animal Embryology,' and by Prof. Loeb upon 'The Experimental Study of the Influence of Environment on Animals.' All the articles are written by specialists, and detailed criticism of individual views—often extremely divergent—is out of the question. Some are more concerned with Darwin's original work, others with new theories that have arisen as developments from his views. All are, naturally, more or less tinged with the individual opinions of their authors. It becomes an interesting study in the phylogeny of ideas to trace the influence of mental environment in producing a tendency to variation, and to follow out in these newer schools of thought the alteration or expansion of Darwin's original ideas.

Invaluable as the conceptions of Darwin have been to the progress of science, no one recognized more fully than their author that they were in many directions provisional, and liable to be superseded. His main arguments hold their ground to-day, and as Prof. Bateson says, in reference to their publication, "The time called for a bold pronouncement, and he made it, to our lasting profit and delight"; but much was left unexplained. There is, indeed, no finality about science; the advance that Darwin made has only brought us nearer to problems still unsolved.

As an example of the true spirit in which the student of science should approach his task Darwin will probably never be surpassed. He loved truth for its own sake; he was prepared to give up the most cherished hypothesis if it could be shown to be faulty; and he steadfastly refused to be drawn into controversy. In Lord Avebury's words at the historic meeting of the Linnean Society last year,

"Darwin was not only a great man and a great intellect; he was also, which after all is more, a lovable and a good man—genuine, simple, generous, and sympathetic. . . . He was modesty itself, a true friend, a devoted son and husband and father. Few men have been more bitterly attacked, ridiculed, and criticized. That he felt this keenly we know, but he was never goaded into anger or recrimination. He bore it with patience and dignity. He answered none of the attacks, he lived them down."

Such a man, apart from his discoveries, is worthy to be a leader of science. No more appropriate recognition of his life's work could have been planned than this memorial volume, in which those whose labours have been illumined by the clear light of his intellect unite to bear testimony to the enduring qualities of his opinions.

The Syndics of the University Press, and particularly the editor, Prof. Seward, deserve every congratulation on the production of a book which marks an era in the progress of science. In printing and binding the volume is in all respects worthy of the occasion. We have only one small criticism to make, which applies to other important works published by the University Press: it would have been an advantage to find the name of the writer of an essay at the top of each page. In glancing casually through the book the reader is frequently arrested by some statement or suggestion, and in order to be sure of its author it is necessary to turn to the contents. The same is true of the Index: a subject is treated in different ways in different essays, and having found the reference, one has to make a further search to discover the author responsible for the statement.

Nearly forty years ago Darwin described an Athenæum review of one of his works ('The Descent of Man') as "contemptuous as usual." That time has long passed, and our late editor explained how he induced a distinguished scholar gradually to introduce very different views of Darwin's work. This volume is an indication of how Darwin conquered the world of science. It is intended, if it is a financial success, to use the profits for the endowment of biological research. We trust that they may be substantial, and perhaps devoted to the support of the new Chair in Biology recently instituted in Darwin's University.

THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH.

THE Board of Visitors of the Royal Observatory held their annual meeting there last Saturday, the chairman being Sir Archibald Geikie, President of the Royal Society. From the Astronomer Royal's Report presented thereto, which refers to the year ending on the 10th ult., it does not appear that any changes of importance have been made in the buildings or instruments. A number of photographs, models, diagrams, and historical instruments were lent to the Franco-British Exhibition in May last year, and returned in November. A 4-inch photographic lens of 18 in. focus was lent to the Observatory by Mr. Frankland Adams for special use on comets, &c. We note the meridian observations of the sun, moon, planets, and fundamental stars carried on with accustomed regularity with the transit circle; also of other stars, taken principally from a catalogue of those of the ninth magnitude and brighter between 24° and 32° of north declination, which served as reference stars for the Oxford astrographic zones. An improved method of illuminating the field of view for faint objects has been brought into continuous use. The second nine-year catalogue, containing observations up to the end of 1905, reduced to the epoch 1900, will shortly be ready for distribution. The altazimuth has been used as a reversible transit-circle in the meridian in four positions throughout the year, the positions being changed regularly every two months. Stars, as well as moving objects, have thus been examined; and it is proposed to form a ten-year catalogue of those observed from the time when this arrangement came into operation in 1899 until the end of 1908, reduced to the epoch 1900. Extra-meridional observations of the moon have been systematically obtained with this instrument during the first and last quarters of each lunation. The total number of observations of the moon was 113 with the transit-circle, and 112 with the altazimuth; 76 of the latter being in the meridian and 36 extra-meridional. Casual phenomena have been observed with the equatorials; but the observations of occultations of stars by the moon have been more than usually interfered with by clouds. A large number of observations of close double stars have been obtained with the 28-inch refractor; also measurements of the diameters (equatorial and polar) of the planets Jupiter and Saturn and of the rings of the latter. The 30-inch mirror of the Thompson equatorial was dismounted in July for resilvering, advantage being taken of the opportunity to effect some changes in the adjustments. Photographs of Jupiter and Saturn were taken with the 26-inch refractor and the 30-inch reflector; with the latter also of the small satellites of those planets, of Neptune and his satellite, of 22 small planets, and of comet c, 1908.

The astrographic equatorial, under the charge of Mr. Hollis, has been chiefly employed (the Greenwich zone being virtually finished) in replacing chart-plates which, though satisfactory in other respects, are, owing to slight photographic defects, unsuitable for reproduction of enlarged copies, and in taking subsidiary photographs of reference stars for the determination of the positions of the faint satellites of Jupiter and Saturn on photographs secured with the 30-inch reflector. It should be mentioned that a photographic search has been made for Halley's comet, but hitherto without success. The investigations of Messrs. Cowell and Crommelin make it probable that the return of that interesting body to perihelion will take place on the 13th of April next. Their work on its past history has already been mentioned in The Athenæum. The photoheliographic observations have, as before, been under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Maunder. The solar activity, as shown in the numbers and areas of sun-spots during 1908 declined a little below the level attained in 1907, but was only slightly inferior to that of 1906. No marked and long-continued diminution of activity has yet set in, after a period of unusual length. A number of particularly fine groups of spots were registered in August and September last year, and up to the present there is no indication of the approach of the next minimum. It is regretted that the Mauritius photographs of the sun can no longer be continued, on account of the financial condition of the colony. On the other hand Mr. Hough, H.M. Astronomer at the Cape of Good Hope, has, with the sanction of the Admiralty, undertaken to include daily photographic records of the sun's surface in the work of the Cape Observatory.

The magnetic and meteorological department has been, as in previous years, under the charge of Mr. Bryant. The magnetic observations have lately been carried on in the Pavilion, where they are free from any disturbing effect of iron in the Observatory buildings. The principal results for 1908 are: mean declination, $15^{\circ} 53' 5''$ west; mean horizontal force, 4.0184 in British units and 1.8528 in metric units; mean dip (with 3-inch needles) $66^{\circ} 58' 17''$. There were two days of great magnetic disturbance and six of lesser disturbance. As regards meteorological observations, the following are the principal items: the mean temperature of the year 1908 was $49^{\circ} 8$, or $0^{\circ} 2$ above the average for the 65 years 1841-1905. During the twelve months ending 1909, April 30th, the highest temperature recorded in the shade was on July 3rd, $84^{\circ} 0$ in the Magnetic Pavilion and $83^{\circ} 4$ in the observatory grounds; the lowest was $12^{\circ} 1$ on December 30th. The mean daily horizontal movement of the air was 266 miles, which is 16 below the average of the preceding 41 years. The greatest movement in one day was 776 miles on February 3rd, and the least 36 miles on January 28th. The greatest recorded pressure of the wind was 16.2 lb. on the square foot on September 9th, and the greatest hourly velocity 43 miles on November 23rd and February 3rd. The number of hours of bright sunshine, by the Campbell-Stokes instrument, was 1,752, out of a possible 4,456 during which the sun was above the horizon, so that the mean proportion was 0.393 for the year, constant sunshine being represented by 1. The rainfall for the same twelve months was 22.60 inches, which is 1.52 less than the average of the 65 years 1841-1905.

Messrs. Cowell and Eddington are chief assistants, with power to represent the Astronomer Royal in his absence. The only change which has occurred in the staff has been the resignation of one of the "established computers" on his appointment as Assistant at the Royal Observatory, Edinburgh. Sir William Christie closes his Report by an expression of regret at the large portion of the work which still has to be performed by those on temporary engagements, with less experience than is desirable; but he pays a tribute to the diligence shown by all who are employed at the Observatory in their respective spheres.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—May 26.—Prof. W. J. Sollas, President, in the chair.—The following communications were read: 'The Cauldron Subsidence of Glen Coc and the Associated Igneous Phenomena,' by Messrs. Charles Thomas Clough, Herbert Brantwood Muff, and Edward Battersby Bailey.—and 'The Pitting of Flint-Surfaces,' by Cecil Carus-Wilson.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.—May 26.—Mr. Bernard Roth, V.P., in the chair.—The following were elected to membership: Yale University, and Messrs. E. J. Jekyll and E. T. Newell.—In a paper 'On the Alphabets used on English Coins' Mr. L. A. Lawrence reviewed the Roman, Runic, Hiberno-Saxon, and mediæval Gothic alphabets, and explained many instances of unusual forms of letters, and some of unusual grouping of capitals and minuscules. He also estimated the value of irregularities as criteria when classifying different issues. Ligation, reversal, super-ornamentation, and other characteristics of different periods were considered, and interesting cases of revival of old forms after centuries of disuse were pointed out.—Mr. Alfred Chitty, of Melbourne, furnished a report on 'The Australian Gold Coins struck at the Sydney, Melbourne, and Perth Mints,' since their establishment in 1855, 1872, and 1899 respectively. In this report authoritative statements in detail of dates and numbers issued are incorporated.—Mr. Nehemiah Vreeland, of Paterson, New Jersey, contributed a description of 'Wampum,' the shell-money used by the Indians of North America, and by the Dutch and English settlers in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The method of collection and manufacture, the great variety, the folk-lore, the legal symbolism, and the relative value of wampum at different periods were described, and the lecture was elucidated by photographs of thirteen specimens dating from Colonial and prehistoric times.

Exhibitions: by Mr. Carlyon-Britton, a very rare third brass of Allectus; by Mr. L. A. Lawrence, a medallion of Charles II. taken from the Dutch medal by P. Abeile; by Mr. A. H. Baldwin, a penny of Stephen of the martlet type; and by Mr. J. D. S. MacIlwaine, tokens issued by R. Heslop of Chiswell Street, and Wm. Till of Great Russell Street, coin-dealers.

LINNEAN.—May 24.—Annual Meeting.—Dr. D. H. Scott, President, in the chair.—An enlarged copy by Miss Medland of the miniature of Col. George Montagu, F.L.S. (1747-1815), one of two executed for Mr. W. H. Mullens, was presented by that gentleman.—Mr. R. V. Sherring placed on the table (a) a pure white variety of Orchis morio, and (b) the pink orchid from Christchurch meadows which varies from typical Orchis incarnata, Linn., by flowering some weeks earlier.—Miss Ida M. Roper, Mr. W. E. Collinge, Mr. J. B. Groom, and Mr. R. M. Barrington were admitted Fellows.—The Treasurer submitted the Annual Cash Statement duly audited, together with a statement of the Darwin-Wallace Fund.—The General Secretary laid his detailed report before the meeting, showing that since the last anniversary 20 Fellows, 1 Associate, and 2 Foreign Members had died, and that 38 Fellows and 2 Foreign Members had been elected.—The Librarian's Report was read, the total additions to the library being 690 volumes and 338 separate parts.—The President appointed the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing, Mr. F. N. Williams, and Mr. J. F. Duthie scrutineers of the ballot for the Council, the following being elected: E. A. Newell Arber, Leonard A. Boodle, H. Bury, Sir Frank Crisp, Prof. A. Dendy, Prof. J. B. Farmer, Dr. G. H. Fowler, J. Stanley Gardiner, Prof. J. P. Hill, J. Hopkinson, Dr. B. Daydon Jackson, Horace W. Monckton, R. Innes Pocock, Prof. E. B. Poulton, Lieut.-Col. D. Prain, Dr. A. B. Rendle, Miss Ethel Sargent, Dr. D. H. Scott, Prof. A. C. Seward, and Dr. O. Stapf.—The following officers were elected: President, Dr. D. H. Scott; Treasurer, H. W. Monckton; Secretaries, Dr. Daydon Jackson, Prof. Dendy, and Dr. Stapf.—The President delivered his address, which was chiefly on 'Adaptation in Fossil Plants.' He then addressed Prof. F. O. Bower, briefly referring to his numerous and important researches in morphological botany, and handed to him the Linnean Gold Medal of the Society.

SOCIETY OF ENGINEERS.—June 7.—Mr. W. E. Haldwell read a paper on 'The Sinlumkaba (Burma) Ferro-Concrete Bridge.'

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHÆOLOGY.—June 9.—Prof. A. H. Sayce read a paper entitled 'Discoveries in the Ancient Kingdom of Ethiopia.' The author first dealt with the meroitic hieroglyphic inscriptions, materials for which he had found in the course of his explorations. One of the chief causes of the little progress hitherto made in their decipherment has been the inaccuracy of the published texts. He next described his discovery of the remains of the great temple of Amon at Merœ, which fixes the site of that city. Naga, which has sometimes been supposed to be Merœ, was a sacred city, probably the Alwa of the inscriptions. The ruins there which have been taken to be those of houses are really tombs. In the mountain above Naga he found a rock-tomb and a vast cistern, and he further traced the road which ran past the town from Abyssinia to its Nile-port, where he came across more temples and tombs, and succeeded in identifying the city with the ancient Tolles. An important discovery was that the Blue Nile formed the southern boundary of the Egyptian empire in the age of the eighteenth dynasty. After the rise of the twenty-second dynasty the high-priests of Thebes retired to the Sudan and there formed the Ethiopian kingdom with its two capitals Napata and Merœ. Ethiopian culture, which was originally Egyptian, afterwards became barbarized, and soon after the beginning of the Christian era a negro dynasty ascended the throne and the art became thoroughly barbarous. A broken Greek inscription which was found on the site of Merœ shows that the kingdom of Ethiopia was overthrown in the fourth century A.D. by a king of Axum. Merœ, the mounds of which are as extensive as those of Memphis, is now represented by the village of Segêk.

ARISTOTELIAN.—June 7.—Mr. G. E. Moore, V.P., in the chair.—Dr. A. Wolf read a paper on 'Natural Realism and Present Tendencies in Philosophy.' Under the influence of Kant's criticism and Comte's Positivism modern science has been drifting towards an exaggerated phenomenalism and an increasing distrust in human knowledge, until the theoretical constructions of science have come to be described by its students as little more than a mirage. In the Pragmatist conception of truth we see this tendency seeking an academic epistemology. But this more or less agnostic or sceptical tendency is beginning to arouse dissatisfaction, and there are signs of a forward move toward a new realism. The new movement is not without its excesses. Natural Realism, with some little modification, is more defensible than is commonly supposed, and avoids the excesses of phenomenalism on the one hand, and of the new realism on the other. The predominance of phenomenalism (and idealism) has been due to the prevalence of idealistic epistemology, with its tacit assumption of a tertium quid as intervening between the mind and its objects. But this is mere assumption, and has been vigorously assailed by the new realism. The epistemological basis of Realism is what is known as real presentationism. To natural consciousness it certainly appears as though the world of reality were apprehended directly by the mind, without any mediation, as though to normal perception things appeared just what they were. As a theory of normal perception Real Presentationism is quite defensible. In fact, unless it is assumed, we have no ground even for rational doubt. The objections against the validity of perceptions tacitly assume the validity of our perceptions of other people's brains, &c. Again, that all knowledge is necessarily relative because it involves the relation of the known to the knower is sheer assumption and paradox—sheer assumption, because the fact that there is a relation is no proof that it is other than transparent; paradox, because it implies this—in relation to a knower, but then it cannot be known just because it is so related. The new Realism, on the other hand, goes too far by trying to conceive all mental activity as of the same transparent type. But this makes error unaccountable, just as, on the extremely opposite view, knowledge is unaccountable or impossible. In memory, imagination, &c., we have not mere transparent processes, but content-processes, grounded on a more intimate union of mind and body than is generally admitted by psychologists. In normal perception there is a direct apprehension of external objects; in memory, imagination, and hallucination we have similar quasi-perceptions resulting from inner physiological processes. Direct perception is the gold-reserve of the complex credit system formed by the higher cognitive activities. And because perception is immediate, science is no mere mirage, but a true account of reality, and truths are not merely useful working beliefs, but beliefs which represent reality as it is.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- Mon. Geographical, 8.30.—'Survey and Exploration in the Ruwenzori and Lake Region, Central Africa,' Major R. G. T. Bright.
- Tues. Asiatic, 4.—'A Unique Arabic MS. containing the History of Gujarat under Muhammadan Rule down to the Time of Akbar,' Dr. E. Denison Ross.
- Statistical, 5.
- Faraday, 8.—'The National and International Conservation of Water for Power,' Mr. E. R. Taylor; 'The Formation of Silicon Sulphide in the Desulphurization of Iron,' W. Fielding; 'A Contribution to the Study of Electric Furnaces as applied to the Manufacture of Iron and Steel,' Ch. A. Keller; 'Automatically Circulating Furnaces of the Gin Type for the Electrical Production of Steel,' Mr. Gustave Gin.
- Zoological, 8.30.—'On some Points in the Structure of the Lesser Antoeater (Tamandua tetradactyla), with a Note on the Cerebral Arteries of Myrmecophaga,' Mr. F. E. Beddard; 'On Decapod Crustacea from Christmas Island, Collected by Dr. C. W. Andrews, F.R.S., F.Z.S., Dr. W. T. Calman; 'Notes on a Young Specimen of the Walrus lately living in the Society's Gardens,' Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell; 'Notes on the Viscera of a Walrus (Trichechus rosmarus),' Mr. R. H. Burne.
- Wed. Meteorological, 4.30.—'The Interdiurnal Variability of Temperature in Antarctic and Sub-Antarctic Regions,' Mr. R. C. Mossman; 'Testing of Registering Balloon Apparatus at Low Temperatures,' Dr. W. Schmidt and Mr. E. Gold; 'A Plea for the use of Freely-Exposed Thermometers in addition to Sheltered ones,' Mr. L. C. W. Bonacina.
- Folk-Lore, 8.
- Geological, 8.—'The Carboniferous Limestone of County Clare,' Mr. J. A. Douglas; 'The Howgill Fells and their Topography,' Messrs. J. E. Marr and G. W. Fearnside; 'On a New Species of Sthenurus,' Mr. Ludwig Glauret; and other papers.
- Microscopical, 8.—'The Better Known Tropical Parasites,' Dr. J. A. Brayton Hicks.
- Thurs. Royal, 4.30.
- Linnean, 8.—'On the Growth of a Species of Battarea,' Mr. J. G. O. Tepper; 'The Deposits in the Indian Ocean,' Sir John Murray; 'The "Sealark" Perseidea, Stenopidea, and Reptantia,' Mr. L. A. Borradaile; 'The "Sealark" Polypheta, Part II,' Mr. F. A. Potts; 'The "Sealark" Lepidoptera,' Mr. T. Bainbridge Fletcher; 'New Species of Malesian and Philippine Ferns,' Dr. H. Christ; 'The African Species of Triumfetta, Linn.,' Messrs. T. A. Sprague and J. Hutchinson; 'The Acaulescent Species of Malvastrum, A. Gray,' Mr. A. W. Hill.
- Antiquaries, 8.30.
- Chemical, 8.30.—'The Carbonate of Copper and the Cupricarbonates,' Mr. S. P. U. Pickering; 'Isoquinoline Derivatives, Part I., Oxidation of Laudanosine,' Mr. F. L. Pyman; 'The Colour and Constitution of Azo-Compounds,' Mr. J. T. Hewitt and W. Thomas; 'Isolminazole,' Messrs. H. J. H. Feuton and W. A. R. Wilks; and other papers.
- Fri. Royal, 9.—'A Recent Visit to the Panama Canal,' Mr. A. Henry Savage Landor.

Science Gossip.

DR. DAVID FORSYTH'S forthcoming work on 'Children in Health and Disease' will be published by Mr. Murray during June.

MR. W. M. CROOK writes:—

"In your review of the 'Sportsman's British Bird Book,' you say that 'Mr. Lydekker is not prepared to believe that shags sometimes use their wings under water,' though Macgillivray and Seebohm both state that they do. I have never had the opportunity of watching a shag at work under water, but a year or two since a common cormorant, with one wing cut, used to be kept at the east end of the pond in St. James's Park. This bird discovered that there were great numbers of fish under the bridge across the pond, and it came up to catch them. While it was chasing them, all its movements were clearly visible in the sunlit water. It certainly used both its wings and legs for swimming very rapidly under water."

WE note the publication as a Parliamentary Paper of Annals of the Cape Observatory, Observations of Major Planets (3s.).

MR. J. H. ELGIE, of Leeds, is preparing a small work for publication in September, the object of which is to render easy the identification of the stars and constellations visible in England.

THE distinguished meteorologist, Georg von Neumayer, whose death is announced from Neustadt, was born in Bavaria in 1826. On leaving the University he went to sea for five years, shipping as a common sailor, and gathering information to serve as a basis for his future work. He came to the conclusion that Australia was of the utmost importance for physical observation, and in 1857 founded an observatory at Melbourne, with the assistance of Humboldt and the English Government, which subsequently took over the concern. In 1864 he returned to Germany, and in 1872 was appointed chief of the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty. Anticipating the development of German marine trade he succeeded in interesting the Government in Hamburg as a meteorological station, and 1876 became head of the observatory there. Among his works are: 'Magnetical, Meteorological, and Nautical Observations,' 'Discussion of Magnetic and Meteorological Observations made in Melbourne, 1857-64,' 'Anleitung zu wissenschaftlichen Beobachtungen auf Reisen,' and 'Die Beobachtungen der deutschen Stationen im System der internationalen Polarforschung.'

THE total amount of sunshine recorded at Greenwich in May exceeds that of any previous month since the records began in 1877. It was 325.9 hours, which is 68 per cent of what it would have been had the sky been cloudless during the whole time the sun was above the horizon.

Nothing further has been received respecting the faint comet reported to have been discovered by Prof. Brooks about the end of last month.

THE Berliner Astronomisches Jahrbuch has recently been issued for the year 1911, edited, as before, by Prof. Bauschinger. No alteration appears to have been made in the data or the tables employed. Elements are given of the orbits of no fewer than 665 small planets; also ephemerides of a large number which come into opposition during the present year. Neither of the eclipses of the sun will be visible in Europe, and no eclipse of the moon will take place, unless a penumbral eclipse may be so called.

FINE ARTS

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Second Temple in Jerusalem. By W. Shaw Caldecott. (John Murray.)

The City of Jerusalem. By Col. C. R. Conder. (Same publisher.)

Ancient Jerusalem. By Selah Merrill. (Fleming H. Revell Company.)

IN a modest preface Mr. Caldecott says that "there are but two good reasons why any one should inflict yet another book upon a patient and overburdened public," and these are charm of style and novelty of matter. His own book is so far novel that it offers yet one more attempted solution of an insoluble problem, but we fail to find in either of the other works cited at the head of this article the precise excuses he requires. Yet we do not doubt that a section of the public will welcome all three volumes on a subject that appears to possess inexhaustible attractions. Mr. Caldecott's is the most limited in scope. His is the one more effort, where many have failed, to "materialize" the "vision" of Ezekiel, and to draw the plan of Zerubbabel's Temple on the lines of the vision, which he believes to have been the result of long study and full acquaintance with carefully preserved plans of Solomon's Temple. Mr. Caldecott deals with the problem with all the resources of an accomplished architect, and has probably made as much of the material as can be made; but we confess to a feeling that this minute labour at a reconstruction, the accuracy of which can never be verified, is a sad waste of his talents. The historical and biographical chapters which precede the strictly architectural investigation are of more general interest; but here Mr. Caldecott writes with no special authority.

Col. Conder and Mr. Merrill, on the other hand, have the authority which is supposed to belong to "the man who has been there." Mr. Merrill, as American Consul at Jerusalem, has known every yard of the holy city for at least thirty years, and has seen many of the excavations and discoveries. Col. Conder has "walked in his socks" over the Sakhra, and lived at Jerusalem in the winters of 1873-5 and 1881-2. Moreover, he is of the corps of Royal Engineers, and whatever that corps says has always an air of authority. He takes his stand upon the monumental evidence, as laid bare by the researches of two other R.E.s, Sir Charles Warren and Sir Charles Wilson; he has a very poor opinion of the value of tradition, and he entertains strong views about scholars who, without his official experience, venture to meddle with the identification of disputed sites. Both he and Mr. Merrill deprecate the intervention of "eminent Biblical scholars" in disputes which can, in the opinions of both, be decided only by the monumental remains and the men who have long lived in the midst of them. The frequent disparagement of the laborious and sometimes brilliant work of Prof. G. Adam Smith which occurs in Col. Conder's pages is characteristic of the writer's attitude to such unauthorized meddlers; and he is scarcely less severe upon Prof. Sayce, and even ventures to dismiss Prof. Wellhausen's opinions on a question of pure Hebrew interpretation as "having nothing convincing to support them." Perhaps they have not, but we should not be disposed to take the verdict from Col. Conder. There is doubtless a good deal to be said for the objection against scholars who have made their name in other fields lending the weight of their reputations to support theories about subjects to which they have given but brief attention, compared with the lifelong studies of the men on the spot; but this objection hardly avails against Prof. Adam Smith. We regret the controversial tone adopted by Col. Conder the more because his own chief, the late Sir Charles Wilson, in his last book, adopted a scrupulously impartial attitude towards the various theorists; and where Col. Conder and Mr. Merrill "rush in" with positive statements, Wilson, with his calm judicial mind, "feared to tread." His dotted lines showing "positions assigned" and "alternative lines" of the second wall should be an example to more temerarious writers. He would never have claimed a kind of monopoly of authority upon the archaeology of Jerusalem against the intrusions of scholars who were not also excavators, but would have welcomed fresh light from any source. It is significant that Sir Charles Wilson's 'Golgotha,' published in 1906, is not referred to by Col. Conder, nor included in the list of authorities. The fact is that Wilson demolished the identification of Calvary with "Skull Hill," which we believe Col. Conder suggested as long ago as 1878; and Wilson was not above citing a mere "Biblical scholar," Prof. Sanday, as agreeing with him. Col. Conder, we are glad to see, repudiates the identification of the Holy Sepulchre with "Gordon's Tomb." General Gordon, he remarks, "had not then been long in Palestine.... He was not versed in Palestine archaeology, and the arguments brought forward by the supporters of this opinion are not convincing." Certainty is as far off as regarding the grave of Moses, and "no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day."

In spite of dogmatism and intolerance of rival opinions, Col. Conder's 'City of Jerusalem' is a useful, if not an interesting book. It gives the history as interpreted from the monumental vestiges by one who undoubtedly knows them well; and if it includes some of the author's theories on extraneous subjects, these do not materially affect the narrative. Fortunately the exploration of Jerusalem has been chiefly in English and American hands. Had it been reported only in German works, Col. Conder would have found his task harder, if the reference to "Deutschen Orient Gesellschaft" is a fair test of his acquaintance with German. He has, however, used Röhricht; but why has he altered Mujir ed-din into Mejir?

Whilst Col. Conder begins his history of Jerusalem at the beginning, and gives extracts from the singularly jejune letters of its "King" to the Pharaoh of his day, which are among the wearisome Tell el-Amarna correspondence, Mr. Merrill begins, "like most Hebrew books," at the latter end. He starts with Titus, and closely follows Josephus, that "maligned Jew" in whom he and Col. Conder place more confidence than is sometimes shown. Half his book is taken up with the Jerusalem of Josephus. The rest consists of detached essays on Akra, Ophel, Maktesh, Basilica, Nehemiah, &c. In no sense is the book a history of Jerusalem, but it is interesting and sometimes suggestive. Mr. Merrill is sceptical about "sites," distrusts tradition—which, it must be admitted, is notoriously shifting and contradictory in the Holy Land—will have nothing to do with any of the supposed identifications of Calvary or the Sepulchre, pours scorn upon Eusebius, and ridicules the "finding of the Cross." It is curious that he should dedicate his book to Sir Charles Wilson, who notably defended Eusebius against his detractors, and who, after weighing the evidence concerning the identification of the site of the Cross by Macarius, came to the judicious conclusion that while "there is no decisive reason for placing Golgotha and the Tomb at the places which were accepted as genuine in the fourth century, there is no distinct proof that they were not so situated." This seems to us a far worthier attitude than the almost ribald tone of jeering which Mr. Merrill adopts towards the traditional sites. His work suffers, in our opinion, by a total absence of what he calls "bibliographical details"; in other words, references to authorities, except Josephus and the books of the Hebrew Scriptures. He omits such safeguards because their use "necessitates the expression of opinions, which in many cases would not be a pleasant task." Is it for the same reason that he omits the accents on Greek words, lest he should be obliged to express an opinion on their value? When he transliterates Greek he puts ee for η and oo for ω with astonishing effects; and his style occasionally takes the form of a catechism, with the headings Q and A, which has an odd look in the midst of his stately pages. But he has much to say that is obviously the result of close and accurate study of the city he knows intimately, and his chapter on stonework and methods of building is especially interesting. The book is full of admirable maps, plans, levels, and other illustrations; and the same may be said of Col. Conder's less elaborate work.

MODERN FRENCH AND DUTCH PAINTING AT THE FRENCH GALLERY.

ALTHOUGH we regard the preposterous prices paid for the work of the Barbizon School as due to fashion and the collector rather than to any general extension of artistic taste, yet the presence of such pictures in the galleries is never unwelcome. Particularly valuable is the opportunity of seeing a tolerably representative gathering of the work of Matthew Maris, a painter who along with Rousseau, and in a measure Millet, resisted the temptation to wholesale manufacture for the market to which the others succumbed, and thus thinned down somewhat the substance of their admirable art.

The seventeen examples here brought together must constitute an appreciable part of the life-work of an artist whose pictures are extraordinarily rare when we consider the length of his career and the fact that almost from the first he proclaimed his mastery. The portrait of the artist (17), dated 1860, is in many ways the finest work here, and fine in a manner which we hardly expect from Matthew Maris. It shows that he also for a moment accepted the grandiose traditions of the Italian Renaissance, and was capable in this mood of free-handed brushwork as authoritative as that of any old master. The best portraits of our own Alfred Stevens have something of the same air of juggling once more with the weights handled by our mightier predecessors. This, the set purpose of Alfred Stevens, was never followed up by Matthew Maris; indeed the portrait here is, so far as our own knowledge goes, a solitary example. Montmartre (2) is one of the finest pictures of his more typical attitude, and, except for the extraordinary sincerity of both pictures, it has little in common with No. 17. Mastery is concealed by a choice of subject, a selection of scale which allows extremely elaborate draughtsmanship to pass at first sight as a rather ineffective, if mysterious, smudge. Examination, however, brings to light the wonderful unity and vividness of this slight web of paint. In imagination we are dragged scrambling along the sudden slopes, across the tortuous excavations of this marvellous stretch of waste land—so dreary, yet so busy with feverish line. This intimacy, which makes a stagnant backyard yield beneath the artist's gaze aspects of momentous import, has here endowed a few square inches of highly wrought paint with miraculous subtlety. It is the special note of Matthew Maris which no imitators have caught, and which he himself could not always secure in such perfection. Other works here show affinities with the more conscious romanticism of George Boughton. The Prince and Princess (6) or the Lady with the Goats (13) may be mentioned as examples of such less inspired efforts. Even in these, however, the delicate inventiveness of the colour scheme looks very distinguished compared with the rather crude literalism of M. L'hermitte's pastels which rather discordantly hang alongside. Of these The Reapers (47) and Midday Rest (51) are respectable examples of their author's honest, but rather uninspired picture making. Quite apart from such work as this, by which he is usually known, is his early landscape The End of the Day (61), a fine painting, with the dignity and restraint which belong to sound pictorial structure. Of the works by Joseph Israels the small water-colour A Sand Barge (19) is the best, while the remaining one of the four painters represented—M. Harpignies—has an irregular composition L'Isle de Sable Loire (38), but is very easy and spontaneous in execution.

FRENCH AND DUTCH MASTERS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

THE first picture at Messrs. Obach's Gallery to attract the visitor is Dupré's View at Berck-sur-Mer (4), a tour de force in the clever way in which the painter renders the flying planes of flat country by blending passages of meticulously painted tiny detail with other passages wherein the same modelling is generalized in a horizontal smear of striated pigment. In an exceptionally good Corot, Valley of the Seine (10), forms of more varied character emerge as imperceptibly from a similar central tone, which is more subtly whipped together. A Country Road (2), by Harpignies, attains a similar unity by the more obvious expedient of the flash of white road which casts everything else into tone. Rousseau's Italian Pass (27) is on its tiny scale a more downright piece of painting than any of these.

PATERSON'S GALLERY.

HERE is an exhibition of drawings (English, French, and Italian of the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries) wherein again works of the Barbizon School are prominent. The whole collection is very slight in character, consisting of the sort of drawing that no amateur would care for if he found it on the floor of a living painter's studio. This is not to imply that there is not intrinsic value in the few smudges of white and black chalk in which Gainsborough (5) reveals his habit of balancing the proportions of light, shadow, and half tone so as to secure the maximum of luminosity, or in the scrawls with which Rembrandt (21 and 31) casts down his first suggestions, which contain already the qualities of spaciousness and easy distribution of figures that are instinctive with him. A Fragonard after Vandyck (42) is more obviously accomplished to the eye of the layman, and there are two careful drawings by Rousseau (34 and 41).

THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

BY the acquisition by the nation at the eleventh hour of the 'Portrait of Christina, Duchess of Milan,' for 72,000*l.*, a new page in the history of the National Gallery has been written. This has only been made possible by the energetic steps taken by the Executive Committee of the National Art-Collections Fund and by Sir Charles Holroyd, whose efforts have been ultimately crowned with success by the munificent donation of 40,000*l.* by an anonymous contributor. There is, however, still a balance of about 6,000*l.* to be paid off. We venture to suggest that if a conversazione were given by the Fund at some large gallery a great portion of this sum would soon be found. Although the picture has now passed out of private hands, the Trustees of the National Gallery and the Director would perhaps agree to the removal of the panel after the Gallery closed one afternoon until the next morning. It will be remembered that the "Rokeby Velazquez," before it passed into the National Gallery, was publicly exhibited at the New Gallery, and in the North of England. If it were known that the Holbein would be seen out of the glass and frame at a reception given by the Fund, and its members and the subscribers to its purchase were invited, a large increase of membership would probably result. In fact, if a large enough hall were obtainable, a charge for admission might be made to the general public. Why should not the Academy offer the hospitality of its rooms for one evening? This does not seem an unreasonable suggestion when we remember that the 'Abstract of the Royal Charter as proposed for establishing the Royal Academy of Arts,' of 1755, states that such an Academy was to be founded "for the better cultivation, improvement, and encouragement of painting, sculpture, architecture, and the arts of design in general."

The Holbein was, to quote the Annual Report of 1880, "temporarily placed in the National Gallery" in that year, shortly after having been exhibited at the Old Masters Exhibition (No. 177). The panel, which measures 70 in. by 32 in., was, at the request of the Duke, sent to the Tudor Exhibition held in 1890 at the New Gallery (No. 92).

The sensational circumstances in which the picture has been saved for the nation have naturally brought to notice many facts which are not generally known or are often forgotten. The public at large is, doubtless, unaware that the sum of money annually voted by Parliament as a grant in aid for travelling and the purchase of pictures, not only for the National Gallery, but also for the National Gallery of British Art, rarely exceeds 5,000*l*. That sum was voted in 1907-8. In certain years the grant has been suspended, as was the case in 1886-87, following a grant of only 443*l*. for the previous year.

The Annual Report, which might well, we think, contain the details of the Estimates, which are published officially only in the Civil Service Estimates, Class IV., has just been published. It is stated that Frans Hals's 'Family Group' was "purchased from Mr. A. H. Buttery, acting on behalf of Lord Talbot de Malahide," and it is mentioned in the description of the picture that "the dunes of Overveen near Haarlem" are seen in the distance (Athenæum, No. 4218). Only £2,621 was obtained by private subscriptions towards the 25,000*l*. paid for the picture.

The various acquisitions of the past year are set forth at full length, and have been from time to time noted in these columns. Three of the pictures bequeathed by Mr. George Fielder have not yet been publicly exhibited. The appointment of Lord Redesdale as a Trustee is only the twentieth nomination in forty years; which argues well for the longevity of the Trustees of the Gallery. A welcome innovation is the list of pictures added to the collection during the last year, classified by schools. One hundred and twelve acquisitions of different kinds, including pictures, drawings, and water-colours, belong to the British School, nine to the French, three to the Flemish, four to the Dutch, and one to the Roman, Milanese, Venetian, and Florentine Schools respectively.

Owing to the dangerous nature of some of the materials used in the building of that part of the Gallery which was erected after designs by William Wilkins in 1832, it has been found necessary to close Rooms XII., XIII., XIV., XVI., and XVII. for re-construction. The important building operations which are now being undertaken to make all the rooms fireproof necessitate not only the temporary closing of these rooms, but also the removal of many of the least important of the pictures of the late Flemish, Dutch, Spanish, and French Schools. As far as possible the best pictures will remain on view, a large number of screens being used in the other rooms. Already the general appearance of Room X. has been much changed in this way.

THE CHAUCHARD LEGACY TO THE LOUVRE.

THE Louvre, by the death of M. Alfred H. Chauchard, one of the founders and chief proprietors of the Magasins du Louvre, has come in for a windfall which only occurs once or so in a century. The exact number of the pictures which now becomes the property of the French nation is not yet stated, but probably there are nearly 200. As they are all of importance, and will have to be housed in a room specially constructed for them, we can only wonder, remembering the congested state of the vast emporium, where they are to be placed. The last great collection of pictures, that of Thomy Thiéry, bequeathed to the Louvre in 1902, is stored away in one of the remotest quarters of the place. The present acquisition, if it is to be properly displayed—and M. Chauchard's executors will doubtless see to this—must lead to wholesale remodelling of some of the sections, and M. Chauchard has foreseen the expense of this by joining to his legacy, which is worth an immense sum, a very large donation to cover the cost of installation.

So far as pictures by French artists are concerned, the Chauchard bequest is the most extensive which has come to the Louvre, that of La Caze in 1853 and Thiéry in 1902 coming next. There are at least twenty-five examples (or, according to one writer, about forty) of Corot. The most famous of these include 'L'Amour Désarmé,' 'La Danse des Nymphes dans la Clairière,' 'La Danse Rustique à l'Entrée du Bois,' 'La Charette,' 'Le Matin à Ville d'Avray,' and 'Le Passage du Gué,' all of which are dealt with in the monograph on the artist by MM. Alfred Robaut and Moreau-Nélaton. Corot frequently repeated his titles, and most of those named above are familiar to students of this artist; but except to the few friends who were privileged to take part in his Saturday luncheons, M. Chauchard's Corots are almost unknown, being rarely, if ever, lent to public exhibitions.

The most famous, although perhaps not the finest, of the seven by J. F. Millet is 'L'Angelus,' which, originally sold for about 60*l*., was knocked down in the Sécrotan sale in 1889 for 553,000*fr*. It was then obtained by M. Antonin Proust, who was acting on behalf of those who desired that it should remain in France; but the French Government decided not to purchase the picture at this high price, and M. Proust handed it over to an American syndicate, who had been the underbidders. But the American Custom authorities claimed a duty of something like 7,000*l*., which they consented to waive on condition that the picture did not remain more than six months in America, and was not resold there. So the picture found its way back to Paris, and was purchased by M. Chauchard. Millet's 'La Bergère,' 'La Fileuse,' 'La Fermière,' and other well-known examples of his art are also in the collection.

There are seventeen pictures by Diaz, eight by Daubigny, seven by Th. Rousseau, and eighteen by Troyon. There are twenty-six by Meissonier, which include many famous works, such as the '1814' painted in 1864, 'Le Liseur Blanc,' and 'Le Liseur Noir.' The collection also includes four pictures by Decamps, two by Delacroix, six by Jules Dupré, seven by Ziem, and also works by Ch. Jacque, Henner, Gainsborough, Drouais, Nattier, and Comerre, in addition to the collector's own portrait by Benjamin Constant.

But pictures do not form the sum total of M. Chauchard's collections. He was the owner also of a remarkable series of ancient tapestries, and of the Barye bronzes, once the property of M. Henri Rochefort, who was one of this artist's earliest champions.

RECENT DISCOVERIES AT COLOGNE.

II.

THE MADONNA "MIT DER WICKENBLÜTE" IN THE MUSEUM.

THE case of this celebrated picture, long regarded as the masterpiece of Meister Wilhelm, and later of Hermann Wynrich, is very different from that of the Clarenaltar* for in the opinion of some experts the triptych is neither more nor less than a modern forgery, though this is disputed by Prof. Hansen.†

The picture was acquired by Canon Wallraf between 1817 and 1824, but nothing is known of its earlier history. In 1824 it was described in a list of the Wallraf pictures as "Byzantine"; two years later De Noël attributed it to Meister Wilhelm, and in 1828 Antoine Lorent was paid for restoring it. All this proves, according to Prof. Hansen, that there must have been an old painting on the panel, which was afterwards disfigured and reduced to its present condition by restoration. Dr. Poppelreuter, the present Director of the Gallery, however, thinks differently. His arguments, based upon a minute and searching examination of the painting, and supported by the competent judgment and technical knowledge of Herr Heinrich Fridt, outweigh all other contentions, and the proofs which he brings forward in support of the modern origin of the panel are remarkably strong, if not altogether conclusive.

In the opinion of these two experts the Cologne triptych, unlike the Clarenaltar, reveals no trace of fourteenth-century compositions beneath the surface painting—nothing, in short, but a groundwork of gesso in a comparatively fresh and well-preserved condition. This priming is visible in many parts of the panel through the surface cracks, to the discussion of which Dr. Poppelreuter devotes some space in his article dealing with the triptych.‡ These cracks, due, in all probability, to the use of modern pigments, are, he considers, essentially late in character,§ and of that nature which in modern painting is usually ascribed to an excessive use of bitumen. In the centre of the Cologne triptych is represented on a gold ground the Madonna in half-length, holding a flower between the finger and thumb of her left hand; the Infant Saviour, seated upon her right arm, caresses His Mother's chin with His right hand, and holds in His left a rosary. At the sides, on the inner panels of the shutters, are SS. Catherine and Barbara in full-length; and on the outside, on a black ground, the painter has represented a scene from the Passion—the Mocking and Crowning with Thorns—treated in a coarse and realistic manner, and contrasting strangely with the sentimental sweetness and grace of the compositions on the inner panels.

The whole picture, according to Dr. Poppelreuter, is a clever combination of various early prototypes, adapted with certain modifications and alterations by a nineteenth-century painter. The type of the Madonna is founded upon models (whether original or repainted) of the School of Cologne with which the painter must have been intimately acquainted in the collections in that city and elsewhere; for the exaggerated drawing of the high forehead and for the treatment of the hair he seems to have gone to the School of Westphalia for his inspiration. The type of the Infant Saviour is founded upon the type of the angels met with in many pictures of the School of Cologne; but Dr. Poppelreuter has made the interesting discovery that for the drawing and pose of the body of the Child, the painter appears to have taken as his model a picture now in the Gallery at Darmstadt, by a fifteenth-century

* See The Athenæum of June 5.

† Kölnische Zeitung, Nos. 31, 36, 41.

‡ 'Die Madonna mit der Wickenblüte,' Zeitschrift für christl. Kunst, Jahrgang XXI. No. 11.

§ For a contrary opinion, cf. a letter by Dr. Bode quoted in the Cicerone, Heft 10.

master of the Central Rhine, representing the Madonna and Child with saints. Here a saint is caressed by two children, and the painter of the Cologne picture copied the form and movement of the one, and the caressing gesture of the other, for his own composition of the Infant Saviour; but, unable in his work to introduce the natural action and pose of the two arms, as seen in the Darmstadt picture, he had recourse to the clumsy and defective treatment noticeable in the Cologne triptych, where the left arm of the Child is invisible, and the left hand is awkwardly introduced with the addition of the rosary.

For the figures of saints, the painter had again no lack of models around him, and Dr. Poppelreuter mentions, among others, a picture formerly in the Hüpsch Collection at Cologne, and now at Darmstadt, and two figures of saints formerly in the Boisserée Collection, and now in the Germanisches Museum at Nuremberg, while the coarse and exaggerated composition on the exterior of the shutters was evidently a pasticcio taken from a series of the Passion, and probably combined from several examples, since the subject was one very frequently treated, and with great variety of detail, in the schools of Cologne and Westphalia.

The Madonna "mit der Wickenblüte," as already stated, has no pedigree, but suddenly appears among the Wallraf pictures without the slightest clue as to its provenance. Dr. Poppelreuter believes it to have been the work of one of the painters who were engaged in restoring pictures at Cologne in the second decade of the nineteenth century, and he thinks it not improbable that Wallraf may have acquired it with the full knowledge that it was a clever imitation, though from the way in which it is mentioned in the lists of 1824 and 1826 it is clear that the fact was not known to those whom the Canon had appointed as custodians of the pictures. The German critic draws attention to the remarkable similarity in certain particulars between the triptych and an 'Adam and Eve' of 1818 by Ramboux, and he inclines to the belief that of all the painters working at Cologne in these years the one most likely to have produced the picture was Ramboux.*

It would undoubtedly be of considerable interest if the identity of the painter of this much-discussed picture could be established, though, short of the discovery of some written evidence on the subject, this seems hardly possible now. On the other hand, the question of modern origin could be settled, and at once, by an expert restorer. We trust that Dr. Poppelreuter will be able to follow up his very able statement by practical proofs.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on June 3rd the following pictures from numerous private collections: F. J. Goya, Portrait of a Bull-Fighter, in dark dress with white collar, 220*l.* R. Cosway, Portrait of Mrs. Rachel Mackenzie, wife of C. Mackenzie, Consul-General of Jamaica, with blue bow and coral necklace, in an oval, 115*l.* Mabuse, The Madonna, in green dress, holding the Infant Saviour, 110*l.* De Hooghe, an Interior, with two peasants before a fire, 304*l.* Romney, Portrait of a Lady, with her young daughter on her lap, 136*l.*

The same firm sold on June 4th the collection of pictures and drawings formed by the late Tom Nickalls. Pictures: D. Cox, Going to the Hay-Field, 682*l.*; Going to Market, 141*l.*; Among the Hills, 110*l.*; The Old Llangollen Road, 110*l.*; Taking Home the Herd, 115*l.*; J. F. Herring, sen., Seed-Time, 105*l.*; J. Phillip, The Huff: the original study, 131*l.*

The following pictures were from various properties: W. Shayer, sen., A Landscape, with peasant-women and cattle, near the edge of a wood, 123*l.* J. F. Herring, sen., The Stirrup Cup, 120*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

FROM July 8th for a month are promised at the Albert Hall the Second Exhibition of the Allied Artists' Association, which was inaugurated last year on democratic lines, to make it possible for painters to exhibit without passing the scrutiny of any hanging committee, or submitting to the payment of a heavy subscription. (These alternative modes of selection appear in practice to produce almost identical exhibitions.) At the A.A.A. the artists draw lots for their positions, and there is thus in theory ideal equality of opportunity. This ideal was not quite realized last year owing to the difficulty of hanging so enormous an exhibition in a few days. The executive, however, have learnt by experience, and it is expected this year that a show will be got together which is untamed by any process of weeding out, and in which the artist is represented by what he himself considers characteristic. There will also be improvements this year in the mode of hanging works, and the general appearance of the Exhibition. The idea is that while inevitably there will be much bad work, there may also come to light painting of merit different from that found in the usual exhibitions.

THE Medici Society has photographed Holbein's 'Duchess of Milan' for reproduction as a Medici Print, which, it is hoped, will appear in the autumn. The Society will publish immediately 'William Shakespeare,' after the panel now in the Memorial Hall, Stratford-on-Avon; 'Lady Hamilton,' after Romney's picture now in the Cranbury Park Collection; and 'The Concert,' after the painting by Terborch in the Kaiser Friedrich Museum, Berlin.

MR. W. STRANG STEEL, of Philiphaugh, has presented Sir William Allan's picture 'Heroism and Humanity' to the Glasgow Corporation Art Gallery.

THE sudden death is announced from Saint-Cast of the well-known decorative artist M. Eugène Bourgeois, who decorated the Orléans and Invalides stations in Paris. Better known to the majority of English travellers are his small pictures of picturesque parts of Normandy and Brittany in the Salle des Pas-Perdus of the St. Lazare Railway Station. Other examples of his work are in the Lille Museum and in the Petit Palais in the Champs Élysées.

At last Sunday's meeting of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts, at the Grand Palais, Paris, a number of "sociétaires" were elected, among whom were Mr. Shannon and Mr. Walter Crane.

THE Russian artist, Ivan Pranishnikoff, whose death is announced from Saintes-Maries-de-la-Mer, France, has been for over twenty years an occasional exhibitor at the French Salon; his 'Chevaux Cosaques,' and other pictures at the Exhibition of 1889 attracted a good deal of notice.

IN the Zeitschrift für Christliche Kunst (Heft 1) Father Joseph Braun, S.J., discusses an interesting fragment of a Jesse cope in the cathedral at Salzburg, which, to judge by the small illustration accompanying the article, is a fine example of opus anglicanum. Its connexion with the well-known fragments in the Victoria and Albert Museum and in the Musée des Tissus at Lyons is striking. The Salzburg cope is the most important example of early English embroidery in Germany. The writer considers that it dates from the second half of the thirteenth century, but its value appears not to have been recognized hitherto, for it hangs in the cathedral unprotected.

HEFT 2 of the same periodical contains an article by Dr. Keussen on the miniatures of an Antiphonary painted for the Clarenkloster at Cologne. He identifies three sheets in the Wallraf Richartz Museum as belonging to this volume, which was the gift of Heinrich von Cusin, who was a member of a patrician family at Cologne in the third quarter of the fourteenth century. A sheet in the Kestner Museum at Hanover, with a kneeling Franciscan nun, he believes to be part of the same book; the dimensions are very similar in all, and in style, technique and execution these four sheets are intimately connected. Among the miniatures of the Wallraf sheets is a kneeling Franciscan nun with her name inscribed—Margarete Königsdorf. She may have been identical with a widow of this name who is known to have been a benefactress to the Clarenkloster and may eventually have taken the veil there. Dr. Keussen's researches settle the origin of these sheets, and prove that the date of their production must have been the third quarter of the fourteenth century, the period, in all probability, when the great altar-piece for the Clarenkloster was also produced.

THE publishing firm of Schacht & Co., of Leipsic, announce a new international periodical for collectors, entitled Original und Reproduktion. The editor is Herr Hans Loose, and the first number will appear on July 1st.

THE Rashleigh Collection of Anglo-Saxon and English Coins and the Hazlitt Collection of Greek, Roman, Continental, British, and Colonial Coins have been catalogued by Messrs. Spink & Son for sale by auction at Messrs. Sotheby's in June and July respectively. Both these collections are on view at 17 and 18, Piccadilly, until the middle of June.

MR. H. J. L. J. MASSÉ writes from 37, Mount Park Crescent, Ealing, W.:—

"May I, through the columns of The Athenæum, ask if any possessors or connoisseurs of pewter will help me in correcting my book on 'Pewter Plate' by sending me, even on loan, rubbings or descriptions of any pewterers' marks on pewter in their possession? 'Pewter Plate' is shortly to be re-issued, with additions, improvements, and several corrections."

THE Royal Archaeological Institute has just issued an outline of the programme of the annual meeting, which will take place, as we have already stated, at Lincoln from July 23rd to July 30th. The organization of the meeting is in the hands of Mr. G. D. Harding-Tyler, Secretary of the Institute, whose offices are at 20, Hanover Square, W.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Production of Delius's 'Mass of Life' and of Stanford's 'Ode to Discord.'

MR. THOMAS BEECHAM produced 'The Mass of Life,' by Mr. Frederick Delius, on Monday evening, at his fifth concert. Last year he performed several of the works of Delius, and in all of them power was felt,

* Zeitschrift für christl. Kunst, No. 12, p. 369. The payment to Lorent for restorations in 1826 may, according to Dr. Poppelreuter, have had reference to some trivial repairs. The same writer appears to think that the painter of the Cologne triptych was identical with the restorer of the Clarenaltar, an opinion shared by Herr Fridt.

not only in the music itself, but also in the scoring. Thus at Sheffield 'Sea Drift' was given, and though much of it appeared forced, it still gave the feeling of a strong mind expressing itself in unfamiliar terms. 'The Mass of Life,' a work of large compass, creates a similar impression. Delius seems to revel in chromatic chords to an undue extent, and polyphonic writing in which clashing of notes is at times disturbing; also, he pays little regard to the compass of the human voice. The same was said of Beethoven, and even now, when the greatness and emotional power of the 'Choral' Symphony and the 'Solemn Mass' are recognized, those qualities, owing to the efforts of the singers to cope with uncomfortably high notes, are not fully felt. There are some wonderful pages in 'The Mass of Life': the opening chorus is strong and dignified, and the chorus 'Night Reigneth' most poetical; while in the various soli there are moments of great beauty. Then in soft passages for orchestra alone the delicate harmonies and exquisite colouring produce at times a magic effect. Much is impressive in the work—moreover, in all of it Delius is evidently sincere; there is no pose, no concession to public taste—so that one is content to suspend judgment on what makes a less ready appeal until the music has become familiar. Mr. Beecham deserves all praise for giving so interesting and original a novelty; at the same time it must be said that the difficult music required more rehearsals.

The North Staffordshire District Choral Society sang with firmness and courage, and the soloists, the Misses Gleeson White and Messrs. Webster, Millar and Stanley Adams, with all care. Of the solos, those for baritone were the most important, and these were interpreted with artistic skill by Mr. Charles W. Clark. But there were uncertain moments. The balance between voices and orchestra was at times unsatisfactory, the latter being frequently too loud. Yet, in spite of shortcomings, the performance was good enough to reveal a work of high purpose, and, in many respects, high achievement. In the programme-book the use of "Mass" in the title was stated to be misleading; the suggestion, therefore, that the work should be called 'A Message of Life' seems to us reasonable.

There were two novelties at the fifth concert of the New Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall, on Wednesday evening. One was a set of songs by Mr. Landon Ronald. He has written many clever, refined songs, but those in question show him in a more ambitious mood. There is a true touch of poetry in the music, while the orchestral colouring is most delicate. They were interpreted with artistic taste by Mrs. Henry J. Wood. Although all four were given in immediate succession, as if they formed a cycle, they are practically distinct.

The other novelty was a setting by Sir Charles Stanford of Mr. Charles L. Graves's 'Ode to Discord,' originally published in The Spectator. The poem is a skit on the music of the present day, and Sir Charles has illustrated it by introducing certain quotations more or less distorted from familiar works of composers of the past and especially of the present. We admire the skill displayed and the characteristic orchestration, the humour, also the judgment shown in not over-dotting the i's or crossing the t's. We take it that the poem is a satire on modern music, principally that of Richard Strauss and Claude Debussy, and the composer's aim was, of course, the same. It is, however, open to question whether it was wise to accentuate in this way some of what we may perhaps call weak points in men whose gifts are great, even if their methods are extravagant. As regards the public generally, the 'Ode to Discord' will, no doubt, be regarded merely as a huge joke, and it will amuse musicians who can follow the meaning and point of the music. The work is set for soli (Miss Gleeson White and Mr. Plunket Greene), chorus (the "Edward Mann" choir), organ, and orchestra, including a hydrophone and a monster drum. An excellent rendering was given under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Personal Recollections of Wagner. By Angelo Neumann. Translated from the Fourth German Edition by Edith Livermore. (Archibald Constable & Co.)—These recollections of one of the most enterprising of theatre directors give a graphic account of Wagner and his art-work from 1862, when, at Vienna, after forty-seven rehearsals, 'Tristan' was "finally set aside as utterly impracticable," down to Neumann's visit to Russia in 1889. He attended the Bayreuth Festival in 1876, and before leaving tried to persuade Wagner to let him give the 'Ring' at the Leipzig Stadttheater, of which, in collaboration with Dr. August Förster, he was musical director. Wagner, hoping to repeat the 'Ring' at Bayreuth in 1877, refused, but only for a time, to consider the matter. After many difficulties which caused much correspondence—on one occasion, indeed, negotiations were broken off—the complete 'Ring' was given for the first time outside Bayreuth. Neumann then conceived the idea of giving the work at Berlin. Here again, in spite of Wagner himself, who in matters of business was not an easy man to deal with, and notwithstanding hindrances of all kinds, the idea was carried out with success. This was in 1881.

The London campaign followed next year, and then was sown good seed, which, however, did not ripen till many years later. With regard to the cycles at Her Majesty's Theatre, there is an interesting account of Neumann's conversation with King Edward (then Prince of Wales). Owing to a personal note from Prince Frederick to his brother-in-law, an audience was granted. The Prince of Wales only promised to be present on the opening night of the first cycle, and the other three if possible; but Neumann adds that the Prince came "not only four nights, but actually eleven."

A natural suspicion attaches to reminiscences, for sometimes, when memory fails, imagination steps in. The greater part of the 'Recollections' in question consist, however, of quotations from letters to and from Wagner, also statements of facts. Some of the stories may be slightly coloured; for the rest, Neumann is a faithful recorder of a most interesting period. Miss Livermore's translation is excellent.

Musical Gossip.

HERR ALEXANDER BIRNBAUM, up to now conductor at the "Komische Oper" of Berlin, has been engaged by Mr. Hammerstein, director of the Manhattan Opera House.

MOZART'S 'Magic Flute,' which had not been heard at Paris for seventeen years, has been revived at the Opéra Comique. The work was first given at Paris in 1801 under the title 'Les Mystères d'Isis,' a strange mutilation of Mozart's masterpiece. It was not until 1865 that it was worthily presented by director Carvalho at the Théâtre-Lyrique, when Christine Nilsson impersonated the Queen of Night. Apart from the performance of the opera by the students of the Royal College of Music at the Lyceum Theatre in 1899, it has not, we believe, been heard in London since 1892. Why should not the opera be revived at Covent Garden with Madame Tétrazini as the Queen of Night?

A PRESENTATION to Dr. W. H. Cummings of his portrait, painted by Miss Betia Schebsman, took place at the Guildhall School of Music yesterday week. It was offered to him by Mr. George H. Heilbuth, C.C., Chairman of the Music Committee of the Court of Common Council, in the name of a large number of friends and admirers, as a token of appreciation of what the Principal of the School has done for music during his sixty years of public life.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

- MON.-SAT. Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
 MON. Madame Polak's Vocal Recital, 3, Steinway Hall.
 — Miss Dorothy Wiley's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
 — Mr. Geoffrey Comyn's Vocal Recital, 3.30, Aeolian Hall.
 — Miss Theresa Blum's Concert, 8, Steinway Hall.
 — Miss Maria Ricardi, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.
 TUES.-FRI. National Eisteddfod of Wales: Meetings at Albert Hall, 11 A.M.; Concerts at Queen's Hall, Wednesday to Friday, 8 P.M.
 TUES. Mr. Brabazon Lowther's Song Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.
 — Signora D'Este's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
 — Mr. Macmillan's Concert, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
 — Miss Elena Gerhardt's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
 — Mr. Arthur Newstead's Pianoforte Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
 WED. English String Quartet, 3, Bechstein Hall.
 — Mr. Victor Benham's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.
 — Madame Calvé's Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
 — Miss Isoline Harvey's Violin Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
 — Cathie Quartet, 8.15, Broadwood Rooms.
 THURS. Miss Leginska's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.
 — Miss Susan Strong's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
 — Madame Nordica's Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
 — M. Alex. Barjansky's Cello Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
 — Mr. Hans Neumann's Violin Recital, 8.30, Steinway Hall.
 FRI. Miss Elsie Mayfair's Violin Recital, 3, St. James's Hall.
 — Mr. Joan Lloyd-Powell's Pianoforte Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
 SAT. Handel-Mendelssohn Festival, Rehearsal, noon, Crystal Palace.
 — Mozart Society, 3, Portman Rooms.
 — Mr. F. Santavice's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
 — M. Jacques Thibaud's Violin Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
 — Mr. Platen Worth's Violin Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
 — Mr. Suravitch's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Queen's Hall (Small).

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

HIS MAJESTY'S (AFTERNOON THEATRE).—Revival of Henley and Stevenson's 'Admiral Guinea.'

To tell the plain truth, 'Admiral Guinea' does not bear revival. It contains one live character, "him as the ladies will have for their fancy man and take no denial," David Pew, pirate, rogue, and, despite his blindness, sensualist, but beside Pew his stage companions give the idea of half-finished sketches. It has all the marks of literature, but few of the virtues of the play. To the reader who does not know his theatre, its dialogue may seem pregnant and picturesque, its story exciting and well worked up. But the whole manner in which the plot is handled and the speeches are written is that of the novelist, not the playwright. At the Afternoon Theatre's production the tale did not get across the footlights, and David Pew, lurid as was the make-up and manner of his representative, Mr. James Hearn, did not magnetize his audience. We could have put up with all the old-fashioned machinery, the soliloquies and the long passages of rhetoric, if Stevenson and his colleague had so managed their scenes as to strike the imagination or grip the emotions. But there, through their ignorance of stage technique, they failed. Even the sleep-walking episode of the converted pirate chief, Capt. Gaunt, which might have been so effective, is sadly bungled, and Mr. Sass could make nothing out of it at His Majesty's.

CORONET.—Miss Horniman's Repertory Company in Sudermann's 'Vale of Content.'

PROBABLY it is its provincial atmosphere which has hitherto prevented 'Das Glück im Winkel' from being given in English on the London stage. The play describes with a meticulous faithfulness the routine of a local schoolmaster's life in Germany, and the dull narrow circle in which he moves. Yet in this piece Herr Sudermann handles just the sort of theme, and adopts just the sort of treatment which our public enjoys, and last Tuesday at the Coronet 'The Vale of Content' was received with genuine enthusiasm.

The story deals with one of those tragedies of silent suffering not infrequent in middle-class homes. The heroine is the wife of an elementary teacher, who is too wrapt up in his books and professional duties to see that she is pining for want of human companionship and love. Patiently and dumbly she endures the hum-drum round with no one to perceive that her emotions are being starved till there comes into her life a man of magnetic force and restless passions who longs to make her happy. He diagnoses only too clearly her condition, and urges her to break through her cramping environment. His declaration of love is to the woman like a cup of water to a parched traveller in a desert; but she has to make up her mind whether she can snatch joy for herself at the expense of others. There is her lover's wife, there is her own amiable husband, there is her blind little step-daughter, whose pathetic devotion to her has been for long her sole comfort. Can she hurt these innocent folk? On the other hand, is she to lose her last chance of love and freedom and a fuller life? Herr Sudermann decides the matter by bringing about an understanding between husband and wife, and opening the man's eyes to the loneliness of the woman and her hunger for affection. In other words, after stating his problem with a sincerity that carries his audience's emotions by storm he adopts one of those half-hearted sentimental settlements which are so popular. In this respect the drama might have been written for the English market, so ingeniously does it permit of the vicarious enjoyment of a passion that is rebellious, so pleasantly does it soothe the conventional conscience with an ending that is "happy."

The interpretation of the piece suggests that the standard of acting reached by Miss Horniman's stock company is decidedly high. Miss Darragh, who takes the part of the wife, is a player of exceptional emotional sensibility; hers is an extremely natural and moving performance. Charming, too, is Miss Hilda Potter as the little blind girl who has so acute a sense of hearing, while it would be hard to better the bluff downrightness of Mr. Jules Shaw as the lover. Mr. Henry Austin has the merit of not trying to render the husband too sympathetic.

GARRICK.—The Woman in the Case: a Play in Four Acts. By Clyde Fitch.

IN this piece Mr. Fitch seems to have resolved to outdo M. Bernstein at his own game—that is, the introduction of a certain brutality in stage effects, a reliance on characters or scenes of overpowering violence. Only the other day at the Garrick a typical example of M. Bernstein's art was presented in 'Samson,' wherein we were shown a husband—of rough, plebeian origin, it is true—half-strangling his wife's lover over a luncheon table. 'The Woman in the Case' has also its scene of savage unrestraint, but it takes place between two women. We see a young wife, in her eagerness to save her husband from execution on a charge of murder, living the life of the "half-world" with the woman who knows the truth of the affair, plying her with drink till she has wrested from her an admission of the hero's innocence, and then nearly throttling her in a spasm, half of triumph, half of disgust. It is a thrilling scene, led up to ingeniously, and full of clever devices for stimulating attention, but it is no more than a piece of theatrical mechanism, and runs counter to ordinary canons of taste. Moreover, it gives a dismal picture of "gay" life in America. If such spasmodic attempts at humour and recklessness in song and dance as Mr. Fitch's bohemians indulge in are at all realistic, then must bohemianism in New York be desperately dull in its vices. Nor again does this author's representation of the transports of the reunited wife and husband reveal virtue in a very pleasing light. She receives him while still in bed, and when the play concludes the husband is made to draw the curtains round the heroine and himself as they clasp in a fervent embrace.

If the play succeeds, it will owe its success to the sensational appeal of its third act; but strenuously as both Miss Grace Lane and Miss Violet Vanbrugh act in the long dialogue, the stage business might have been easily bettered. A good adviser could have suggested to Miss Vanbrugh the wisdom of varying and modulating her tones—of alternating, as Réjane would have done in the part of the adventuress, moods of comedy with those of gloomy reflection or maudlin sentiment; as it is her declamation is kept too much in one key. Miss Lane, too, though touching in her expression of the wife's agony at being parted from her husband, is never wholly convincing in her simulation of a "fast" woman's slang and loose behaviour, while her trick of creeping round the table when the revelation is about to be made, is both stagey and old-fashioned. It should be added that Miss Vanbrugh's portrait of the adventuress in externals and manners is extremely picturesque.

PLAYHOUSE.—A Merry Devil: a Florentine Farce. By James Bernard Fagan.

WHAT Mr. Fagan intended to do in this costume farce is obvious enough. With characters that plainly owe their inspiration to Shakespeare, with the Shakespearian apparatus of garden and palace and singing pages and love-lorn ladies, and an atmosphere of laughter and sentiment, he meant to give us as it were a second 'Twelfth Night.' Certainly there is much in the humours of his Capt. Bambazone, a fat, gluttonous, irascible rogue, who reminds us alternately of Toby Belch and Falstaff; in the follies of his timorous pedant, Count Spini, an Aguecheek turned poet; in the jests and tantrums of the proud beauty Madonna Giralda Capponi, a Beatrice when she is not a Kate the Curst; and in the persistence with which his Sir Philip Lilley, a Petruchio with an Englishman's haughtiness and a Quixote's gravity, lays siege to the lady; as well as in the plaintive music and gay dresses and setting of mediævalism, that cannot but provide pleasure and amusement. Where Mr. Fagan seems to have made a mistake, though even here, perhaps, he could quote chapter and verse in excuse, is in founding his whole plot on a rather sorry joke. And where, when this has been passed over, in concession to supposed sixteenth-century manners or ideas of fun, he falls short of his aims, is in being unable to prevent his story from dragging long before it reaches its foregone conclusion. Something of fantasy, the idyllic touch, and invention are missing, while at the same time the necessities of his scheme, all caused by that unfortunate joke, compel him to show both heroine and hero in a not wholly sympathetic light.

Madonna Giralda is a lady who thinks it fine sport to render her lovers ridiculous; and so, having persuaded the greedy Bambazone to make a meal which brings on acute indigestion, she expects her English suitor to share her enjoyment. Instead he rates her for her cruelty, and at once she determines on revenge. He shall imagine that the fat man is poisoned; she will, in a mock confession scene, throw herself on his mercy, and implore him to help her to dispose of the corpse; he shall go through the business of burial, and then find, amid the explosions of a whole crowd of spectators, that he has mistaken for Bambazone the carcase of a boar. The trick is carried through, and the Englishman, mortified at being made a laughing-stock, whips his Lady Disdain with a branch he tears from a tree. Once more she vows reprisals, and having secured that he shall be trussed up in her hall, she proposes to lay her whip across his shoulders. But her heart fails her in the moment of success; she sets him free and falls into his arms. Such is the story, in which it will be seen that the author allows both Giralda and her suitor to lose the respect of the modern playgoer. Nor does the episode of the buried pig seem to us nowadays very ludicrous, while the elaborate preparations made both for this scene and the heroine's final scheme of vengeance, severely tax one's patience.

Still, one thing may be said for Mr. Fagan's farce. It provides that past-mistress of comedy Miss Winifred Emery with one of the most telling parts she has had throughout her career. As Giralda she is able to employ all the resources of her versatile art. Her airs of coquetry, her hints of mischievousness, her appreciation of the ridiculous, quick changes of mood, and tirades of rage furnish in themselves a wealth of entertainment. Only less delightful is Mr. Cyril Maude's performance in the character of Bambazone. With a wonderful make up, he gets also the wheezy tones and the genial manner of corpulence. Mr. Aubrey Smith, who plays the stern Englishman, adopts just the appearance of Don Quixote, and preserves an air of grim determination which contrasts piquantly with his surroundings.

IRISH DRAMA.

COURT (IRISH NATIONAL THEATRE SOCIETY): The Playboy of the Western World, by J. M. Synge; and Devorgilla, by Lady Gregory.—The London season of the Abbey Theatre Company has been devoted largely to production of the works of Mr. Synge, and rightly so, for this young playwright, so early cut off, is the one author of brilliant dramatic talent which the revival in Irish literature has produced. First choice fell on the most hotly debated of all his plays, that comedy which is declared by some to have given a false view of the Irish peasant and his supposed tendency to romanticize crime and the criminal. Irishmen must be left to fight out the problem for themselves. All that English theatre-goers are concerned with is the keen sense of humour shown in the piece, the curious knowledge which its author seems to possess of Irish rural types and their ways and diction, and the high spirits which accompany what they suppose to be realism. The play has been dealt with already in these columns, and all that need be added here is that its picture of Irish manners and the music of its brogue delighted Monday night's audience at the Court, and that its fun and general air of liveliness were quickly appreciated. Even in the theatre it was possible to notice that rich and poetic imagery which Mr. Synge, copying from life, has put into the language of his Irish peasantry. The acting at the Court in this play could scarcely have been bettered. As Christy Mahon, the lad who thinks he has killed his father and so as a unique kind of criminal earns reputation and popularity—especially with the women—in the lonely village to which he has escaped, Mr. Fred O'Donovan was admirable, hitting off to a nicety the timidity and bashfulness which underlie the boy's boastful swagger.

Miss Maire O'Neill brought out the masterfulness of the innkeeper's young daughter, and made her very attractive also. Miss Sara Allgood revealed ripe talents for comedy in the part of the intriguing widow. In curious contrast was her performance in Lady Gregory's fairly impressive, but rather dreary one-act tragedy 'Devorgilla,' in which she represented a woman of rank, remorseful at having murdered her husband, and adopted rather too monotonous a method of diction.

'A NEW VARIORUM EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE': 'RICHARD III.'

YOUR reviewer says: "Although the present volume is the fifteenth of the series, it is but the fourteenth play—two editions of 'Macbeth' having appeared."

This is somewhat misleading, as it is the fact that 'Hamlet' is in two volumes, and not the two editions of 'Macbeth' which causes the number of volumes to be in advance of the number of plays dealt with.

As a matter of fact, the number of volumes is now sixteen—or, including the second edition of 'Macbeth' seventeen—while the number of plays dealt with is fifteen.

WALTER POWELL.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—A. J. G.—A. L. R.—W. B.—R. S.—C. B.—Received.
J. P. S.—Not suitable for us.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

WE cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

WE do not undertake to give the value of books, china, pictures, &c.

THE ATHENÆUM.

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS

5 Lines of Pearl..	0 3 6
75 " " (Half-Column)	1 16 0
A Column	3 3 0
A Page	9 9 0

Auctions and Public Institutions, Five Lines 4s., and 8d. per line of Pearl type beyond.

IN THE MEASUREMENT OF ADVERTISEMENTS, CARE SHOULD BE TAKEN TO MEASURE FROM RULE TO RULE.

Advertisements across Two Columns, one-third extra beyond the space occupied, the first charge being 30s.

JOHN C. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
The Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENT	690
AUTOTYPE CO.	690
BATSFORD	715
BELL & SONS	712
BISHOP'S VARALETTES	714
BLACK	715
CATALOGUES	690
EDUCATIONAL	689
EXHIBITIONS	689
GREEN & SONS	715
HEINEMANN	715
INSURANCE COMPANIES	714
LANE	715
LECTURES	689
LONGMANS & CO.	692
MACMILLAN & CO.	692
MAGAZINES, &c.	714
METHUEN & CO.	713
MISCELLANEOUS	690
MURRAY	691
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS	692
PRINTERS	690
RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY	716
SALES BY AUCTION	690
SHIPPING	714
SITUATIONS VACANT	689
SITUATIONS WANTED	690
SMITH, ELDER & CO.	714
SOCIETIES	689
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	690

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

VOL. I. READY NEXT WEDNESDAY, 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE HANOVERIAN QUEENS OF ENGLAND.

By ALICE GREENWOOD.

With 2 Photogravure Plates and a Map.

This work is a continuation of Strickland's 'Queens,' which ends with Queen Anne. The first volume deals with Sophia Dorothea (wife of George I.) and Caroline of Ansbach (Queen of George II.). The second volume, Charlotte (Queen of George III.), Caroline of Brunswick (Queen of George IV.) and Adelaide (Queen of William IV.).

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 4to, 15s. net.

MODERN HOMES.

Selected Examples of Dwelling-Houses Described and Illustrated.

By T. RAFFLES DAVISON, Hon. A.R.I.B.A.

With a Foreword by Sir ASTON WEBB, R.A., and nearly 300 Illustrations, chiefly from Pen-Drawings by the Author.

A book of typical specimens of modern country-house architecture, which should appeal to all who are interested in modern architecture, or who are contemplating building.

MISS KAYE-SMITH'S NEW SUSSEX STORY.

Cloth, 6s.

STARBRACE.

By SHEILA KAYE-SMITH.

"A very strong and arresting study in human cross-strains...in every way worthy of the author of 'The Tramping Methodist.'"—Glasgow Herald.

"One of the most vivid and imaginative stories which we have come across for many months."—Country Life.

JUST PUBLISHED, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON'S LURE.

An Anthology of Prose and Verse Passages bearing on London.

By HELEN and LEWIS MELVILLE.

With Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers designed by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

"Altogether this is a delightful book; in its pages you see London with the eyes of those who have felt its enduring fascination, and have sought to give expression to its inexhaustible variety."—Daily Telegraph.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Newly Translated, with Introduction and Notes,

By E. E. C. GOMME, B.A.

An entirely new and literal translation, chiefly from the Parker MS., but extracts have been made from the other MSS. wherever the difference of phraseology or fact justified their insertion. A very elaborate index is a special feature of this edition.

READY NEXT WEDNESDAY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A HISTORY OF COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION.

An Outline Sketch.

By LEWIS F. ANDERSON, Ph.D.

Although the work of an American educationist, the interest of this work is not by any means confined to the United States, as it deals very largely with English and European Educational History.

NEW EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

NOW COMPLETED IN 3 VOLUMES.

MASON'S NEW ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

MARS. Based on Mason's English Grammars. Revised and augmented by A. J. ASHTON, M.A., Examiner in English to the College of Preceptors.

NOW READY. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MASON'S SENIOR GRAMMAR.

NOW READY. Crown 8vo, 2s.

BELL'S FIRST GERMAN READER

By L. B. T. CHAFFEY, M.A. With Themes for Retranslation, and a Vocabulary.

This volume is designed to follow the 'First German Course' by the same Author.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS

A NEW NOVEL BY HILAIRE BELLOC, M.P.

A CHANGE IN THE CABINET is Mr. BELLOC's New Novel, to be published on June 17. It is one of high politics, and it will be the novel of the season. Please order it at once. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A NEW BOOK BY C. F. G. MASTERMAN, M.P.

THE CONDITION OF ENGLAND is the title of Mr. MASTERMAN's New Book, which is one of enthralling interest and indispensable to the student of the new social and industrial conditions. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TURKISH PEOPLE, by LUCY GARNETT, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net, is a description of the life and customs of the modern Turks.

THE PYRENEES, by HILAIRE BELLOC, M.P., contains many Maps and Plans by the Author, and is published at 7s. 6d. net. It is historical, descriptive, reminiscent, anecdotal, practical, geographical, political, and literary.

Two New Volumes of the "Arden Shakespeare" are now ready. HENRY VI., Parts I. and II. Edited by H. C. HART and C. K. POOLER. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net each.

IN UNKNOWN TUSCANY, by EDWARD HUTTON, with Illustrations in Colour, demy 8vo, 7s. 6d., is an account of a summer spent among the peasants in Southern Tuscany. It is full of delightful descriptions of the Italian country side.

MESSRS. METHUEN have just published a New Novel by M. E. FRANCIS, entitled GALATEA OF THE WHEATFIELD, crown 8vo, 6s. This delightful book is highly popular. They have also published Mr. R. H. BRETHERTON's New Novel, AN HONEST MAN, and a New Novel by MARTIN L. SWAYNE, entitled THE BISHOP AND THE LADY.

BARBARY SHEEP. By ROBERT HICHENS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. A new novel of the Sahara, where cultivation merges into the vast desolation which fascinates the European. Here the woman meets the desert man who would lead her farther. How far she goes is the theme of the story. A Second Edition is ready.

SET IN SILVER. By C. N. and A. M. WILLIAMSON. With 4 Illustrations in Colour and others from Photographs. Crown 8vo, 6s. This is a most entrancing story of motoring in England, in which topography and love are delightfully blended.

On June 17 will be published the following books:—TYROL AND ITS PEOPLE. By CLIVE HOLLAND. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. THE SPIRIT OF THE DOWNS. By ARTHUR BECKETT and illustrated by STANLEY INCHBOLD. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. EUROPE IN RENAISSANCE AND REFORMATION. By M. A. HOLLINGS, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

GENERAL LITERATURE

NAPOLEON'S MARSHALS. By R. P. DUNN-PATTISON. With 20 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. "Written with admirable balance of narrative and appreciation. The whole band stands dramatically defined—a marvellous galaxy of military talent."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BLUE BIRD: a Fairy Play in Five Acts. By MAURICE MAETERLINCK. Translated by A. TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS. Fcap. 8vo, deckle edges, 3s. 6d. net. [Second Edition.] "We remain spellbound by the charm of the play. It will haunt its readers for many a day."—Times.

ENCHANTERS OF MEN. By ETHEL COLBURN MAYNE. With 24 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. Contains vivid studies of twenty-three beautiful, witty, and fascinating women. "The book is written with vivacity and succeeds in giving us living portraits."—Standard. "Miss Mayne's writing is in the best meaning of the word 'racy,' and is full of fragrance and a quivering eagerness to win sympathy for women as women."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BRETONS AT HOME. By FRANCES M. GOSLING. With 12 Illustrations in Colour by GASTON FANTY LESCARE and 32 from Photographs. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. A charming book, descriptive of Breton peasant life, with its rich harvest of legend and history. It is profusely illustrated in colour and from photographs. "A keenly sympathetic picture of the lives of the simple Breton peasant folk."—Daily Mail.

"There has, perhaps, never been a more delightful account of the Bretons and their land from an English pen."—Manchester Courier.

A SUMMER IN TOURNAINE. By FREDERIC LEES. With 12 Illustrations in Colour by MAXWELL ARMFIELD, and 87 from Photographs. Also a Map. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. This magnificently illustrated book is a complete and absorbing description of France's most delightful province. "At once accurate in topography, informing in history, appreciative in art, and complete in design."—Liverpool Post. "An extremely agreeable book, and sufficiently comprehensive as an introduction to Tournai."—Daily Mail.

MY MEMOIRS. By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. In 6 vols. crown 8vo, 6s. each. Volume VI. This volume completes the translation of this great book.

WALKS IN PARIS. By GEORGES CAIN. Translated by A. R. ALLINSON. With 118 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. This is a delightful medley of description, gossip, and antiquarian lore. "A delightful book, vivaciously translated."—Morning Leader. "An absolutely bewitching book, as full of fact as it is of fun."—Westminster Gazette.

DRUGS AND THE DRUG HABIT. By H. SAINSBURY, M.D. F.R.C.P. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. The object of this book is to define the position of the drug, to show its use and its abuse, and to discuss the broad lines upon which prevention and cure of disease should proceed.

ENGLISH COSTUME. By G. CLINCH. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Antiquary's Books.] This important subject is traced from prehistoric times to the eighteenth century.

DANTE IN ENGLISH LITERATURE. By PAGET TOYNBEE, M.A. D.Litt. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 21s. net. An account of the connexion of Dante with English literature, quoting all the references to the great poet from Chaucer to the death of Cary in 1844.

CRIMINAL TYPES IN SHAKESPEARE. By AUGUST GOLL.

Translated by Mrs. CHARLES WEEKES. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. This book reviews the great criminals of the plays, and shows how Shakespeare, by his genius, was fully up to the modern standard of criminal psychology.

A HOLIDAY IN CONNEMARA. By STEPHEN GWYNN, M.P. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. "A sunny human book, full of pretty word pictures, and studied with natural stories. Everywhere the book is touched with sympathy and insight."—Daily Telegraph.

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE ROYAL NAVY. By DAVID HANNAY. Vol. II. 1689-1815. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. This is the second and completing volume of Mr. Hannay's well-known history of the Royal Navy. It commences with the year 1689, and carries the history down to the year 1815.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF IGNEOUS ROCKS. By ALFRED HARKER, M.A. F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College. With 112 Diagrams and 2 Plates. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

RAMBLES IN SUSSEX. By F. G. BRABANT. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The rambles are real ones, and include the whole county. The book describes the scenery, the old buildings, the historical and literary associations. It is finely illustrated.

MONMOUTHSHIRE. By G. W. WADE, D.D., and J. H. WADE, M.A., Authors of 'Somerset.' With 32 Illustrations and 2 Maps. Small pott 8vo, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net. [Little Guides.]

FICTION

SET IN SILVER. By C. N. and A. M. WILLIAMSON, Authors of 'The Lightning Conductor.' With 4 Illustrations in Colour. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The delightful authors are here found at their best as brilliant writers of romantic fiction."—Scotsman. "It is a thoroughgoing Williamson book. It wakens and quickens love for the happy out of doors."—Daily Chronicle.

BARBARY SHEEP. By ROBERT HICHENS, Author of 'The Garden of Allah.' Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition.]

"The three chief characters are drawn with the finest strength and naturalness; they fit perfectly into the astonishing background. Mr. Hichens has done nothing better."—Morning Leader.

"Here is a clear little story, beautifully told, which is instinct with drama from the first page to the last."—Daily Mail.

WATCHERS BY THE SHORE. By J. E. PATTERSON, Author of 'Fishers of the Sea.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready June 24.]

THE LIGHTNING CONDUCTOR. By C. N. and A. M. WILLIAMSON. Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, 1s. net. [Second Edition.]

THEIR OXFORD YEAR. By OONA H. BALL, Author of 'Barbara Goes to Oxford.' With 16 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. "Descriptive, topical, and romantic interests are blended."—Glasgow Herald.

GALATEA OF THE WHEATFIELD. By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. Blundell), Author of 'Hardy-on-the-Hill.' Crown 8vo, 6s. "All the characters have life and interest, and the writing is as delightful as all this author's writing."—Observer.

AN HONEST MAN. By R. H. BRETHERTON, Author of 'The Mill.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BISHOP AND THE LADY. By MARTIN LUTRELL SWAYNE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

METHUEN & CO. 36, Essex Street, London, W.C.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

Large post 8vo, 6s. net.

A THREE-FOOT STOOL.

By PETER WRIGHT.

Times.—"A literary Oxonian turned Western cow-rancher—a conjunction to raise hopes which the reader will find well fulfilled."

Globe.—"This entertaining volume should appeal to many. Those who wish to make the cowboy's acquaintance cannot do better than buy the racy 'Three-Foot Stool.' They will not regret their purchase."

Small demy 8vo, 9s. net.

ESSAYS ON SHAKESPEARE AND HIS WORKS.

Edited from the MSS. and Notes of a Deceased Relative, by Sir SPENSER ST. JOHN, G.C.M.G., of H.M.'s Diplomatic Service (retired), Author of 'Hayti: or, the Black Republic,' &c.

Standard.—"The book is well written, and displays not merely wide reading, but considerable independence of judgment."

A NEW NOVEL.

THE WOODEN HORSE.

By HUGH WALPOLE.

Standard.—"Mr. Walpole, in his first book, has achieved a success which many veterans of the craft have failed to attain.... A writer who should go far."

RE-ISSUE OF THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN and SIDNEY LEE.

IN TWENTY-TWO VOLUMES. Cloth, gilt top, 15s. net each; half-morocco, marble edges, 21s. net each.

Vols. I.—XVI. Abbadie—Robins, now ready; and a Volume will be issued each month until the completion of the Edition in December, 1909.

Times.—"We are all proud of the 'Dictionary,' and few, if any, of us could now do without it."

Daily Telegraph.—"This new and marvellously cheap re-issue."

* * * Prospectus, with specimen pages, post free on application.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO.
15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Magazines, &c.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine Street, London, W.C., JUNE 12, contains:—
CHURCH OF ST. BERTRAND DE COMMINGES (with Illustrations).

THE TAXATION OF LAND.

ARCHITECTURE AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.—IV.

THE INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS: ELECTION OF COUNCIL AND OFFICERS.

ST. NICHOLAS HOSPITAL, HARBLEDOWN.

THE CONCRETE INSTITUTE.

NOTES FROM FRANCE.

ILLUSTRATIONS:

LATE RENAISSANCE CHURCHES OF LONDON.—VI.

ST. ANNE'S, LIMEHOUSE;

DESIGN FOR A BRIDGE FOR A COMMERCIAL CITY;

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION BUILDING, MANCHESTER;

HOUSE AT BROMLEY, KENT.

ALSO SEE

THE BUILDER of May 15, page 586, for Conditions of a Competition for a FOUNTAIN for a PUBLIC GARDEN.

The Proprietors of the Builder offer a

FIRST PRIZE OF £20

and a

SECOND PRIZE OF £10

for the two best DESIGNS for a FOUNTAIN for a PUBLIC GARDEN. Drawings are to be sent in by JUNE 28. The award will be made by the Editor of the Builder, in conjunction with Prof. Lethaby and Mr. Walter Cave, who have kindly consented to act as joint assessors.

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all News-agents.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE:

Its Past, its Present, and its Future.

Edited by A. F. POLLARD, M.A.

Pp. 896, 5s. net.

Fifteen Special Contributors, and over a Hundred Authorities in all parts of the Empire have collaborated in its production.

LEAGUE OF THE EMPIRE,

Caxton Hall, Westminster; and all Booksellers.

UNIVERSAL BIBLIOTHEK AND AUTEURS CÉLÈBRES.

The entire selection of the popular German Series UNIVERSAL BIBLIOTHEK is on view for sale at MUDIE'S, 3d. per part. Also the well-known French Series, AUTEURS CÉLÈBRES, at 8d. per part. Full Lists of both on application.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY, LTD., 30-34, New Oxford Street, W.C.

Shipping.

PLEASURE CRUISES.

SPITZBERGEN.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 5.

JULY 1 to JULY 27.

SPITZBERGEN, NORWAY, &c.

Fares from 30 guineas.

NORWAY.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 6.

JULY 29 to AUGUST 11.

No. 7.

AUGUST 13 to AUGUST 26.

THE NORWEGIAN FJORDS.

BY

Fares from 12 Guineas.

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT "VECTIS."

SEASICKNESS CAN BE CURED.

We are quite satisfied, from the numerous tests we have made, and from the Testimonials received, that we have discovered an infallible preventative of Seasickness, Trainsickness, &c., in ZOTOS.

ZOTOS is contained in small capsules of gelatine, quite tasteless, easily swallowed whole, and readily soluble. Our Booklet, 'How Seasickness is Prevented,' with Pamphlet of Testimonials, sent free on request.

ZOTOS, LTD., 32, Theobalds Road, London, W.C.

Insurance Companies.

HOLIDAY SEASON.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS, SICKNESS,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY, AND
FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

Capital (fully subscribed), £1,000,000. Claims paid, £5,600,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

EVERY MAN

Whose estate will be liable for duty should read

A POPULAR FALLACY.

Sent post free on application to the

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

48 Gracechurch Street, London.

HIGHEST AWARDS.

CORK, 1883. LIVERPOOL, 1886. PARIS, 1886. ADELAIDE, 1887.

PARIS, 1889. CHICAGO, 1893. PARIS, 1900. ST. LOUIS, 1904.

FRANCO-BRITISH, 1908.

OLD BUSHMILLS.

Have you tried this--the Prize-Winning Whisky?

From all Wine Merchants.

Address of nearest Agent sent on application.

"OLD BUSHMILLS" DISTILLERY CO., LTD.,

20, Mark Lane, E.C.

IS URIC ACID MAKING YOU ILL?

MISLEADING SIGNS OF COMING GOUTINESS.

Do you suffer from pain after meals, indigestion, flatulence, and heartburn? Are your nerves shaky, your spirits low, and your limbs often cold and numb? Is your temper irritable, are you subject to pains and swellings in the joints, "tingling" or dull aches and sharp pains or stiffness in the muscles? Are you troubled with irritation and burning on the skin, and small lumps on arms, ankles, outer rim of ear, or eyelids?

If you have the above symptoms gout is in your system.

THE WAGES OF NEGLECT.

Such symptoms show that your liver and kidneys have, to some extent, ceased in their vital operation of preventing the waste product, uric acid, getting into the blood, and that unless the error is rectified you are on the high road to one or other of the serious uric acid diseases, such as gout, rheumatic gout, and gouty rheumatism, (pain, inflammation, stiffness, and swellings, chiefly in the joints), gouty eczema (affecting the skin), lumbago (persistent and intense pain in the loins), sciatica (acute pain extending from hips down thigh and knee, often causing lameness) stone and gravel (crystalline uratic deposits in the kidneys and bladder, causing agonizing pains and prostrating illness), and neuritis (numbness or tingling in the muscles of the arm, developing into very severe pain).

Your remedy lies in taking Bishop's Varalettes and in taking them immediately. Uric acid accumulates with steady and unrelenting persistence, and you will never cease to regret your neglect if you once let any of its painful maladies get a firm hold.

In the case of uric acid the means of prevention is also the only means of relief. This is proved by the wonderful efficacy of Bishop's Varalettes in cases where mistreatment or neglect has allowed uric acid poisoning to gain a strong hold. The gouty subject in this predicament may place implicit reliance on Bishop's Varalettes for removing the whole of the clogging waste substances from the system, and affording speedy relief from pain, swellings, and inflammation.

A VALUABLE BOOKLET.

For the guidance of all who have their health to consider, the makers of Bishop's Varalettes have issued a very interesting little book on the whole subject of uric acid ailments—how to avoid and relieve them.

An important feature is a complete dietary, telling what to eat, drink, and avoid, and how to secure immunity from uric acid troubles.

This booklet also convinces you that Bishop's Varalettes are the perfect remedy for all gouty ailments.

A copy will be sent willingly to any address, post free, on application to Alfred Bishop, Ltd. Manufacturing Chemists, 48, Spelman Street London, N.E. Ask for Booklet V.

Bishop's Varalettes may be had of chemists at the following prices:—25 days' treatment, 5s. bottles, 2s.; vials, 1s.; or from the makers address as above. Bishop's Varalettes dissolve instantly in any beverage, and are quite tasteless.

Bishop's Varalettes may be had of the leading chemists in every country. Our principal general Agents abroad are:—

AUSTRALIA.—Potter & Birks, 1½, Macquarie Place, Sydney, N.S.W.

INDIA.—Mr. W. Moore, c/o Grindlay Groom & Co., Bombay.

UNITED STATES.—Lehn & Fink, 120, William Street, New York.

SPAIN.—Foye y Gimenez, Calle Gerona, 4 pral, Barcelona.

FRANCE.—Roberts et Cie, 5, Rue de la Paix, Paris.

RUSSIA.—Mr. F. Bremmel, Serpoukhovskaya Street, 17, St. Petersburg.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. Arthur Rackham's New Illustrations.

Mr. HEINEMANN has pleasure in announcing that the Edition de Luxe on Hand-Made Paper, limited to 1,000 Numbered Copies, of Mr. W. L. COURTNEY'S adaptation of UNDINE, illustrated by ARTHUR RACKHAM, R.W.S., has been fully subscribed for by the Booksellers, to whom orders should be sent.

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C

BLACK'S BEAUTIFUL BOOKS.

NEW VOLUMES.

ESSEX. Painted by BURLEIGH BRUHL, R.B.A. Described by A. R. HOPE MONCRIEFF. Containing 75 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour and a Sketch Map. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price 20s. net.

HAMPSHIRE. Painted by WILFRID BALL, R.E., Illustrator of 'Sussex,' in the same Series. Described by the Rev. TELFORD VARLEY. Containing 75 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour and a Sketch Map. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price 20s. net.

LAUSANNE. Painted by J. HARDWICKE LEWIS and MAY HARDWICKE LEWIS. Described by FRANCIS H. GRIBBLE. Containing 20 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price 7s. 6d. net.

INNS OF COURT. Painted by GORDON HOME. Described by CECIL HEADLAM, M.A. Containing 20 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour and a Plan. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price 7s. 6d. net.

WORCESTERSHIRE. Painted by THOMAS TYNDALE. Described by A. G. BRADLEY. Containing 24 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour and a Sketch Map. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price 7s. 6d. net.

THE HEART OF SCOTLAND. By A. R. HOPE MONCRIEFF. Containing 24 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour by SUTTON PALMER, mostly taken from 'Bonnie Scotland,' and a Sketch Map. Crown 4to, cloth, gilt top. Price 7s. 6d. net.

DUTCH BULBS AND GARDENS. Painted by MIMA NIXON, Described by UNA SILBERRAD and SOPHIE LYALL. Containing 24 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth. Price 7s. 6d. net.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

J O H N C A V E.

A Novel. By W. B. TRITES.

If you like Pierre Loti, Flaubert, Anatole France, Dostoyevsky—then you will probably like

J O H N C A V E.

TREHERNE, London.

B. T. BATSFORD'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

READY JUNE 14.

Crown 8vo, artistically bound in linen, 5s. net.

THE ARTS CONNECTED WITH BUILDING. Lectures on Craftsmanship and Design delivered at Carpenters' Hall, London Wall, for the Worshipful Company of Carpenters, by R. W. SCHULTZ, C. F. A. VOYSEY, E. GUY DAUBER, LAURENCE A. TURNER, F. W. TROUP, A. ROMNEY GREEN, M. H. BAILLIE SCOTT, CHAS. SPOONER, and J. STARKIE GARDNER. Edited by T. RAFFLES DAVISON. With 98 Illustrations of Old and Modern Work.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Large 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, 12s. 6d. net.

THE ARCHITECTURE OF THE RENAISSANCE IN ITALY. A General View for the Use of Students and others. By WILLIAM J. ANDERSON, A.R.I.B.A. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with many new Illustrations. Containing 70 Collotype and other Plates and 110 Illustrations in the Text.

"Should rank amongst the best architectural writings of the day."—Edinburgh Review.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A WORK OF GREAT IMPORTANCE.

2 vols. 4to, handsomely bound in buckram gilt, 3l. 3s. net.

MEDIÆVAL ARCHITECTURE. Its Origin and Development. With Lists of Monuments and Bibliographies. By ARTHUR KINGSLEY PORTER. Containing upwards of 1,000 pages of Text. With 291 Full-Page Plates reproduced from choice Photographs or from Drawings, including many made expressly for the Work.

This important contribution to the true understanding and appreciation of the great master works of Gothic Architecture is characterized by wide research, sound scholarship, and criticism of the highest order.

The FIRST VOLUME tells the story of the lingering death of classic art in the Early Christian and Byzantine periods, and of the birth of the new Mediæval spirit among the Carolingians and Lombards, and forms an exhaustive and critical study of the origins of Gothic and Romanesque.

The SECOND VOLUME treats of the evolution of the Gothic style; it traces the influences contributed by Normandy; the obscure beginnings of the Romanesque of the Ile de France; the surprising development during the Twelfth Century; the culmination of Gothic art; the transformation into Flamboyant; and finally, the passing away of Mediæval Architecture in the new era of the Renaissance.

Illustrated Prospectuses sent free on application

B. T. BATSFORD, 94, High Holborn, London.

T H E S L I N G.
PART III.

Remarks in Connexion with Lectures delivered in the Royal Institution,

AND IN

The Institution of Civil Engineers,
November, 1908, to April, 1909.

BY

WM. LEIGHTON JORDAN.

One Shilling net.

London:

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., LTD.

THE NEW DARWINISMTHE MAKING OF SPECIES

BY

DOUGLAS DEWAR and FRANK FINN

15 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net

[Ready on Wednesday]

The Publisher believes that this work will effect a revolution in biological thought only a little less marked than that wrought fifty years ago by 'The Origin of Species.' The authors are true disciples of Darwin. They seek not to destroy but to re-vivify his great hypothesis. They present it in the form compelled by new discoveries

A NEW POETA VISION OF LIFE

Poems

[Now ready]

By DARRELL FIGGIS

With Introduction by G. K. CHESTERTON

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net

JOHN LANE, THE BODLEY HEAD, W

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

In 2 royal 8vo vols. price £2 2s. net.

The Scottish
Grey Friars.

BY

WILLIAM MOIR BRYCE.

With Photogravures, Plates, and Illustrations throughout the Text.

Vol. I. HISTORY.

Vol. II. DOCUMENTS.

WILLIAM GREEN & SONS,

2 and 4, St. Giles Street, Edinburgh.

A SELECTION FROM THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S LIST.

BIBLICAL.

ANGUS AND GREEN.

THE BIBLE HANDBOOK: an Introduction to the Study of Sacred Scripture. By JOSEPH ANGUS, M.A. D.D. New Edition, Revised and partly Re-written by S. G. GREEN, D.D. Cheap Popular Edition. 848 pages, large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; half paste-grain, 4s. 6d. net; half-morocco, 7s. 6d. net; full tree-calf, 10s. net.

S. G. GREEN.

HANDBOOK TO THE GRAMMAR OF THE GREEK TESTAMENT. Together with a Complete Vocabulary, and an Examination of the Chief New Testament Synonyms. By S. G. GREEN, D.D. Revised and Improved Edition. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A COMPLETE VOCABULARY OF THE GREEK TESTAMENT. With a Collection of Synonyms. By S. G. GREEN, D.D. Demy 8vo, 2s.

A BRIEF INTRODUCTION TO NEW TESTAMENT GREEK. By S. G. GREEN, D.D. 1s. KEY to the above Book, by Prof. S. W. GREEN, 1s. The two volumes in one, 1s. 6d.

A HANDBOOK TO OLD TESTAMENT HEBREW. Containing an Elementary Grammar of the Language, Reading Lessons, Exercises, and Notes. Edited by S. G. GREEN, D.D. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BY-PATHS OF BIBLE KNOWLEDGE.—1s. each net.

Sayce.—FRESH LIGHT FROM THE ANCIENT MONUMENTS. A Sketch of the most striking Confirmations of the Bible. By A. H. SAYCE, D.D. LL.D., Professor of Assyriology, Oxford, &c. With Facsimiles from Photographs. 1s. net.

King.—RECENT DISCOVERIES ON THE TEMPLE HILL AT JERUSALEM. By Rev. J. KING, M.A. Illustrated. 1s. net.

Merrill.—GALILEE IN THE TIME OF CHRIST. By SELAH MERRILL, D.D., United States Consul at Jerusalem. With a Map. 1s. net.

Dawson.—EGYPT AND SYRIA: their Physical Features in Relation to Bible History. By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, C.M.G. LL.D. Illustrated. 1s. net.

Budge.—THE DWELLERS ON THE NILE. Chapters on the Life, Literature, History, and Customs of Ancient Egypt. By E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, M.A., of the British Museum. Illustrated. 1s. net.

Bennett.—THE DISEASES OF THE BIBLE. By Sir J. RISDON BENNETT. 1s. net.

Hart.—ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE. By H. CHICHESTER HART, Naturalist to Sir G. Nares's Arctic Expedition and Prof. Hull's Palestine Expedition. Illustrated. 1s. net.

Sayce.—THE HITTITES: the Story of a Forgotten Empire. By Prof. A. H. SAYCE, D.D. LL.D. Revised. 1s. net.

Drysdale.—EARLY BIBLE SONGS. By Rev. A. H. DRYSDALE, D.D. 1s. net.

Sayce.—RACES OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Prof. A. H. SAYCE, D.D. LL.D. With Illustrations from Photographs. By Prof. FLINDERS PETRIE. 1s. net.

Tomkins.—THE LIFE AND TIMES OF JOSEPH IN THE LIGHT OF EGYPTIAN LORE. By the Rev. H. G. TOMKINS. 1s. net.

Edkins.—THE EARLY SPREAD OF RELIGIOUS IDEAS, ESPECIALLY IN THE FAR EAST. By Rev. JOSEPH EDKINS, B.A. D.D., Shanghai. 1s. net.

Williamson.—THE MONEY OF THE BIBLE. Illustrated by numerous Woodcuts and Facsimile Representations. By G. C. WILLIAMSON, D.Lit. 1s. net.

Gillespie.—THE SANITARY CODE OF THE PENTATEUCH. By Rev. C. G. K. GILLESPIE. 1s. net.

Knight.—THE ARCH OF TITUS AND THE SPOILS OF JERUSALEM. By Canon KNIGHT. With an Introduction by the late BISHOP of DURHAM. Illustrated. 1s. net.

Sayce.—MONUMENT FACTS AND HIGHER CRITICAL FANCIES. By Prof. A. H. SAYCE, D.D. LL.D. With Portrait of the Author. 1s. net.

Konig.—THE BIBLE AND BABYLON: their Relationship in the History of Culture. By EDUARD KONIG, D.D. Translated, with additional Notes, by Rev. W. T. PILTER. With Preface by the DEAN of CANTERBURY. 1s. net.

Nosgen.—THE NEW TESTAMENT AND THE PENTATEUCH. By Prof. C. F. NOSGEN, D.D. Translated from the German by the Rev. C. H. IRWIN, M.A. 1s. net.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

400th ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF CALVIN.

JOHN CALVIN: the Man and his Work. By the Rev. C. H. IRWIN, M.A. With Portraits and numerous other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

JOHN HUS: a Historical Romance. With an Introduction by W. R. MORFILL, Professor of Slavonic Languages in the University of Oxford. With 24 Illustrations by the eminent Painter JAN DEDINA. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

GEORGE GRENFELL, CONGO MISSIONARY AND EXPLORER By the Rev. GEORGE HAWKER. With Photogravure Portrait, Maps, and 32 full pages of Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

HENRY MARTYN, SAINT AND SCHOLAR. By GEORGE SMITH, C.I.E. LL.D. With Portrait and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s.

GRIFFITH JOHN: the Story of Fifty Years in China. By Dr. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON. With 2 Photogravure Portraits and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HUGH LATIMER. By ROBERT DEMAUS, M.A. With a Portrait. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WILLIAM TINDALE. By the Rev. R. DEMAUS, M.A. Carefully revised by RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. With Portrait, Illustration, and numerous fine Facsimiles of the unique volumes in the British Museum and in St. Paul's Cathedral. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MAHOMET AND ISLAM. A Sketch of the Prophet's Life, from original sources, and a brief Outline of his Religion. By Sir WILLIAM MUIR, K.C.S.I. LL.D. D.C.L., formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces of India. With Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE PILGRIM FATHERS OF NEW ENGLAND AND THEIR PURITAN SUCCESSORS. By JOHN BROWN, B.A. D.D. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.

JAMES LEGGE, MISSIONARY AND SCHOLAR. By his Daughter, HELEN EDITH LEGGE. With Portraits. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RECORDS OF MERCY. The Mercy of God illustrated by Narratives of Divine Grace. Collected and Edited by the Rev. CHARLES S. ISAACSON, M.A. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ROADS TO CHRIST. Compiled and Edited by the Rev. CHARLES S. ISAACSON, M.A. With Contributions by the Bishop of DURHAM, Canon HAY AITKEN, Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, Prebendary FOX, Dr. TORREY, and others. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

JOHN WESLEY, EVANGELIST. By the Rev. RICHARD GREEN. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

TAMATE: the Life and Adventures of a Christian Hero (James Chalmers, of New Guinea). By RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SIR JOHN FIELD, K.C.B., SOLDIER AND EVANGELIST. A brief Memoir by one of his Sons, CLAUD FIELD. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

CHAMPIONS OF THE TRUTH. Short Lives of Christian Leaders in Thought and Action, by various Writers. Edited by A. R. BUCKLAND, M.A. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

JAMES CHALMERS. His Autobiography and Letters. By RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. cloth gilt. Prepared in handsome binding for Special Presentation. Padded paste-grain, 6s. 6d. net.

W. HOLMAN BENTLEY, D.D. The Life and Labours of a Congo Pioneer. By his Widow, H. M. BENTLEY. With Portrait and many other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

R.T.S. "GREAT MEN" SERIES.

1. JOHN WESLEY. By GODFREY HOLDEN PIKE. 1s. 6d.
2. WILLIAM WILBERFORCE. By TRAVERS BUXTON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
3. SIX HEROIC MEN: John Frith, T. Fowell Buxton, David Livingstone, Richard Baxter, John Lawrence, Claude Brousson. By various Authors. 1s. 6d.
4. BISHOP HANNINGTON AND THE STORY OF THE UGANDA MISSION. By W. GRINTON BERRY, M.A. With Coloured Illustrations. 1s. 6d.
5. JAMES GILMOUR OF MONGOLIA: His Diaries, Letters and Reports. Edited by RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. 1s. 6d.
6. ALFRED SAKER: The Pioneer of the Cameroons. By his Daughter, E. M. SAKER. With Coloured Illustrations. 1s. 6d.

LONDON: 4, BOUVERIE STREET, and 65, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, E.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4260.

SATURDAY, JUNE 19, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(University of London).

A Performance of
SOPHOCLES' 'ELECTRA'

(in Greek)

will be given at

THE ROYAL COURT THEATRE, SLOANE SQUARE,

on
JULY 15 and 16, at 8.30 P.M.,

and
JULY 17, at 3 P.M.,

In Celebration of the Sixtieth Year of the College and
In Aid of the Building and Endowment Fund.

The Play will be produced under the direction of Mr. G. R. FOSS.

The Music has been specially composed by
Mr. GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

An Acting Version of the Play, with a Translation by the late Prof. Lewis Campbell, is now on sale at the College, and will be sold in the Theatre at each performance.

Prices of Admission: Boxes, 3l. 3s. and 2l. 2s.; Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Dress Circle, 7s. 6d.; Upper Circle, 4s.; Pit, 2s. 6d. (unnumbered); Gallery, 1s. (unnumbered).

Tickets and further particulars may be obtained from Miss STRUDWICK, Secretary, Greek Play Committee, Bedford College, York Place, Baker Street, W.

Exhibitions.

BOUDIN. LÉPINE. CLAUSEN.

Exhibition of Paintings by BOUDIN and LÉPINE—now open.

GEORGE CLAUSEN EXHIBITION—Last week.

THE LEICESTER GALLERIES, Leicester Square.

ZORN ETCHINGS EXHIBITION.

Now Open at

MR. R. GUTEKUNST'S, 16, King Street, St. James's, S.W.

10-6 daily. Saturdays, 10-2. Admission 1s.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S

SUMMER EXHIBITION OF PORTRAITS AND LANDSCAPES
by EARLY BRITISH and FOREIGN MASTERS is NOW OPEN.

SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King Street, St. James's.

Educational.

EDINBURGH VACATION COURSES in FRENCH and ENGLISH from JULY 28 to AUGUST 23, within the UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH. Distinguished French Professors from Paris, &c., and Staff of Six Practical Teachers from Paris. Literature, Phonetics, Composition, &c. Fee for 62 Lectures and Lessons 2l. For Programmes, &c., apply to the Hon. Sec., Prof. KIRKPATRICK, University.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

OUSELEY MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIPS.

THREE OUSELEY MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIPS of 50l. each for One Year may be awarded by the SENATE in JULY, 1909, for proficiency in one of the following Languages:—Arabic, Persian, Hindustani, Chinese.

Candidates, who may obtain further information on application to the undersigned, must give notice of their intention to compete not later than JUNE 25th.

HENRY A. MIERS, Principal.

FRENCH LESSONS.—Conversation achieved in a few weeks. Time arranged to suit Pupils. Moderate Terms.
Parisian Lady Diplôme.—Madame DES CHÂTERETTES, 47, George Street, Gower Street, N.W.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

Fraulein BLUTH, Kapellenstr. 58, Wiesbaden, late of St. George's
High School, Edinburgh, and Fraulein L. BLUTH, late of St.
Elphin's Clergy Daughter School, Warrington. RECEIVE A LIMITED NUMBER of GIRLS for BOARD and EDUCATION. Good Music.
Commodious House, with every modern comfort, latest Sanitary Arrangements, and large Garden. Terms 90l. Highest references to Parents of former Pupils: Mrs. Turner, 1, College Gardens, Dulwich Village, London, S.E.; Dr. J. Ritchie, 22, Charlotte Square, Edinburgh; G. Paul, Esq., Friarton Grove, Dundee; and others.
Fraulein Bluth will be in London, Edinburgh, and Dundee in June for personal interviews with Parents.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.

Preparation for Universities and Professions.

Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.

Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress, St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORS in England or Abroad
are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

EDUCATION (choice of Schools and Tutors Gratis). Prospectuses of English and Continental Schools, and of successful Army, Civil Service, and University Tutors, sent (free of charge) on receipt of requirements by GRIFFITHS, SMITH, POWELL & SMITH, School Agents (established 1833), 34, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

Situations Vacant.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

CHAIR OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY.

The DEAN and FACULTY of ADVOCATES will meet on THURSDAY, July 15 next for the purpose of nominating Two Persons to be presented to the Curators of the University as qualified to occupy the CHAIR OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND CON-STITUTIONAL HISTORY.

Any Person who wishes to be one of those nominated must send notice of his desire by post addressed to THE DEAN OF THE FACULTY OF ADVOCATES, Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, on or before FRIDAY, July 9 next.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

JUNIOR LECTURESHIPS IN FRENCH AND GERMAN.

The UNIVERSITY COURT of the UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH will, on MONDAY, July 19, 1909, or some subsequent day, proceed to the appointment of a JUNIOR LECTURER in FRENCH and a JUNIOR LECTURER in GERMAN. Salary 200l. per annum in each case. Tenure Three Years, which may be renewed. Further particulars on application.

Each Applicant should lodge with the undersigned on or before MONDAY, July 12, 1909, twenty copies of his Application and twenty copies of any Testimonials he may desire to present. One copy of the Application should be signed.

M. C. TAYLOR, Secretary, Univ. Court.
University of Edinburgh, June 16, 1909.

UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW.

CHAIR OF MATHEMATICS.

The CHAIR of MATHEMATICS will be VACANT by the resignation of Prof. Jack on SEPTEMBER 30 NEXT. The University Court will proceed during the summer to the appointment of his successor.
Information respecting the duties and conditions of the Office may be obtained on application to the undersigned.

ALAN E. CLAPPERTON, Secretary of University Court,
University of Glasgow, June, 1909.

THE UNIVERSITY OF SHEFFIELD.

APPOINTMENT OF LECTURER IN LATIN.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER IN LATIN.
Salary 160l. per annum.

Applications must be sent in by JULY 1. Further particulars may be obtained from

W. M. GIBBONS, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

An ELECTION to the TAYLORIAN PROFESSORSHIP of the ROMANCE LANGUAGES will take place in JULY NEXT. Candidates should send in their applications to THE REGISTRAR OF THE UNIVERSITY, Old Clarendon Building, Oxford, so as to reach him not later than JULY 1. Eight copies of the application, and of any Testimonials submitted, should be sent. The Stipend of the Professorship is 500l. a year.—Particulars as to duties may be obtained from THE REGISTRAR.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF DUDLEY.

DUDLEY DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

SENIOR LECTURER (MAN) WANTED for MIDDLE of SEPTE-MBER NEXT. Must possess Degree from some British University and practical and theoretical knowledge of Educational Method. Salary 180l. to 220l. Also JUNIOR LECTURER (MAN) for Mathematics and Science. Salary 150l. to 180l., and JUNIOR LECTURER (WOMAN) for History and French. Salary 120l. to 150l. All should be able to assist in general subjects of Training College Curriculum.
Forms of Application (on receipt of a stamped addressed foolscap envelope) may be obtained from the undersigned, and must be returned, with envelope endorsed "Training College," not later than
JUNE 28.

Education Offices, Dudley.

J. M. WYNNE,

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, 43 and 45, Harley Street,

London, W.—The PROFESSORSHIPS OF CLASSICS and of GEOGRAPHY will fall VACANT at the END of THIS TERM.—
For further information apply to Miss CLEMENTSON, at the College.

HARTLEY UNIVERSITY COLLEGE,

SOUTHAMPTON.

Principal—S. W. RICHARDSON, D.Sc. M.A.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invite applications for the appointment of a LADY LECTURER in EDUCATION.

Commencing Salary 150l. per annum.

Applications, giving particulars of age, training, qualifications, and experience, with copies of three recent Testimonials, must be sent to
THE PRINCIPAL on or before JULY 3, 1909.

Further particulars may be obtained upon application to THE REGISTRAR.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(University of London),

YORK PLACE, LONDON, W.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in FRENCH who will be Head of the Department. The appointment is open to Men and Women equally, and will take effect at the beginning of the Michaelmas Term.

Applications, with thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 19, to the Secretary, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

ETHEL T. MCKNIGHT, Secretary.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(University of London),

YORK PLACE, LONDON, W.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER in LATIN who will be Head of the Department. The appointment is open to Men and Women equally, and will take effect at the beginning of the Michaelmas Term.

Applications, with thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 19 to the Secretary, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

ETHEL T. MCKNIGHT, Secretary.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland,
15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

HOMERTON TRAINING COLLEGE,

CAMBRIDGE.

A LECTURER in FRENCH and ENGLISH will be REQUIRED in SEPTEMBER. Initial Salary according to qualifications and experience. Minimum 100l., Resident.

London B.A. Hons. in English and French, or Modern Language
Tripos in these Groups suitable.

Early application to THE PRINCIPAL, at the College.

THE QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY OF BELFAST.

FACULTY OF ARTS.

The posts of ASSISTANT (for the Academic Year 1909-1910) to the
PROFESSOR OF LATIN and to the PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH LITERATURE are NOW VACANT.—Applications, with one copy of Testimonials, should be addressed to the undersigned not later than JUNE 27. Salary 120l.

ARTHUR JAFFÉ, Secretary to the Belfast Commissioners.

HALIFAX EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL COLLEGE AND SCHOOL OF ART.

Mr. J. CROWTHER, B.Sc., Principal.

Applications are invited for the HEAD-MASTERSHIP of the SCHOOL OF ART. Must hold Diploma Royal College of Art. Salary
250l. per annum.

Forms of Application, to be returned not later than WEDNESDAY,
July 7, may be obtained from THE SECRETARY, 22, Union Street, Halifax.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF DUDLEY.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

PRINCIPAL of TECHNICAL SCHOOL and ORGANIZER of EVENING SCHOOL WORK REQUIRED. He must possess a Science Degree, have had experience in the kind of work desired, and devote his whole time to the duties. Salary 200l. to 250l., according to qualifications and experience.

Applications (on Forms to be obtained from the undersigned on receipt of a stamped addressed foolscap envelope) to be sent in not later than JULY 12, 1909, to J. M. WYNNE, Director of Education, Dudley.

ROYAL BELFAST ACADEMICAL

INSTITUTION.

The GOVERNORS are prepared to receive applications for the HEAD-MASTERSHIP of the ENGLISH DEPARTMENT.

The Candidate appointed will require to enter upon his duties at
SEPTEMBER 1, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by copies of Testimonials, &c., to be lodged with THE SECRETARY not later than MONDAY, JUNE 28, 1909, from whom particulars may be obtained.

ROYAL BELFAST ACADEMICAL

INSTITUTION.

The GOVERNORS are prepared to receive applications for the HEAD-MASTERSHIP of the MODERN LANGUAGES DEPART-MENT. The Candidate appointed will require to enter upon his duties at September 1st, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by copies of Testimonials, &c., to be lodged with the Secretary not later than MONDAY, June 28th, 1909,
from whom particulars may be obtained.

BOOTLE EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

MUNICIPAL SECONDARY SCHOOL FOR BOYS (250 Pupils).

An ASSISTANT MASTER REQUIRED for little Boys, and to take the Singing. Salary 120l. per annum. Canvassing disqualifies.
—Forms of Application, which should be returned by JULY 1, may be obtained from

JOHN J. OGLE, Secretary for Higher Education.

CITY OF LONDON SCHOOL.

WANTED, an ASSISTANT MASTER, to teach Classics and Elementary Mathematics in a Junior Form. He will be required to attend about Twenty-eight Hours a Week. The Salary will be 300l. a year, increasing to 350l. a year. Candidates for the appointment, whose age must not exceed 35, are requested to forward their applications, on the Official Form to be obtained at the School, accompanied with a copy of Testimonials as to qualification and character, not later than WEDNESDAY, June 30, 1909, to A. J. AUSTIN, Secretary, at the School, Victoria Embankment, E.C. Selected Candidates will be duly communicated with.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

UNDER-LIBRARIAN.

An appointment will be made, during the Michaelmas Term, of an UNDER-LIBRARIAN, to enter upon his duties on DECEMBER 31.
Stipend 200l., which may be raised to a maximum of 300l.—Candidates for the post, who must be not less than 25 or more than 40 years of age, should write in the first instance to THE LIBRARIAN, University Library, Cambridge, from whom particulars may be obtained. Formal applications for the appointment must be sent to THE LIBRARIAN not later than THURSDAY, September 30, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

1. MASTER OF METHOD (Assistant to Principal) REQUIRED, to begin work about SEPTEMBER 21. Must be a Graduate of a British University, with Training College experience. Honours in Classics a recommendation. Salary at the rate of 220l. per annum.
2. MISTRESS OF METHOD, who may be appointed Lady Superintendent, REQUIRED at the same time. Must be a Graduate, with Training College experience, and qualifications in Nature Study and Kindergarten Method. Salary at the rate of 200l. per annum.

Application Forms for the above posts may be had from the undersigned, who will receive applications up to JULY 3.

T. W. BRYERS, Education Secretary.

15, John Street, Sunderland.

LEICESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

COUNTY GRAMMAR SCHOOL OF KING EDWARD VII., COALVILLE.

The COMMITTEE invite applications for the HEAD-MASTER-SHIP of the above SCHOOL, which will be OPENED in SEPTEMBER NEXT. Accommodation about 175 (Boys and Girls). Salary 350l. per annum. Copies of the Articles of Government may be obtained (price One Shilling each) from the undersigned, to whom applications for the vacant post should be sent not later than WEDNESDAY, July 14.

W. A. BROCKINGTON, Director of Education.
33, Bowling Green Street, Leicester.

LEICESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

LOUGHBOROUGH TECHNICAL INSTITUTE.

The COMMITTEE invite applications for the following positions in the above INSTITUTE, which will be OPENED in SEPTEMBER NEXT:—

(1) SCIENCE MASTER and PRINCIPAL OF THE INSTITUTE. Salary 225l. per annum.

(2) ART MASTER. Salary 200l. per annum.

Applications should be sent to the undersigned not later than WEDNESDAY, July 14, according to Memorandum to be obtained from the Office, 33, Bowling Green Street, Leicester.

W. A. BROCKINGTON, Director of Education.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the undermentioned appointments:—

(1) ASSISTANT MISTRESS OF METHOD at the L.C.C. FULHAM TRAINING COLLEGE, to commence work in SEPTEMBER NEXT, at a salary of 120l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l., subject to satisfactory service, to 170l. Applications (see below) must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on JULY 5, 1909.

(2) TEACHER OF JEWELLERY for TWO DAYS of about SIX HOURS each and TWO EVENINGS of about THREE HOURS each a week during the Session 1909-10, commencing in SEPTEMBER NEXT, at the L.C.C. CAMBERWELL SCHOOL OF ARTS AND CRAFTS, Peckham Road, S.E. Salary 21s. or 25s. a Day and 10s. 6d. or 12s. 6d. an Evening, according to experience. Applications (see below) must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on JUNE 26, 1909.

Applications should be made on the Official Forms, to be obtained, together with particulars of the appointments, from THE EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned by the times specified, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date. All communications on the subject of appointment (1) must be endorsed "H. 4." and of appointment (2) "T. 1." and a stamped addressed envelope must be enclosed. Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for employment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.
Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.
June 17, 1909.

THE CITY OF LONDON COLLEGE, WHITE STREET, MOORFIELDS, E.C.

The GOVERNING BODY require for the DAY SCHOOL TWO TEACHERS (Men or Women). One to teach FRENCH and GERMAN, the other ENGLISH and MODERN HISTORY. Preference will be given to Candidates possessing a University Degree or its equivalent.

The Language Teacher must possess a proper knowledge of the Spoken and Written Languages, and of modern methods of teaching them.

Candidates must be prepared to give their whole time to the work of the School.

Commencing Salary 150l. a year. Applications must reach the undersigned on or before THURSDAY, July 1, 1909.

DAVID SAVAGE, Secretary.

HANLEY EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

MUNICIPAL SECONDARY SCHOOL.

WANTED, on SEPTEMBER 7, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS, to teach Mathematics to the Girls. Good qualifications in the subject and teaching experience are essential.

Commencing Salary 100l. to 120l. (dependent upon the above-named requirements).

Forms of Application may be obtained from, and should be returned as early as possible to, the undersigned.

JOHN HODDER, Secretary.
Town Hall, Hanley.

BIRKENHEAD EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

GIRLS' SECONDARY SCHOOL.

Head Mistress—Miss MARY KENNEDY, M.A.

WANTED, in SEPTEMBER, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS to teach History, and either English, Latin, or Geography. Honours Degree in History, and successful teaching experience preferred. Salary 115l. rising by annual increments of 5l. subject to satisfactory service, to 135l. In fixing the initial salary, good Secondary School experience will be considered. For further information apply to the Head Mistress.

Forms of Application, which should be returned without delay, may be obtained from

ROBERT T. JONES, Secretary.
Education Department, Town Hall, Birkenhead.
June 15, 1909.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, DUNDEE.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invite applications for the post of LIBRARIAN. Salary 120l. to 150l., according to qualifications.

Applications, stating age, experience, and qualifications, with Testimonials (25 copies of each), must be lodged on or before JULY 6 with THE SECRETARY, from whom further information may be obtained.

SOUTHEND-ON-SEA SCHOOL OF ART.

WANTED, SENIOR and SECOND ASSISTANT ART MASTERS, the former to be well qualified in Life-Modelling and Design, and the latter with good general Art Teaching qualifications. Each should have practical knowledge of some Crafts, of which Enamelling and Painted and Leaded Glass are preferable.

Duties commence in SEPTEMBER NEXT. Commencing Salaries, 140l. and 100l. per annum respectively.

Apply, with testimony as to teaching ability, to Mr. A. J. CONNABEER, Head Master.

COUNTY OF SOUTHAMPTON.

WINCHESTER COUNTY SCHOOL.

WANTED, for SEPTEMBER, non-resident MISTRESS. Degree and Teacher's Diploma essential. Principal Subjects, Mathematics and Class Singing. Salary 100l.—Application to be made on Forms to be obtained from THE DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION, The Castle, Winchester, and to be returned to THE HEAD MISTRESS, County School, Winchester, not later than JULY 12.

Situations Wanted.

ADVERTISER seeks RE-ENGAGEMENT.

Experienced in every Branch. Well versed in Current and Standard Literature, Production, Distribution, Advertising, and Travelling (Town and Country).—B. A. Z., Box 1601, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

AUTHOR seeks APPOINTMENT with PUBLISHING FIRM or Editorship of Journal, Religious or otherwise.

—Address Box 1602, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN with best Literary,

Architectural and Pecuniary training, Matriculated London University, Probationer Royal Institute British Architects, desires POSITION of PRIVATE SECRETARY in ENGLAND, Type-writing and Shorthand if desired. Would drive Private Motor. Salary 150l. Good recommendations.—Box 1599, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TO PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.—ESTIMATING CLERK, who has been with a well-known Publisher for six years, and who previously served his practical apprenticeship in all Branches of a large Printer's, is desirous of a FRESH ENGAGEMENT. Excellent References.—H. W., 81, Farringdon Street, E.C.

Sales by Auction.

Engravings and Drawings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE

will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 21, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS and DRAWINGS comprising English and Colonial Topographical Views, Mezzotint Portraits, Fancy Subjects, Modern Etchings, Old Sporting Prints, &c., and original Water-Colour Drawings, &c., by Romney, David Cox, Copley Fielding, Paul Sandby, Rowlandson, Bunbury, Harding, Prout, Ryland, Laurence Housman, Wild, Birket Foster, McWhirter, and others.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Rashleigh Collection of Coins.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE

will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 21, and Four Following Days, and on MONDAY, June 28, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the RASHLEIGH COLLECTION OF COINS, the Property of EVELYN W. RASHLEIGH, Esq., Stoketon, Saltash, Cornwall.

May be viewed. Illustrated Catalogues may be had, price 2s. 6d. each.

A portion of the Library of the late ALEXANDER SMITH, Esq., of Glasgow, and the Library of the late HENRY TRETHEWY, Esq., J.P., of Silsoe, Ampthill, Beds.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE

will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 23, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including a PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late ALEXANDER SMITH, Esq., of Glasgow; the LIBRARY of the late HENRY TRETHEWY, Esq., J.P., of Silsoe, Ampthill, Beds. (sold by order of the Executors), and other Properties, comprising First Editions of the Writings of Modern Authors—Sporting Books—Illustrated French Books and Works on the French Revolution—First Editions of the Writings of American Authors, and other Americana—Works on Natural History, Travel, Biography, History, &c.—Books illustrated by G. Cruikshank, H. K. Browne, H. Alken, J. Leech, &c.—Milaia, Breath from the Veldt—Surtees's Works—Hutchinson's History of Durham, and other County Histories—Original Poems and Manuscripts by John Payne Collier—Privately Printed Tracts by Henry Huth—Hunterian Club Publications, complete Set—Isbam Reprints—Frederic Ouvry's Reprints, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Selected Portion of the Library of Col. COTES.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE

will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, June 25, at 1 o'clock precisely, Valuable OLD BOOKS, selected from the LIBRARY of Col. COTES, of Pitchford Hall, Salop, comprising chiefly Rare English Works of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries—First Editions of Classic English Poets and Dramatists, including Addison, Dryden, Beaumont and Fletcher, Cowley, Cleveland, Cartwright, D'Avenant, Milton, Pope, Waller, Warner, Wycherley, &c.—First Midsummer Night's Dream, and the Fourth Shakespeare Folio—the First Sarum Missal printed in England—fine Specimens of Binding by Le Gascon, Grolier, and Meirne—Works relating to America, Tracts, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Engravings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE

will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 28, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS (Framed and in the Portfolio), comprising Arundel Society Publications—Mezzotint and other Portraits after Sir J. Reynolds, J. Hoppner, Sir T. Lawrence, L. F. Abbott, R. Cosway, G. Romney, Sir G. Kneller, Sir P. Lely, and others—Fancy Subjects of the English School, some printed in Colours—Sporting Prints in Colours—and a few Drawings and Oil Paintings.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL

by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., EARLY IN JULY, VALUABLE BOOKS, including a Library removed from Tunbridge Wells and other Properties, comprising Library Editions of Standard Authors in fine Bindings—Works on Natural History, including a Set of Loddige's Botanical Cabinet, Large Paper—County Histories—Books with Coloured Plates, illustrated by Rowlandson and Cruikshank, including Syntax's Three Tours, The Dance of Life and Death, Poetical Sketches of Scarborough (remarkably fine copy in boards, uncut), and others of the Series—Ackermann's Oxford and Cambridge Universities—Cathlin's North American Indian Portfolio—Howitt's Oriental Field Sports—Harris's Game and Wild Animals of South Africa, 1840—Repton's Landscape Gardening—a Collection of Old Deeds, mostly relating to Mansions in Kent, from the Library of the late Robert Hovenden, Esq., the Archaeologist—Book Plates, Autograph Letters, &c.

Catalogues in preparation.

STEVENS'S AUCTION ROOMS.

Established 1760.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, June 22 and 23, at half-past 12 o'clock.

An interesting COLLECTION of WEAPONS, MASKS, IDOLS, &c., from JAVA—Bronzes from Benin—Oriental China—Carved Ivories, Bronzes, &c., from China and Japan—Pictures, Prints, and Drawings. Also about 40 lots of Dwarf Japanese Trees, and Curios of every description from all parts.

Mr. J. C. STEVENS will offer the above Property by AUCTION at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. On view Monday prior 10 to 4 and mornings of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by

AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 24, and Following Day at 1 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising Topographical and Antiquarian Works—Nash's History of Worcestershire, Second Edition, 2 vols.—Ormerod's History of Cheshire, Original Edition, Large Paper, 3 vols.—Drake's Eboracum—Lambard's Perambulation of Kent, 1576 and 1596—a Set of the Archaeologia Cantiana, 25 vols., 1858-1904—Hasted's Kent, 12 vols., and others relating to the County—Old Books on Heraldry—the Nuremberg Chronicle, Original Latin and First German Editions, 1493—Folio Architectural Works and Books of Engravings—Swift's Works, Best Edition, 19 vols., and other Sets of Standard Authors—Historical Works and Books of Travel—First Editions, &c.; also a Selection of Recent Books from a Reviewer's Library.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

An extensive Collection of English and Foreign Books—Works on Ornithology, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by

AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 23, and THURSDAY, July 1, at 1 o'clock, an extensive COLLECTION of ENGLISH and FOREIGN BOOKS, including fine copies of Gould's Birds of Europe, 5 vols., the Birds of Asia, 7 vols., and the Mammals of Australia, 3 vols.—the Ornithological Writings of Seeborn, Stevenson, Wyatt, Harting, Dixon, and others, some extra illustrated—Ray Society's Publications, 62 vols., and other Books on Natural History—the Historical Works of Green, Gardiner, Prescott, Napier, Kinglake, and others—the Huth Library Catalogue, 5 vols.—Cokayne's Complete Peerage, 8 vols.—the Vale Press Shakespeare, 39 vols.—Modern German and French Works on Classical Antiquity and Roman Law, History, Philosophy, and Divinity by Eminent Scholars, Editions of the Classics, &c., chiefly bound in half-morocco; also Books in Old English Literature—Topographical Works—Standard Works in General Literature, &c.

Catalogues on application.

The Library collected by Dr. RICHARD WATSON, Bishop of Llandaff, during the later years of the Eighteenth Century, and now removed from Calgarth Park, Westmoreland.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by

AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., EARLY IN JULY, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising a Collection of Curious and Early Works on Alchemy, Chemistry, Metallurgy, Mathematics, Pharmacy, Agriculture, &c.—Watson's History of Halifax, with fore-edge painting, and other Topographical and Antiquarian Books—Early Bibles—Folio Editions of the Fathers; an extensive Collection of Historical, Political, and Economic Tracts and Pamphlets—Houbraken's Heads—Hayley's Life of Romney—Combe's Syntax: First Tour, and the Life of Napoleon in boards, uncut—Old Novels and Poetry, in boards or original calf bindings.

Catalogues are preparing.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS

respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, June 21, the STOCK of ENGRAVINGS of Messrs. C. FELDWICKE & SONS, of Brighton.

On TUESDAY, June 22, the COLLECTION of ENGRAVED GEMS, Camei and Intagli, formed by CHARLES NEWTON ROBINSON, Esq.

On WEDNESDAY, June 23, JEWELS and LACE of the late Mrs. WALDO SITHORP, the late Mrs. DOWDES-WELL, and others.

On THURSDAY, June 24, and FRIDAY, June 25, the important COLLECTION of MODERN PICTURES and WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS of HOLBROOK GASKELL, Esq., deceased, late of Woolton, near Liverpool.

AT THE CONDUIT STREET AUCTION GALLERIES.

THE BUCKLAND COLLECTION.

By order of Sir WILLIAM TROCKMORTON, Bart., removed from Buckland, Berkshire, following the recent Sale of the Estate.

The important COLLECTION of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, including interesting old Portraits, Pastels, Drawings, and important characteristic Works of the Old Masters. The Buckland Missal, a fine Fourteenth-Century MS. on vellum, being the Service Book in use at Buckland, Berks, before the Reformation. It is written on over four hundred leaves of vellum in Gothic Letter with Painted and Ornamental Initials and beautiful Decoration—a Collection of Papal Medals. Also, by order of an Executor, a superb Copy of the Graphic Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, engraved by S. W. Reynolds, 1820-1836, in five folio volumes—a few Books of Art Reference—two Bookcases, &c., and a Collection of fine Landseer Proof Engravings, TO BE SOLD by AUCTION, by MESSRS.

K NIGHT, FRANK & RUTLEY (in conjunction with Messrs. SIMMONS & SONS), on THURSDAY, June 24, at 1 o'clock.

Catalogues of Messrs. SIMMONS & SONS, Land Agents, Henley, Reading, and Basingstoke, or of the AUCTIONEERS, at their Offices, 9, Conduit Street, W.

IRELAND.

PALMERSTOWN HOUSE, STRAFFAN, CO. KILDARE.

A most interesting COLLECTION of OLD CHINA and POTTERY—fine Coloured Mezzotint and Line Engravings—Bronzes—Decorative Furniture—Old Bristol and other English Glass—Oil Painting—Old French Fans—and Curios; also a very important Collection of Miniatures, a short illustrated notice of which appears in the Connoisseur of April last.

MESSRS. BENNETT & SON respectfully give notice that, acting under instructions from the Right Hon. the EARL OF MAYO, K.P. P.C. D.L., they will SELL by AUCTION, in the Mansion, as above, on WEDNESDAY, June 23, the above-mentioned valuable Fine-Art Property. The Old China includes Specimens of Worcester, Derby, Bristol, Bow, Chelsea, Coalport, and other English Factories—Dresden, Sevres, Vienna, Chinese, Japanese, and other Continental Porcelain—a few fine Pieces of Salt Glaze, Jackfield, Fulham, Wedgwood, Leeds, Liverpool, and Staffordshire Ware. The Prints include many fine Portraits and Fancy Subjects in Mezzotint—rare Coloured Sporting Prints. The Miniatures include fine Specimens of Zincke, C. Boit, J. Lee, H. Bone, D. B. Murphy, W. Essex, S. Cooper, Ozias Murphy, N. Dixon, G. Englehart, George Chinnery, and others.

Catalogues ready for distribution one week prior to Sale.

BENNETT & SON, Auctioneers and Valuers.

6, Upper Ormond Quay, Dublin.

Classified Advertisements continued on p. 742.]

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST

DEDICATED BY GRACIOUS PERMISSION TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

THE STORY OF THE HOUSEHOLD CAVALRY, 1661-1902. By Captain Sir GEORGE ARTHUR, Bart., Late Second Life Guards. With Photogravure Portraits and other Illustrations, including 6 Coloured Plates. 2 vols. super-royal 8vo. Édition de Luxe, limited to 40 copies, 10l. 10s. net. Ordinary Edition, 3l. 13s. 6d. net.

"Sir George Arthur has earned the gratitude of all his companions in arms for the manly and spirited fashion in which he has told his stirring story."—Daily Telegraph.

ENGLISH HERALDIC BOOK STAMPS; Figured and Described. By CYRIL DAVENPORT, F.S.A. Illustrations. Super-royal 8vo, 25s. net.
The first book on this subject in English, with about 300 Illustrations.

FAMOUS WOMEN OF FLORENCE. By EDGCUMBE STALEY. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.
The careers and characters of some of the famous ladies of Florence whose stories illustrate the Renaissance period.

CHAPTERS ON SPANISH LITERATURE. By J. FITZMAURICE KELLY. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.
"A delightful volume, full of sympathy, learning, and judgment."—Observer.
"We have no hesitation in saying that this volume forms the most valuable English contribution to Spanish letters since the same author gave us his history of Spanish literature."—Athenæum.
"I have never met with such an illuminating work on Spanish literature."—Mr. R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM in the Nation.

THE BIOGRAPHY OF A SILVER FOX. By ERNEST THOMPSON SETON. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.
"A romance of the realist kind and the fascinating lore of the woods is accompanied by the most delightful picture of foxes great and small. It makes better reading than many novels of human affairs."—Observer.

HUMAN NATURE IN POLITICS. By GRAHAM WALLAS. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"It is the first serious and dispassionate endeavour to assess carefully the various and conflicting parts played by impulse, instinct, and the different human emotions in furnishing power and direction to political activities."—Manchester Guardian.
"It can be read with great acceptance by the politician at all stages and of all creeds."—Observer.

THE VALLEY OF SHADOWS. By FRANCIS GRIERSON, Author of 'Modern Mysticism' and 'The Celtic Temperament.' Demy 8vo, 6s. net.
"A genuine document of much historical interest and artistic force."—Nation.
"A highly significant volume. A picture of the spiritual and intellectual atmosphere of America in the days immediately preceding the Civil War."—Daily Telegraph.

THE ETERNAL VALUES. By HUGO MUNSTERBERG, Professor of Psychology in Harvard. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Shortly].
A great philosophical effort which ought to appeal to every serious reader who seeks a deeper meaning for his life.

SOME ACROSTIC SIGNATURES OF FRANCIS BACON, Baron Verulam of Verulam, Viscount St. Alban; together with some others, all of which are now for the first time deciphered and published by WILLIAM STONE BOOTH. Illustrated with Facsimiles and Acrostic Figures. Large 4to, 25s. net.

THE ROMANCE AND MYSTERY OF "WIRELESS" EXPLAINED.

RADIO-TELEGRAPHY. By C. C. F. MONCKTON, M.I.E.E. With 173 Diagrams and Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.
"A very interesting and valuable book."—Nature.

STATE INSURANCE. A Social and Industrial Need. By FRANK W. LEWIS. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.
"His book deals generally, and ably, with the subject—specially with Germany, America, Great Britain, and her Colonies."—Times.

GEORGE MEREDITH'S WORKS.

LIBRARY EDITION.

Crown 8vo, each with a Photogravure Frontispiece. Cloth, 6s. per volume.

POCKET EDITION.

Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; limp lambskin, 3s. 6d. net each volume.

THE ORDEAL OF RICHARD FEVEREL.
BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER.
SANDRA BELLONI.
VITTORIA.
THE EGOIST.
EVAN HARRINGTON.
ONE OF OUR CONQUERORS.
LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.
THE AMAZING MARRIAGE.
DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS.
THE ADVENTURES OF HARRY RICHMOND.
RHODA FLEMING.
THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT.
THE TRAGIC COMEDIANS.
SHORT STORIES, containing the Tale of Chloe; The House on the Beach; Farina; The Case of General Ople and Lady Camper.
AN ESSAY ON COMEDY.
POEMS. In two volumes.

NATURE POEMS.

With 16 Full-Page Plates in Photogravure by WILLIAM HYDE. Royal 8vo, full cloth gilt, 12s. 6d. net.

SELECTED POEMS.

Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s. net; 16mo, half-parchment or limp leather, 3s. 6d. net.

THE MEREDITH POCKET-BOOK.

Selections from the Prose Writings, compiled and arranged by G. M. T. 16mo, cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

A FEW COPIES OF THE ÉDITION DE LUXE OF THE COMPLETE WORKS OF GEORGE MEREDITH.

In 32 vols. Sold in Sets only, 21l. net.

THE BEST INTERPRETATION OF MEREDITH'S POETRY.

THE POETRY AND PHILOSOPHY OF GEORGE MEREDITH. By G. M. TREVELYAN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Second Impression].

6/-

THE NEWEST NOVELS.

6/-

PRISCILLA AND CHARYBDIS. By F. FRANKFORT MOORE, Author of 'The Jessamy Bride.'

"This most entertaining social comedy."—Times.

"A remarkably original and pleasant novel."—Yorkshire Post.

"For good, festive, but not facetious novels, it would be hard to beat him."—Observer.

"An exceedingly bright, clever, and readable book."—British Weekly.

THE PERJURER. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of 'The Square Peg.'

"There is not a dull page in the book."—Country Life.

"Moves well from start to finish."—Academy.

"An interesting story."—Athenæum.

THE KING IN YELLOW. By R. W. CHAMBERS.

A New Illustrated Edition of this Author's most weirdly fascinating story.

THE ACTRESS. By LOUISE CLOSSER HALE.

A story of stage life, most of it set in London, by the Actress herself.

DRAGON'S BLOOD. By H. M. RIDEOUT.

A Story of adventure in China.

MACMILLAN'S LIST.

Oxford Lectures on Poetry.

By A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D., formerly Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.
COMPLETE IN 1 VOL.

The Golden Treasury of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language.

Selected and Arranged by F. T. PALGRAVE.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

1909 ISSUE NOW READY.

The Statesman's Year-Book.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1909. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

Greek Architecture.

By ALLAN MARQUAND, Ph.D. L.H.D., Professor of Art and Archaeology in Princeton University. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. net.

[Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities.]

THE WHITE SISTER.

A Story of Rome.

By the late F. MARION CRAWFORD.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Novels of Henry James.

ÉDITION DE LUXE. In 24 vols. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net each.

Vol. XIX.

THE WINGS OF THE DOVE. Vol. I.

Genetic Psychology.

An Introduction to an Objective and Genetic View of Intelligence. By EDWIN A. KIRKPATRICK, B.S. M.Ph. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.

NEW SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 2s. net each.

GEORGE ELIOT. By Sir LESLIE STEPHEN, K.C.B.

HAZLITT. By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, K.C.

MATTHEW ARNOLD. By HERBERT PAUL.

RUSKIN. By FREDERIC HARRISON.

TENNYSON. By Sir ALFRED LYALL.

RICHARDSON. By AUSTIN DOBSON.

BROWNING. By G. K. CHESTERTON.

CRABBE. By the Rev. CANON AINGER.

FANNY BURNEY. By AUSTIN DOBSON.

JEREMY TAYLOR. By EDMUND GOSSE.

ROSSETTI. By ARTHUR C. BENSON.

MARIA EDGEWORTH. By the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS.

HOBBS. By Sir LESLIE STEPHEN, K.C.B.

ADAM SMITH. By FRANCIS W. HIRST.

THOMAS MOORE. By STEPHEN GWYNN.

SYDNEY SMITH. By GEORGE W. E. RUSSELL.

EDWARD FITZGERALD. By ARTHUR C. BENSON.

ANDREW MARVELL. By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, K.C.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE. By EDMUND GOSSE.

WALTER PATER. By ARTHUR C. BENSON.

SHAKESPEARE. By WALTER RALEIGH.

JAMES THOMSON. By G. C. MACAULAY.

WILLIAM MORRIS. By ALFRED NOYES.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

GAY & HANCOCK'S LIST.

Size 8 $\frac{3}{4}$ in. by 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ in. 427 pp. cloth gilt extra,
12s. 6d. net.

SUN AND SHADOW IN SPAIN.

BY

MAUD HOWE,

AUTHOR OF 'ROMA BEATA.'

With 4 Plates in Colour and 41 Illustrations from Photographs.

DAILY TELEGRAPH says:—

"One of the pleasantest of travel-books we have read for some time.

"The narrator has an eye for colour and for character, so that the reader is able to realize much of the fascination of a land which evidently fascinated the writer.

"Of famous buildings and scenes we get, as it were, thumb-nail impressions charmingly suggestive, while on Spanish art there are some admirable passages, for the visitors saw much and saw understandingly.

"Criticism, description, anecdote, impressions of places and people, with scraps of conversation, make up an unconventional, but almost wholly delightful travel-book."

TWO REMARKABLE NOVELS. 6s.

PAUL BOURGET'S LATEST NOVEL.

THE WEIGHT OF THE NAME.

By PAUL BOURGET.

Translated by GEORGE BURNHAM IVES.

Globe.—"The novel will be a delight to readers, for its literary art is unquestionable."

A NOVEL OF EXCEPTIONAL MERIT.

BARRY GORDON.

By W. FARQUHAR PAYSON.

Manchester Courier.—"It is but rarely that one reads a novel nowadays that enchants with the fascination to be found in 'Barry Gordon.' It is excellently written. No one will put the book down till it is finished, and we prophesy that there are many passages that will be read more than once."

World.—"Natural, original, and consistent throughout. It is a remarkable piece of work."

AN ILLUSTRATED POCKET EDITION
OF

PENELOPE'S EXPERIENCES IN ENGLAND SCOTLAND IRELAND

BY

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN.

Three Volumes. Size 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ in. by 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ in.

Over 50 Illustrations in each volume by CHARLES E. BROCK.

Cloth, 2s. net each.

Leather, 3s. net each.

London: GAY & HANCOCK, LTD.,
12 and 13, Henrietta Street, Strand.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

PUBLISHED BY Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN.

A LITERARY HISTORY OF ROME.

From the Origins to the Close of the Golden Age. By J. WIGHT DUFF, M.A. With a Photogravure Frontispiece. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. (A New Volume in the "Library of Literary History.")

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.

By the Rev. L. S. MILFORD. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"Memories of 'Old Haileybury' are fresh, fragrant, and abundant in the handsome volume which Mr. Milford has prepared."—Scotsman.

"This is in many ways a model school history, just because it is a good deal more than a mere history. It is an inspiration."—Evening Standard.

SOUTH AMERICAN SERIES.—New Volume.

MEXICO.

Its Ancient and Modern Civilisation; History and Political Conditions; Topography and Natural Resources; Industries and General Development. By C. REGINALD ENOCK, F.R.G.S. With an Introduction by MARTIN HUME, a Map, and 64 Full-Page Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net.

THE PLACE OF ANIMALS IN HUMAN THOUGHT.

By Countess MARTINENGO CESARESCO. With Photogravure Frontispiece and 32 other Illustrations. 12s. 6d. net.

"The sort of book which makes the reader idly long for Macaulay's memory in which to store all the delightful things which the author has told and shown him. Stories, quotations, comments, and pictures are all alike good."—Spectator.

CHRIST AND THE EASTERN SOUL;

Or, The Witness of the Oriental Consciousness to Jesus Christ.

Lectures delivered on the Barrows Foundation in India and Ceylon in the Cold Season of 1906. By the late CHARLES CUTHBERT HALL, President of the Union Theological Seminary. 6s. 6d. net.

THE TEACHING OF JESUS ABOUT THE FUTURE.

By Dr. HENRY BURTON SHARMAN. 13s. 6d. net.

Based on a critical examination of the Synoptic Gospels, this book will call for the serious attention of students of the New Testament.

THE FUNCTION OF RELIGION IN MAN'S STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE.

By GEORGE BURMAN FOSTER, Author of 'The Finality of the Christian Religion.' Cloth 5s. net.

THE HIGHER LIFE IN ART.

Lectures on the Barbizon School in France. By JOHN LA FARGE. With 64 Illustrations. 8s. 6d. net.

ABEL. A Poem.

By Dr. DAVID SANDLER. 2s. 6d. net.

NOTABLE NOVELS.

THE POOLS OF SILENCE.

By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE, Author of 'The Blue Lagoon.' 6s.

CONCERNING HIMSELF.

By VICTOR L. WHITECHURCH, Author of 'The Canon in Residence.' 6s.

A FAMILY OF INFLUENCE.

By W. H. WILLIAMSON, Author of 'The Prince's Marriage.' 6s.

SISTER TERESA.

By GEORGE MOORE. Revised Edition. 3s. 6d.

T. FISHER UNWIN,
1, Adelphi Terrace, London.

SATURDAY, JUNE 19, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MR. BRADLEY'S LECTURES ON POETRY	721
AN INTRODUCTION TO THE HEBREW BIBLE	723
MISS WEDGWOOD'S ESSAYS	723
GIUSEPPE BARETTI	725
NEW NOVELS (The Love-Brokers; Samson Unshorn; Galatea of the Wheatfield; Starbrace; A Little Green World; Penelope Ann; Miss Pillsbury's Fortune)	726-727
SHORT STORIES	727
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (A Bishop in the Rough; Eighteen Years in Uganda and East Africa; The Thoughts of Lucia Halliday)	728
THE ENGLISH CHURCH PAGEANT; THE COLCHESTER PAGEANT; THE LATE MR. GEORGE MEREDITH	729-730
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	730
LITERARY GOSSIP	731
SCIENCE—THE LIFE OF A FOSSIL-HUNTER; FROM RUWENZORI TO THE CONGO; THE ECLIPSE OF A.D. 364; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	732-734
FINE ARTS—CHOSEN PICTURES AT THE GRAFTON GALLERIES; OTHER EXHIBITIONS; ARCHEOLOGICAL NOTES; A MITHRAIC STATUETTE FROM ASIA MINOR; THE ROMAN WALLS OF GLOUCESTER; SALES; GOSSIP; EXHIBITIONS	734-738
MUSIC—MISS SUNDERLAND AND MR. THISTLETON'S CONCERT; KUBELIK'S RECITAL; FRAULEIN GERHARDT'S RECITAL; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	738-739
DRAMA—THE WORLD AND HIS WIFE; THE FIRES OF FATE; IRISH DRAMA; GOSSIP	739-740
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	740

LITERATURE

Oxford Lectures on Poetry. By A. C. Bradley. (Macmillan & Co.)

MANY of these lectures, delivered during the author's tenure of the Professorship of Poetry at Oxford, have been separately printed; some of them, moreover (e.g., 'Poetry for Poetry's Sake'), are so familiar in academic circles as already to have influenced the standards of literary opinion. Mr. Bradley gave us in 1904 a remarkable book on 'Shakespearean Tragedy.' The present volume exhibits in a form that will be more readily understood by the public his distinguishing merits as a critic.

Roughly, there are two possible schools of criticism, the active and the receptive; and in degree, and at different times in varying degree, most critics belong in part to the one and in part to the other. But most English critics, with Matthew Arnold at the head of them, are distinctively active, while Mr. Bradley is just as pronouncedly receptive in his method—so pronouncedly as almost to be in a class by himself.

Arnold's method in criticism was this: he made up his mind about an author, strove to make clear his distinctive merits, and especially (whether it was merit or demerit) his leading quality. "The real Byron" and "the real Wordsworth" were phrases often in his mouth. Then, having blocked this out widely, showing chiefly his results and conclusions, rather than how they had been formed, he proceeded to assess the value, by comparison with the achievements of others, of the book or poem under review. An essay by Arnold is something not far removed from the summing up of a judge, a judge to a miraculous degree alive and receptive, but still a judge.

Mr. Bradley's manner of approach is widely different. One sees it clearly in his definition of a poem on the second page of this book:—

"We may say that an actual poem is the succession of experiences—sounds, images, thoughts, emotions—through which we pass when we are reading as poetically as we can."

It is true that Mr. Bradley implicitly qualifies this definition by prefacing it with the words, "without aiming at accuracy," and explicitly in a note where he says (the words are not his) that no doubt a poem technically is not the poetical experience to which it gives rise, but the art-product which is permanently able to produce this experience. Nevertheless, Mr. Bradley's immediate interest is not with the art-product itself, but with the impression the art-product makes on us. His occupation, if one may put it in this way, is to appreciate not the blow, but the wound; not the claret, but the taste of the claret; not the landscape in nature, but the landscape on the retina. It is an analysis of the effect produced, not a judgment of the thing producing the effect—subjectivity as opposed to objectivity. There is correlation, of course; all subjectivity is related to some object, and all objectivity to the subject that observes; but the distinction is too wide to need emphasis.

Arnold attempted to assay the object that produces in us a pleasurable disturbance of feeling. Mr. Bradley concerns himself with the feeling itself, its analysis and realization—realization so delicately accurate as to amount to visualization—as also with the further questions, especially interesting to him, of the intimate cause of our pleasure. What is the precise feeling we have after reading 'Antony and Cleopatra'? What are the dim ideas working in our minds that make us feel the sensation of the sublime? Why is it that we are morally delighted by the exhibition that Shakespeare called Falstaff? We read Arnold on Wordsworth, and we know that when we are reading Wordsworth there is something in our feeling to which nothing of all Arnold has said corresponds. It is a sensibility to the mysterious, and this sensibility must be produced by something in what we read, and we must look for it in the object itself, in other words in Wordsworth's poems.

There are several things to be said here. In the first place it must be felt that Mr. Bradley's method—however new—has one indisputable advantage. Arnold, in pitching himself at the object, was attempting to assay what is in reality unassayable. How are we to determine the comparative value of Wordsworth's and Shelley's poetry? and if, finally, we do say that the oak is a finer tree than the ash, in what way are we helped by that? The trees remain. Moreover, Arnold in presenting his conclusions is to a large extent expressing opinion—generally the best opinion of his age and time—but opinion.

To take an easy instance, Arnold does not tell us what we feel when we read the poems of Burns. He tells us what poems are good, and what are bad. Those love songs may be of slight account which have stirred the hearts of millions; but the important thing is not of what account they are, but that they do permanently so stir the heart. Mr. Bradley, on the other hand, in dealing with the feeling produced, is dealing with fact, and to a large extent, permanent fact. As long as our civilization remains at all individualistic, and possibly the more when it becomes increasingly socialistic, we shall feel a pleasure in reading about Falstaff, and the cause of it will be what it is here said to be. Until we all become unconscious materialists, which, however soon we all become conscious materialists, we shall certainly never do, we shall feel in reading Wordsworth a sense of mystery.

But the advantage is not always with the subjective method, which alone is not always sufficient. As a preface to 'Shakespearean Tragedy' Mr. Bradley entered upon an admirably lucid account of the ideas inherent in tragedy, especially in Shakespeare. Our mental condition when we have read a great tragedy, the satisfaction of the interior, and often nearly sub-conscious claims of the spirit and intellect, that whole series of ideas which is dimly apprehended even by ourselves, but which, however inchoate, must be floating somewhere at the back of every human brain—ideas of resignation, conflict, triumph, infinity—such ideas were not necessarily, nor even probably, ideas consciously held by Shakespeare. Certainly not, and no one who has read Mr. Bradley's exposition of those ideas could suppose that they were. Tragedy here is the single object, and the object is perfectly apprehended as soon as we get a perfect apprehension of our subjective impressions. With the actual dramas, however, it was different, and in dealing with them in detail Mr. Bradley's subjective method was not enough. In dramatic criticism it is not possible to take the object into too constant account, if only because here the object is no longer single, but twofold.

To make this clear, let us suppose that we are reading one of Wordsworth's lyrical or reflective poems. As soon as we have a perfect apprehension of our subjective impression, we have also a perfect apprehension of the poem itself, and, what is more, if we read enough of the poems, of the poet himself; not of the man himself—which is another matter, and does not concern us—but of the poet. If Wordsworth is not contained in Wordsworth's poems, he is contained nowhere. In fact, the poet is identical with the poems. Here, then, there is no intervening medium, and we have not two objects, but one. But in drama there is the medium with all its difficulties. The art-producer and the art-product are no longer identical, and in consequence we have not one object but two—not merely the poet, but also the medium by which he is hampered. To the necessary conditions of that medium he must so far conform that characters we prefer to think of as living people must often primarily by him be seen merely as dramatic requirements. No longer does the poet speak straight to us. No longer is it a simple question of what the poet says, but as often of what he had to say, and even sometimes of what, tiring of his impersonal medium, he undramatically chose to say. No longer, therefore, can we translate our subjective impression directly into terms of the object, for the object is no longer either one and indivisible or directly in contact with ourselves. So our subjective impression will not necessarily tell us what the poet intended, or even accurately what the poet himself was. To arrive at that we should have to supplement it by a constant reference to the conditions, even the accidental conditions, under which he wrote, and especially to what we can objectively discover concerning his method of work.

This is to say that from Mr. Bradley's Shakespearian studies it was easy to get an impression of Shakespeare as a more independent, consistent, and conscious artist than he was; and necessarily, because Mr. Bradley's book was predominantly subjective. It is also clear that Mr. Bradley's method is most easily seen as equivalent to its subject where he is dealing with conscious art. But it is equally un-failing where he is dealing with the total effect of such tragedies as 'Lear' or 'Othello,' or such characters as Cordelia and Desdemona, because there the subjective impression is the whole thing, and it is only a question of its sufficing delicacy. The chief triumph of Mr. Bradley's method, however, is where he is dealing with the whole mass of idea that is con-noted by the words poetry, tragedy, the sublime, &c., the large æsthetic problems, where the ideas common to whole literatures may be apprehended for themselves, and where any disturbing elements of personality, intention, or even consciousness are negligible. It is for this reason that we think this volume of lectures will be better understood than the author's lectures on Shakespearian tragedy, and make clear more easily to the public the fineness of his unique talent. There is nothing here to puzzle the reader or for him to distinguish about. Everything the critic sets out to do he accomplishes, and with easy mastery. We do not say that the volume is all of equal merit, or that we assent to every explanation. But when we consider that through this long book what Mr. Bradley is chiefly occupied with is the hardest of literary tasks, distinguishing among sensations which, except in rare moments, are not fully and consciously felt by anyone, we must call it a remarkable achievement. The work of psychological analysis is done so delicately, so patiently and lucidly, that we do literally see our own feelings. We give a few specimens of Mr. Bradley's methods. He is explaining how you cannot draw a direct line between the form and substance of a poem:—

"Just as there is in music not sound on one side and a meaning on the other, but expressive sound, and if you ask what is the meaning you can only answer by pointing to the sounds; just as in painting there is not a meaning plus paint, but a meaning in paint, or significant paint, and no man can really express the meaning in any other way than in paint and in this paint; so in a poem the true content and the true form neither exist nor can be imagined apart.... what you apprehend may be called indifferently an expressed meaning or a significant form."

The reason is this:—

"Pure poetry is not the decoration of a pre-conceived and clearly defined matter: it springs from the creative impulse of a vague imaginative mass pressing for development and definition. If the poet already knew exactly what he meant to say, why should he write the poem? The poem would in fact already be written. For only its completion can reveal, even to him, exactly what he wanted. When he began and while he was at work, he did not possess his meaning; it possessed him. It was not a fully formed soul asking for a body: it was an inchoate soul in the inchoate body of perhaps two or three vague ideas and a few scattered phrases. The growing of this body into its full stature and perfect shape was the same thing as the gradual self-definition of the meaning. And this is the reason why such poems strike us as creations, not manufactures, and have the magical effect which mere decoration cannot produce. This is also the reason why, if we insist on asking for the meaning of such a poem, we can only be answered 'It means itself.'"

Equally striking are Mr. Bradley's delicate distinctions about the Sublime. "It does not follow that the most distinctively sublime must also be, in another sense, the most sublime." Mr. Bradley explains that you can get an exhibition of the sublime sometimes from the behaviour of quite small beings; beings as small as Tourguénief's sparrow, which flung itself at the open jaws of a dog to save its young.

"The truth that a sparrow and a mountain are different, and that Socrates is not Satan, interests it [the imagination] but little. What it cares for is the truth that, when they are sublime, they are all the same; for each becomes infinite, and it feels in each its own infinity." The conclusion is "that the exceeding greatness required for sublimity is always some kind of power, though in one class of cases the impression of this greatness can only be conveyed through immensity of extent."

There are apparent exceptions:—

"For example, the silence of night, or the sudden pause in a storm or in stormy music, or again the silence and movelessness of death, may undoubtedly be sublime; and how, it may be asked, can a mere absence of sound and motion be an exhibition of immense greatness? It cannot, I answer; but neither can it be sublime. If you apprehend the silence in these cases as a mere absence, no feeling of sublimity will arise in your mind; and if you do apprehend the silence as sublime, it is to you the sign of immense power, put forth or held in reserve. The 'dead pause abrupt of mighty winds' is the pause of mighty winds and not of gentle breezes; and it is not the absence of mighty winds, but their pause before they burst into renewed fury; or if their silence is not their will, it is a silence imposed on them by something mightier even than they. In either case there may be sublimity, but then there is the impression of immense power. In the same way the silence of night, when it seems sublime, is apprehended not as the absence but as the subdual of sound—the stillness wrought by a power so mighty that at its touch all the restless noises of the day fall dumb."

The Beautiful and the Sublime are obviously different, and there also is a difference in our state of mind in feeling and apprehending them—again obviously—but the precise nature of this latter difference is by no means obvious. Roughly, our acceptance of the Beautiful may be said to be immediate.

"The thing wins us and draws us towards itself without resistance. Something in us hastens to meet it in sympathy and love.... In the case of sublimity, on the other hand, this acceptance does not seem to be so immediate. There seem, in fact, to be two stages in it. First—if only for a fraction of a second—there is a sense of being checked or baffled, or even stupefied, or possibly even repelled or menaced, as though something were affecting us which we could not receive, or grasp, or stand up to. In certain cases we appear to shrink away from it, in the consciousness of our own feebleness or insignificance. This we may call by the convenient but too strong name of the negative stage; and nothing seems to correspond to it in our perception of loveliness or grace except sometimes a sense of surprise or wonder, wholly pleasant, and never amounting to a sense of check. Then to this first stage, in the case of the sublime, there succeeds, it may be instantaneously or more gradually, a powerful reaction, a rush of self-expansion, or an uplifting, or a sense of being borne out of the self that was checked, or even of being carried away beyond all checks and limits. These feelings, even when the sublime thing might be called forbidding, menacing, or terrible, are always positive—feelings of union with it."

There is thus some relation between the Beautiful and the Sublime; but can we make this relation clear while we distinguish?—

"Beauty, we may perhaps say, is the image of the total presence of the Infinite within any limits it may choose to assume; sublimity the image of its boundlessness, and of its rejection of any pretension to independence or absoluteness on the part of its finite forms; the one the image of its immanence, the other of its transcendence."

This is the critical intelligence by virtue of its intensity coming to a concentration with the flash and light of poetry. Such criticism affects us like great creative work. "Is not the charm of one of Plato's or Aristotle's definitions," asks Emerson,

"strictly like that of the 'Antigone' of Sophocles? It is, in both cases, that a spiritual life has been imparted to nature; that the solid-seeming block of matter has been pervaded and dissolved by a thought; that this feeble human being has penetrated the vast masses of nature with an informing soul, and recognized itself in their harmony, that is, seized their law."

This is true and very applicable to our purpose. In reading Mr. Bradley the brain often stops astounded at a sudden realization of its own processes. Let any one who thinks this language surprising read for himself the whole passage accounting for the pleasure we take in Falstaff on pp. 262 and 263, and beginning with the sentence, "The bliss of freedom gained in humour is the essence of Falstaff"; or the proof on pp. 237 and 238 of the coming development in Keats; or the still more beautiful passage, by way of an interpretation of Shelley's poetics, which explains why it is that we dislike a definite moral in poetry, and feel we are losing something when we get it; the passage on pp. 171 and 172 ending with the statement that

"although poets often have unusual powers of reflective thought, the specific genius of a poet does not lie there, but in imagination. Therefore his deepest and most original interpretation is likely to come by the way of imagination. And the specific way of imagination is not to clothe in imagery consciously held ideas, it is to produce half-consciously a matter from which, when produced, the reader may, if he chooses, extract ideas."

There is just one thing further we have to say in chronicling our impressions of this volume, and that is, that, with all its merit—indeed, just because of the peculiarity of its merit—it is not stimulating. We read Arnold on Burns, and we rush to contradict him, on Byron, and we take down Byron from the shelf to see if what he says is true. Arnold had his thesis sometimes fully developed before he began, and it sometimes ran away with him. But it is equally true that Arnold, with that objective method of his, with his points of view, his delightfully reverberating judgments, often so because so irritating, set alight in thousands the critical faculty. Arnold's shining merit consists, at least partly, in this, that he did not write merely his own critical books, but also made or recreated a critical literature.

Mr. Bradley's volume will not do that. What we have to deal with here is not a set of pronouncements, opinions, matter that is literature largely by virtue of its energizing quality; on the contrary, we find something much more like propositions proved, something in the nature of scientific discovery. Nor are we the least tempted to attempt to deal similarly with such outstanding æsthetic problems as are here left untouched. The ease of the style does not give the impression that such work is easily done, or that without an equipment like Mr. Bradley's it is possible to follow in his path.

For this reason it is probable that this volume will attain a permanence for which critical literature generally cannot hope. Very many of the things that are said here are finally said; they exhaust their subject. Of one thing we are certain—that there is no work in English devoted to the interpretation of poetic experience which can claim the delicacy and sureness of Mr. Bradley's.

Outlines of Introduction to the Hebrew Bible. By Alfred S. Geden. (Edinburgh, T. & T. Clark.)

MR. GEDEN's book betokens a sympathetic interest in his subject, wide reading, and a more or less independent manner of testing the literary and historical evidence with which he has to deal. His standpoint is that of an intelligent conservatism. He is ready to go with the critics so far as his own estimate of the facts makes it necessary for him to do so, but that estimate itself will to the thoroughgoing critic appear conditioned by the natural bias of a mind which shrinks from surrendering positions which it regards as important bulwarks of certain vital religious truths. A perfectly free atmosphere—an atmosphere, namely, in which the essential is completely disentangled from the accidental—is not reached in the book; but a half-way house no doubt has its own advantages and attractions, and many will be grateful to Mr. Geden for helping them to feel their way towards it.

The work does not fall into line with the kind of "Introduction" to the literature of the Old Testament of which Dr. Driver's much-studied publication is a classic example. It rather aims at combining an account of some of the literature with a good deal of information of a Masoretic and general nature, bearing more on the external aspect of the problem than on the literary and religious contents of the Biblical books. The main divisions are: I. Language of the Old Testament; II. The Text of the Old Testament; III. The Hebrew and Greek Canons of the Old Testament; IV. Later Hebrew Literature: Midrash, Mishna and Gemara, Talmud; V. The Versions; VI. The Pentateuch. It will be seen that chap. iv. (where, by the way, 'Talmud' is merely a repetition of 'Mishna and Gemara') takes the reader much beyond the limitation indicated in the title, and that the singling out of the Pentateuch for special treatment gives one the idea of a fragmentary treatise on the Hebrew Bible.

Many criticisms might be offered on details in the different chapters. The book is emphatically one which both demands and deserves a thorough revision. The explanation of the term "Helākah" as meaning "advance, an expansion of the Law," for instance, is certainly the only one that can be given. Quite unexpected are the spellings (apparently by the ear) מחלתא (for מכלתא) and הנשי (for הנשיא), on pp. 144 and 146 respectively. The dating of Hebrew MSS. from the supposed era of Creation is much more common than from the destruction of the first Temple referred to on p. 60 (where, besides, the author seems to have thought of the "building" of the Temple).

These and a number of similar points cannot but form a regrettable element to a reviewer who, recognizing the general value of the book, is nevertheless obliged to indicate its shortcomings. Critical argument on the composition and probable date of a Biblical book stands, of course, in a different category; for there is probably nothing more subtle than the influence almost unconsciously exercised by a man's theological opinion over his judgment in matters of this kind. It will therefore suffice to quote the following passage, showing Mr. Geden's conditional results on the problem of the Pentateuch:—

"It is evident... that if the composition of the last-named book [i.e. Deuteronomy]... is to be assigned to the age of Solomon, or of David, in the first half of the tenth century B.C.; and if, further, the Deuteronomic code presupposes the writing of J E and assumes familiarity with the regulations on the part of the people addressed, provision must be made in any chronological scheme of sufficient interval between the dates of the two documents to allow for the growth of this familiarity, and for the spread and general adoption of practices which J E tacitly, at least, condones, but which the author of Deuteronomy expressly condemns."

In this way Mr. Geden arrives, by means of further reasoning, at the opinion that the combined Jehovistic and Elohist code was probably formed before the period of the Judges. In the course of his argument he lays stress on two interesting ancient parallels to the finding of the law-book in the Temple about B.C. 620. One is the discovery of the foundation stone of Naram-Sin at Sippara in the time of Nabonidus (B.C. 555-39), and the other relates to the finding of certain chapters of the Egyptian 'Book of the Dead' in the foundations of sacred edifices. That the foundation stone laid by Naram-Sin is no parallel to the Deuteronomic law-book is acknowledged by Mr. Geden himself; and it may be argued that the analogy between chapters of the 'Book of the Dead' and the Hebrew law-book in question is not very close either.

The interest of the work is much enhanced by the fourteen good full-page illustrations of Biblical MSS. and printed texts.

Nineteenth Century Teachers, and other Essays. By Julia Wedgwood. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

MISS WEDGWOOD's articles, when they appeared in The Contemporary Review and The Spectator, made good reading, no doubt, for the train or the club; but to publish them in a massive tome of over four hundred closely printed pages is, we fear, to mistake the ephemeral for the monumental. For such a volume the excuse should be that it serves as prolegomena to a history of English thought in the nineteenth century, and by this time bold spirits are abroad ready to declare that the moment for writing that history is at hand. But the writer of prolegomena, no less than the historian, must, amongst other things, be detached from the controversies of the century, unprejudiced, and endowed with exceptional powers of intellect; wherefore we are unable to discover a justification for the volume before us. Yet, from the historian's point of view, the book is at least suggestive; he glances at the essayist's list of teachers—Maurice, Erskine of Linlathen, Kingsley, Hutton, Carlyle, Ruskin—and notes the omissions, as significant as the contents. These men were, more or less, the protagonists of one school of thought; about the other school Miss Wedgwood is silent. Her silence marks a distinction—the distinction between what we may call, for want of better labels, the Intellectual and Emotional Schools. The antagonism between them, as old as the history of thought, was in the nineteenth century not only acute, but also essential; in it, we believe, the historian must find his key.

Bentham may be regarded as the founder, and J. S. Mill as the representative, until his last years, of a school which it will be safer and more accurate to call Intellectual than Utilitarian; Henry Sidgwick, however, we must exclude both on account of the splendid originality of his thought and the fact that he lived on to the threshold of the twentieth century. The conclusions of this school had been for some time falling into discredit when they received a severe shaking in Mr. G. E. Moore's 'Principia Ethica.' Both in ethics and politics its thought is vitiated by being based on the fundamental fallacy of Hedonism. "Quantity of pleasure being equal, push-pin" (whatever push-pin may be) "is as good as poetry," said Bentham; and Mill substantially agrees. Pleasure alone is good as an end, is the doctrine of Hedonism; yet Mill on p. 12 of his 'Utilitarianism' says:—

"If one of the two [pleasures] is, by those who are competently acquainted with both, placed so far above the other that they prefer it, even though knowing it to be attended with a greater amount of discontent, and would not resign it for any quantity of the other pleasure which their nature is capable of, we are justified in ascribing to the preferred enjoyment a superiority in quality, so far outweighing quantity as to render it, in comparison, of small account."

It is astonishing that Mill should not have perceived what Mr. Moore has subtly demonstrated—that he has given away his case. If pleasure be the sole good, then one pleasure can only be better than another in so far as it exceeds that other in quantity of pleasure. To say that one pleasure is better than another in quality is to try the goodness of sole good by some criterion other than itself, and to judge that one sole good is more good than another sole good, not because it exceeds the other in quantity, but because it possesses some quality which ex hypothesi is not good as an end. One good as an end can be better than another only in the sense that it contains more good as an end. Mill is as one who should say that in jam the only good quality is sweetness, and yet maintain that this jam is better than that because, though they are equally sweet, this jam has a better quality of sweetness. If sweetness be the only good quality in jam, then the respective merits of jams must be tested by the quantity of their sweetness; but if one sweetness can be better than another, not because it is more sweet, but because it is better in quality, then the necessary quality in jam is not sweetness, but good sweetness. Sweetness as a criterion has been thrown overboard, and good has been set up in its place.

Having dealt with the ethical fallacy of Hedonism, we need not spend much time over the metaphysical—the fallacious proposition that good means pleasure. Surely, when we say that pleasure is good, we do not mean that pleasure is pleasure or a means to pleasure—our proposition is not tautologous? Rather we mean precisely what we say, that pleasure (amongst other things) is good. With characteristic lucidity Mr. Moore has shown that "good," like other qualities, red for instance, cannot be defined; but we do mean something by the epithet, and, what is more, we know what we mean.

The conclusions of the Intellectual School are discredited, but it has left us a priceless heritage in its method. It carried on and developed fully what had been only cautiously attempted by the boldest minds of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries; it succeeded at last in bringing thought back to the high road of progress. Premises, in future, were to be subject to as strict and thorough an examination as processes of ratiocination. In no department of thought were the most elaborate argumentative structures to be accepted until the soundness of the hypotheses on which they were based had been demonstrated. The Intellectuals, as we have seen, were capable of mistaking bad foundations for good, but they established the principle that no hypothesis, except the laws of thought, is to be taken for granted.

It was on this very point of method that the Emotional School quarrelled with the Intellectual. The former claimed the right of choosing its own hypotheses, always provided, of course, that such hypotheses helped to explain difficulties; and denied to the latter the right of criticizing, on intellectual grounds, its emotionally apprehended premises. The exponents of this school claimed so much for their premises that their conclusions were sometimes worthless, and ruled so much out of discussion that argument with them was often impossible. Maurice is perhaps the most obvious example, though his intellectual debility, to which Miss Wedgwood is by no means blind, makes it unfair to treat him as typical. "He regarded sickness as the shadow and type of sin, and yet as in some sense a spiritual privilege," Miss Wedgwood tells us:—

"How it could be possible that pain should be both the channel of a special teaching and also the work of the devil was a problem which some passages in his sermons show to have come quite clearly before him, and a letter here (vol. ii. 258) shows that he recognised an apparent contradiction in his own views; but it was to his mind a mark of truth to contain an apparent contradiction, and he seems to have felt always as if a contradiction were explained when both its members were distinctly stated."

It never occurred to him that the contradiction might follow from an error in his hypothesis, for that hypothesis he had placed above criticism. We are not surprised, therefore, when on the next page Miss Wedgwood says:—

"What made his whole drift hard to follow was that, sooner or later, his reader or hearer had to surrender for a time the belief that logical coherence was the test of truth."

If we have done the Emotional School wrong by putting forward Maurice as an example, we may do it justice by taking the case of Carlyle, who, though by no means its subtlest intellect, is, by the greatness of his art, its most eminent member. Oddly enough, Miss Wedgwood would almost exclude him from her school; for, after saying of the eighteenth century that "to the mind of that day there was no difficulty in believing the premisses and disbelieving the conclusion," she asserts that "this is the spirit which Carlyle most hated." Carlyle may have hated this spirit, but it was his own for all that. At heart he was a thorough sentimentalist, as dishonest with himself as any of those luckless people whom he vehemently damned as canting humbugs. To give but one example: Carlyle believed, rightly or wrongly, in eternal justice regulating the affairs of this world; he believed in it as something emotionally congenial to him, not as a metaphysical truth discovered and confirmed by the intellect; and from this belief he naturally deduced the theory that Right is Might. Applied to the history of the past, the theory bore fruit most grateful to a hero-worshipper; but when he was told that if in the past Right was Might, then it follows that Might was Right, he lost such manners and temper as he normally possessed, and drowned the argument in a flood of invective. Yet if history proves that Right is Might, it follows that the good cause has always been the triumphant; and if the good cause has always been the triumphant, then the triumphant cause has always been the good: Might, in fact, has been Right. Carlyle's attitude is characteristic of the Emotional School: unpalatable conclusions are to be rejected, but the rejection does not affect belief in the palatable premises.

The harm done by the Emotional School lies patent to the world; it has darkened counsel and confused issues in the past; and it still lends the sanction of great names to the complacent muddle-headedness of the majority. Its contribution of good is not so easily or generally recognized. In attacking the logical conclusions of the Intellectuals it fell into an excellent habit of appealing to facts, and this is a habit which modern thinkers might well study to acquire. Nothing is more fatally easy than, on slightly false premises, to construct a hopelessly false system, and the only safeguard is to test each logical deduction by comparison with all available experience. Had J. S. Mill asked himself severely, "When I say that poetry is good, do I mean only that poetry is pleasurable?" he might have saved himself from the Hedonistic fallacy.

This distinction that we have drawn between the Intellectual and Emotional Schools is, we believe, not only true, but also important, and must be taken into consideration by the future historian of nineteenth-century thought.

Giuseppe Baretti. By Lacy Collison-Morley. Introduction by F. Marion Crawford. With Portrait. (John Murray.)

IN the brief but excellent Introduction prefixed to the present work Marion Crawford begins by commenting on the singular position of Baretti in the world of letters: he left behind him two separate literary reputations, based upon works written in two languages. These two reputations, the Italian and the English, have remained separate for more than a century, because English writers interested in Baretti as a minor star in the Johnsonian constellation have usually been ignorant of or indifferent to his Italian fame, whilst, according to Marion Crawford, "the Italian of good average education rarely knows that Baretti was ever in England, still less that he wrote much more in English than in his native language." Mr. Collison-Morley is possessed of an equipment which enables him to bridge the gulf; and this he has done very satisfactorily.

After he was thirty Marcantonio Giuseppe Baretti spent very little time in his native land, and became thoroughly acclimatized in the country of his adoption. As he wrote to a countrywoman:

"My country has not treated me well enough to make it worth my while to turn my eyes towards her. Turin has better figs and better peaches than England, but they do not give you pensions of eighty pounds a year there as they have given me in England, and, with all due respect to my native land, I prefer pounds sterling to good figs and good peaches."

Yet his reputation is greater in Italy than in England to-day, being commemorated not only by the books written upon him by Piccioni, Ricciardi, and others, but also by a Florentine Critical Society and an eponymous newspaper. The family, though its pretensions to nobility do not seem above suspicion, is still well known in Piedmont, and certain buildings remain in the district of the Alto Monferrato to recall the memory of the Rivalta branch to which Giuseppe belonged. The name, we believe, is far from uncommon; but, had it not been for the Frusta Letteraria, little would have been heard of it.

Of the six chapters into which the author condenses the Italian portion of his biography, that which tells of "The Frusta Letteraria, and its Consequences" is by far the most important and interesting. Before his first visit to England (1751-60) Baretti had made some slight reputation by his verse, and had given a foretaste of his controversial powers by his attack upon the Professor of Literature at Turin; but it was not till his contact with English men of letters and study of English literature had added robustness and breadth of view to his natural ardour and turn for writing that he came to win an assured position in Italy as the wielder of the scourge (Frusta) of Aristarco Scannabue ("the Duncelkiller"). The paper was printed at Venice (nominally at Roveredo) and continued to appear fortnightly for about a year in 1763-4, being also continued monthly for a short time in 1765 at Ancona (nominally Trento). Its main career was cut short ostensibly on account of a frank criticism of Bembo, the Venetian poet; but it had raised up numerous enemies in the persons of living victims, among whom a certain Celestine monk named Buonapede issued a counterblast and obtained the countenance of the authorities. Baretti had to go into hiding for a time, and even after his return to England was under observation by the Venetian police. Not that there was anything political in his satires, which were mainly directed against the fashionable "Arcadians," blank verse writers, and archaeologists, though Goldoni, the comedy writer, was also assailed. Baretti did good service in defence of the purity of literary Italian and in ridiculing the academies and their vapid verse writers; but he was somewhat indiscriminating in his contempt for archaeology, and was constrained to apologize to the Marchese Tanucci, who was Neapolitan Minister of State as well as president of the Herculaneum Academy. "The stupid trade of an antiquary" was only, he thought, fit for a porter (jacchino); at this early stage the procedure of many of its professors was certainly crude.

The author points out that Baretti had already attacked blank verse in his Italian edition of Corneille before he saw England; but he traces his depreciation of the Scots in No. 9 of the Frusta to Johnsonian inspiration. There is something very modern in the tone in which the Italian satirist insists upon the solidarity of Caledonian men of letters, and attributes their influence and repute to this cause rather than to their intrinsic merit. Among the "very few" Scotch writers whom he judges worthy to compare with "the hundreds" of celebrated English, he names Shaftesbury, Mr. Forbes, Bishop Burnet, and Dr. Arbuthnot, adding, "though I rather think he was a Scotchman too." If this be a slip for "Englishman," Baretti is mistaken; on the other hand, the first of the four certainly did not come from the north. As to contemporary Scots, Baretti praises Hume for his pleasant style, but notes his "frequent Scotticisms"; rates Robertson as a successful imitator of Johnson; and declares that "Tomson" is much praised but little read, and will never attain the fame of Pope. Mallet gets a good word on Richardson's recommendation, but Smollett is rather contemptuously dismissed. Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," be it noted, was only just about to appear. Baretti warns the admirer of the Scots, whose work he was reviewing, and all Italians studying English, not to rely upon the opinions of the English themselves in these matters;

"for I know few Englishmen who have not a spark more of imagination than they should have when their own affairs are under discussion. Few Englishmen will own that Milton's blank verse bores one at times; few will admit that Spenser's metre is most tedious; few that Pope is too far-fetched and epigrammatical; and few that a portion of Swift's brain was always defiled with filth."

In view of the date at which they were written, and Baretti's as yet imperfect acquaintance with English literature, some of these criticisms are sufficiently remarkable. It is justly observed by Mr. Collison-Morley that, great as Baretti's obligations confessedly were to Johnson, he owed nothing to him in the matter of style. The excerpts we have just cited are, of course, translated, but there is abundance of the writer's English in existence to convince one of this.

Before he left England for his last sojourn of any length in Italy Baretti had published in London the first edition of his well-known Italian dictionary; and within two years of his return he issued his excellent 'Account of the Manners and Customs of Italy,' his first considerable work in our language. His entertaining travel-book, 'A Journey from London to Genoa, through England, Portugal, Spain, and France,' which followed in 1770, is an English adaptation of three volumes of letters written to his brothers and published in Italy several years previously. These two books (with his Italian and Spanish dictionaries) form the writer's claim to remembrance rather than those spiteful and unmannerly strictures upon Mrs. Thrale, which, as Mr. Collison-Morley remarks, are virtually all of his English writings that are read at the present day.

Giuseppe triumphantly writes home to his brother Filippo to tell him how "the king himself" had read and liked 'The Manners and Customs,' and how "the other evening a beautiful lady, famous for her wit, her charm, her modesty, and many other good qualities, kissed me without ceremony in a very large assembly, saying she did so as a return for the pleasure which my second volume especially had given her."

The Society of Antiquaries had elected him a member the year before; the honourable (and at first honorary) appointment of Foreign Secretary to the Royal Academy soon followed. Between the two publications came the stabbing affray in the Haymarket, which, though it caused Baretti some distress and even anxiety, ended in a veritable triumph for him. Baretti was probably well advised in waiving his claim to have half of the jury selected from his own countrymen; and he claimed credit for the whole plan of his defence, which was aided by the testimony of Beauclerk, Johnson, William Fitzherbert, Burke, Garrick, Goldsmith, and Dr. Halifax. He complained that the report of his speech which appeared in the papers was mutilated and imperfect, "and in some places said just the opposite to what I really said." But the account which he contemplated writing himself, "containing some strange stories," unhappily never appeared; posterity has had to be satisfied with a version in ottava rima which was composed and given to the world by a grandnephew in 1857.

Johnson's opinion of his friend is, perhaps, too well known for quotation. Mrs. Thrale's estimate, despite their bitter quarrel and mutual detestation, is probably not unjust :—

"His character is easily seen, and his soul above disguise, haughty and insolent, and breathing defiance against all mankind; while his powers of mind exceed most people's and his powers of purse are so slight that they leave him dependent on all. Baretto is for ever in the state of a stream dammed up; if he could once get loose, he would bear down all before him."

Garriek, who knew him well, spoke of his lack of veracity. In this respect he resembled his enemy Mrs. Thrale: it was a certain "mendacious falsehood" (the phrase is Miss Reynolds's), which provoked the only quarrel between him and Johnson. Baretto and Boswell hated each other heartily; and there was a mutual antipathy between the former and Goldsmith, who resented the superior assurance of the Italian when in company with the Hornecks. Baretto appreciated Englishwomen as greatly as he looked down upon his own countrywomen, "with their ignorance, their horrid manner, and their boundless superstition." The general summary of the English national character contained in the 'Lettere Familiari,' which is said by our author to be accepted in Italy as classical, is certainly acute enough. It begins "Every one there [in England] is convinced that England is the best country in the whole world," and goes on to credit us with bravery by land and sea, simplicity and benevolence, unostentatious generosity, "heroic charity." The English, he says,

"do their utmost to make money; but once they have made it, they spend it freely.... Noblemen in England are not proud and grasping, as they are in many parts of Italy. They are more anxious to win the love than the respect of their servants; and they are ashamed of being grossly ignorant."

Elsewhere he puts us "quite at the head of mankind," though adding a sentence which seems to imply that he considered us rather prone to rest upon our oars. As to literature Baretto championed Shakespeare against Voltaire, and had an unbounded admiration for English poetry and science. Mr. Collison-Morley holds him to have been the first Italian to know and appreciate us before Alfieri.

Temperance and industry were marked characteristics of Baretto, but, though he evidently had a good eye for a bargain, he had no turn for economy, and was a poor man to the last. He seems to have been good to his own countrymen when he found them in distress; but his continual drafts upon his brothers' resources finally wore out the bond of a strong family affection.

We have but slight reserves to make in our commendation of this interesting and well-composed book. The author is rather too sparing of his notes, and sometimes a little obscure in the matter of relatives and antecedents. One of his few foot-notes (p. 176) makes "the Lord Mayor Townsend" the recipient of Goldsmith's blundering ascription of the nickname Malagrida; it is Shelburne (the first Lord Lansdowne), who is usually said to have been called after the unfortunate Jesuit. It is true that the celebrated verses on the "Bas Bleus" were supposed to have come from the pen of Sir William Pepys; but a note should have been added drawing attention to his denial of the authorship, which seems more likely to belong to Dr. Burney. Philidor, who shared with Baretto the proceeds of certain benefit performances in 1778, is incompletely described as "a well-known French musician": he was still better known as a chess-player. The portrait of Baretto which forms the frontispiece is not the well-known picture by Reynolds, but one in the possession of Mr. Murray. It is more pleasing as to features, but has not presumably so interesting a history attaching to it.

NEW NOVELS.

The Love-Brokers. By Albert Kinross. Frontispiece by P. B. Hickling. (Cassell & Co.)

MR. KINROSS'S aim in this novel seems to have been to indict the practice of the divorce court; and he has many rough things to say of the law and its agents. A president of the divorce court is represented as offering the severest condemnation of the system. This theme would not seem a likely one to take the reader; but the fact is that the tale is so vivid that one is carried forward on an increasing interest to the close. At the end we think Mr. Kinross has made a mistake. In order to avoid the stigma of the court, he has chosen a conventional way out for hero and heroine. But this writer is singularly individual, and holds us, whether he gives us romance or melodrama or philosophy. Some day he will find his proper métier, and then we shall expect a fine book.

Samson Unshorn. By Reginald Turner. (Chapman & Hall.)

MR. TURNER has steadily improved in his work, and we do not hesitate to pronounce his latest novel the best he has done. Oddly enough, it deals with a theme which seems much in the air just now, namely, the founding and conduct of a huge miscellany of cheap papers and periodicals. Samson Unshorn we must accept as Mr. James Maxwell, who becomes a millionaire proprietor of newspapers at a very early age. This character is excellently painted and never over-emphasized, unless it be in the crowning scene. The story, as may be imagined, is full of satire, and some of it is very good satire. A gentle sense of humour plays over it; and the people are real. We welcome Mr. Turner's arrival. But we would point out that the book is vitiated by a grave error in taste on the penultimate page, apparently due to the author's desire to keep his heroine conventionally respectable.

Galatea of the Wheatfield. By M. E. Francis. (Methuen & Co.)

THE idyllic beginning of this story is hardly in accordance with the rest of it, which seems to be set in a false key, and closes upon something nearly resembling a discord. Whatever of unreality there may be in the earlier chapters is easily lost sight of through a pervasive atmosphere of romance, and the author's powers of characterization. It is an old tale that she sets forth to relate—the vicissitudes of a beautiful rustic who loves above her station, and the subsequent dispersal of her dream. The conclusion is plausible enough in itself, but rendered forced and unreal in the treatment. We cannot but feel that Tabitha suffers more at the author's hands than from her actual uncongenial environment when she visits her lover's relatives; while the chivalrous young lover himself undergoes an abrupt conversion to snobbery. The complete volte-face performed by the youthful pair is unconvincing. The heroine ultimately bestows her hand, and presumably her affections, upon a worthy, but boorish, farm hand, and her well-born sweetheart espouses his pretty cousin.

Starbrace. By Sheila Kaye-Smith. (Bell & Sons.)

THE promise which we saw in Miss Kaye-Smith's first novel is renewed and partly fulfilled by this moving and tragic story, of which the only considerable fault is the obvious effort by which the author arrives at dramatic situations. The principal character is the son, by a mésalliance, of an aristocrat called Starbrace, who, by incurring his father's wrath, is reduced to the status of an English agricultural labourer in the first half of the eighteenth century. Young Starbrace, who inherits his father's pride and his mother's ill-breeding, is a mettlesome boor of eighteen, when his grandfather suddenly takes charge of him, and authorizes his chaplain to educate him. It shows the power of Miss Kaye-Smith's art that we heartily dislike this virtuous, suave, but inflexible disciplinarian, though young Starbrace receives no unjustifiable ill-usage at his hands. To this tutor is indirectly due his pupil's disastrous association with a gang of highwaymen and heroism at Prestonpans. The author writes with uncommon verve and decision.

A Little Green World. By J. E. Buckrose. (Hutchinson & Co.)

MR. BUCKROSE has shown, in more than one attractive story of country life, that he possesses a combination of gifts of a high order. He has a sense of drama, insight, a feeling for nature, and humour, and these qualities are effectively displayed in his latest novel, which he calls "a village comedy without a plot and without a problem." The narrative, if "without a plot," has plenty of movement, and the character-drawing is full of vitality. Lydia Bell, with whose doings and suitors the story is mainly concerned, is a vivid and pleasing figure, and the other characters, though not wholly free from touches of caricature, stand out clearly and harmoniously. Mr. Buckrose knows intimately the lives of the people who dwell far away from towns, and, though the note he usually strikes is one of sympathy, he can reveal their foibles and pettinesses. Some parts of the book are marred by verbal witticisms from which his sense of humour might have saved him.

Penelope Ann. By J. Henry Harris. Photographs by Charles F. Grindrod. (Greening & Co.)

It is a pity that Mr. Harris has not troubled to stiffen his Cornish romance with a stronger plot, for its atmosphere is delightful. The story is of the slightest, though it ends with the marriage of the heroine. Mr. Harris, however, has not cared very much about that. He has been interested in depicting life and character among these Cornish fisher folk at Porthilly. The book is in reality a collection of sketches, local portraits, habits and superstitions. As such it will charm Cornish folk and all those who love their county. The photographs representing the characters are more successful than this sort of illustration usually is.

Miss Pilsbury's Fortune. By Christine R. Shand. (Mills & Boon.)

MISS PILSBURY was the only child of poor, but honest parents who, becoming unexpectedly rich, are doomed to lead a joyless life in gilded halls surrounded by scornful aristocrats whose titles seem to us more than a little "mixed." Their daughter meanwhile is wooed and nearly won by a dissolute sprig of nobility; but in the nick of time appears the deceived and deserted love of former days, with infant, ring, and cough, complete even to the handkerchief which, when withdrawn from her lips is stained with red. Shortly after the failure of a bank releases Miss Pilsbury from the burden of wealth, and leaves her free to form a marriage of affection with the exemplary playfellow of her childish years. The story is scarcely remarkable either for originality or subtlety. The descriptions of Quaker life are drawn with sympathy, and apparently from knowledge.

SHORT STORIES.

The Green Curve, and other Stories. By Ole Luk-Oie. (Blackwood & Sons.)—These eleven military tales, some of which exhibit the terribly picturesque aspects of modern warfare, are here and there worthy of comparison with the late Mr. Arnold-Forster's tour de force of romance mingled with technicality, 'In a Conning Tower.' In 'The Joint in the Harness' the dirigible airship figures as a vulnerable, but deadly agent of destruction. In 'Mole-Warfare,' an imaginary incident in a Russo-Japanese war, the catastrophic climax seems like an argument in a brief for the defence of General Stoessel for surrendering Port Arthur. The title-story deals with the problem of the bouches inutiles in a besieged town, and displays an animus against government by civilians which is doubtless as old as civilization. Three or four tales, more or less relating to the Boer War, are genuinely humorous; and sympathetic insight is shown in 'The Limit,' a tale in which, after contemplating various discomforts, the reader sees the point at which a soldier's patriotism may suddenly vanish. "Ole Luk-Oie" has done well, and should continue writing.

Studies in Wives. By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes. (Heinemann.)—The first two, as also the fourth and sixth of these half-dozen "studies," may fairly be said to satisfy those difficult tests which differentiate the novelist from the writer of short stories. They are exactly of the right length, contain no flat passages, and deal with situations which are striking and original. In all six we notice that faculty for sympathetic, yet discriminating observation, which accompanies this author's essays in character drawing. The subjects are in no case what is conventionally known as "pleasant," but—this is also a characteristic of Mrs. Belloc Lowndes—no attempt is made to treat them from the non-moral—and inhuman—point of view. At least half of these stories, indeed, seem to be written with a purpose, the inculcation, namely, of the Catholic view concerning divorce. But for one or two lapses, the author writes in an excellent style.

The Stairway of Honour, by Maud Stepney Rawson (Mills & Boon), is divided into three sections—tales of olden days, tales of the eighteenth century, and tales of to-day, so that there is no lack of variety. Of these sections the third is undoubtedly the best, as the first two, although written with grace and charm, are enveloped in an atmosphere of artificiality that detracts from their interest, except as a pretty performance. The author is at her best in 'A Visit to the Enchantress,' 'The Warrior's Mother,' and 'The Squire goes to School,' all excellent examples of her talent for reticence, tenderness, and wit. 'The Adventurers' is a cleverly treated episode which would have interested us more but for a certain accidental reminiscence of another and a better-told tale, Stevenson's 'Providence and the Guitar.' The resemblance is slight, it is true, but it suffices to rub the bloom off the illusion. For the rest, with regard to the former portion of the book, Mrs. Rawson should guard herself against a tendency to over-opulence of adjectives and excessive playfulness.

Ireland and horses are again the themes selected by Miss Dorothea Conyers, and, as usual, she deals with them in an attractive manner. In the most ambitious of the stories contained in The Conversion of Con Oregan (Hutchinson & Co.) we have, in addition, a telepathic element, contributed by the heroine, who makes a much stronger appeal to us than the average wild Irish girl of fiction. In another tale we once more encounter the "Boy" of an earlier novel, who does not seem to have gained either in wisdom or morals from his six years' domestication upon Irish soil. The short sketch 'Burglary' is on different lines from most of the others, and appears to be founded on an original idea.

More Bunkum. By Frank Richardson. (Eveleigh Nash.)—Mr. Richardson frankly confesses that his books are an "insult to the public," and it is not for us to contradict him. We should prefer to put it more civilly, and say that Mr. Richardson is a licensed jester, who gets his laugh because he is supposed to be funny rather than because he is so. His new collection of stories is of the familiar pattern, only partly about whiskers, and he professes to have asterisked the tales concerned with them for the benefit of the reader. Fortunately also he has been merciful in only making casual references to his pet subject in several of his stories.

Mr. Richardson's Preface is personal. He explains himself in it, and shows how he came to take up whiskers. He begins with his schooldays, mentioning his contemporaries. At Oxford it appears, Prof. Yorke-Powell (sic) said to him: "Richardson, you will always be a fool, but your sense of humour may prevent you from being a damned fool." After that it would be a pity to deny Mr. Richardson a sense of humour; yet we cannot profess to be enlivened by these miscellanea of stories. Sometimes they are caustic; always they aim at satire; and generally they are flippant. Flippancy is very well if it be artistic; but Mr. Richardson would be the last to lay claim to artistic powers.

In the United States have been developed a theory and a practice of the short story which have almost crystallized into a convention. If one reads an American conte nowadays, one can recognize its origin in a page or two. Perhaps similarly Americans can detect an English story. The formula seems to have grown up in the hands of several writers, notably Mr. Howells and the Boston school. At its best it is an admirable prescription, as the pages of American magazines testify constantly. At its worst it is a perfunctory formula, the fabric and ghost of something that is not there. Miss Clare Benedict's volume A Resemblance, and other Stories (Putnam's Sons), is an exhibition neither of the best nor of the worst. It is a good, sensible, workmanlike fulfilment of the formula. There are ten stories here, which have been reproduced from eminent American magazines. They are characterized by the over-refinement, the over-subtlety, and the over-elaboration of the school; but they convey also its sincerity, its aim at being honest, and at the same time intellectual, and its almost morbid disregard of form or plot. One may read these stories with a sense of gentle satisfaction, if with no thrill.

Anatole France has reprinted, under the title Les Sept Femmes de la Barbe-Bleue et autres Contes Merveilleux (Paris, Calmann-Lévy), partly from the Revue de Paris, four important stories, the most interesting of which, 'La Chemise,' is singularly wanting in originality of theme. The king is a neurasthenic, before that modern malady was invented. The doctors differ, but finally declare that he will never be well until he wears the shirt of a happy man. A Royal Commission is appointed to search for such a garment. It divides into a majority and a minority, the former desiring to find the shirt among the prosperous, while the minority believe it more likely to be discovered among those thought "wretched" by their "betters." At last the second section trace a humble philosopher in apparent distress, who stoutly maintains that he is happy, and proves his case. Unfortunately, as in at least one earlier story by another writer, he has no shirt. The style is different from that of the author in the ironic passages of 'Sur la Pierre Blanche' and 'L'Île des Pingouins.' It is an exact reconstitution of that of Voltaire in two of the best-known tales of the eighteenth century. Some critics are delighted with 'Le Miracle du Grand Saint Nicolas,' not attractive to ourselves; and we fail to find much charm in the whitewashing of Blue Beard. Characteristic passages, of course, abound in the volume, and light up the reconstruction of Perrault's 'Sleeping Beauty in the Wood,' in which are described the subsequent adventures of the aged courtiers who attended the princess.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

A Bishop in the Rough. Edited by the Rev. D. Wallace Duthie. With a Preface by the Bishop of Norwich. (Smith, Elder & Co.)—After the lapse of over forty years the journal which the present Bishop of Norwich kept of his life in British Columbia, and of his travels in the United States, the islands of the Pacific, and the Chinese Empire, has been rescued from oblivion by a discriminating and appreciative editor. Although it describes much that has passed away, Mr. Wallace Duthie is fully justified in his opinion that it has lost little of its freshness and interest. The Bishop adds a Preface of his own, in which he takes occasion to give a vivid character-sketch of that doughty church worker, Dr. Walter Farquhar Hook of Leeds—"the man who gave the impulse to my own life."

It was at New Westminster on the Frazer river that the young clergyman began his ministrations, in circumstances that would have made most men think only of discovering the quickest way to get back to England. His first residence was a log hut, which three miners handed over to him because it had served their turn. Here he was brought face to face with the reality of things, and made the discovery that there are only six necessities for life: "shelter, fuel, water, fire, something to eat, and blankets." It says much for this emulator of Mark Tapley that when he first appreciated his surroundings he sat down on his bunk and indulged in a hearty laugh. All round New Westminster was dense virgin forest. Mr. Duthie declares that "Mr. Sheepshanks was a backwoodsman by nature," and the journal records only one instance of his losing himself in the woods. Then he sat down on the trunk of a tree, lit his pipe, and waited till the rising of the moon gave him his bearings. The incident, trifling in itself, reveals the self-reliance and clear-headedness of the man.

Hard as were the conditions of life at New Westminster, they were the height of comfort in comparison with those at the Cariboo goldfields. In this "abomination of desolation," which was almost inaccessible, Mr. Sheepshanks and his co-worker, Mr. Dundas, did much good in the rough mining camp. The impression they made was aptly conveyed by one of the miners themselves: "Wal, whether those chaps do much good I don't know. But anyhow they've got grit." Speaking for himself, Mr. Sheepshanks wrote: "I never received anything but kindly and respectful treatment from the miners." Here is a description of a church service in the largest drinking saloon in the district:—

"The monte tables were swept away at the further end of the saloon, and benches and chairs put out for the congregation, and a small table for me. I rang the dinner bell up and down the street, and at the door of the saloon, and soon had a gathering of about thirty men. There was not a woman on the creek.....The men sang fairly well, and listened attentively and gravely. Levity or obvious inattention would be thought bad form. At the other end of the saloon 'bar-keeper' was handing out occasional cocktails.....When 'the preaching' was over, as I was thanking 'bar-keep' for his courtesy, he politely offered me a drink. 'Thank you, I don't use it, but I will take a cigar.' 'Wal, sir, I guess you had the whole crowd here this evening.' 'Whom do you mean?' 'Why, sir, all the gamblers. Did you observe that handsome Jew right opposite you? That was Lichenstein, who keeps the bank.'"

There are many typical cases cited of Englishmen of education who had gone to the goldfields in the hope of gaining a fortune, and drifted beyond the pale of civilization, as it were, under the stress of disappointment. More than once occurs a meeting like that with the man stripped to the waist, baking bread: "Where have I seen you before?" "I met you when at Cambridge."

Mr. Sheepshanks paid a brief visit to England in 1864 for the purpose of raising funds to build a new and worthy church at New Westminster in place of the temporary building, and on his way across the United States visited the Mormon capital at Salt Lake City. He had a long interview with Brigham Young, preached at his request a sermon to an assembly of 3,000 Mormonites, and went once to hear a play in the theatre, where "there was a considerable preponderance of females and an overwhelming number of children." If the applause became too loud, the president merely pulled back the curtain of his box, looked round, and at once all was hushed.

The later portion of the journal relates to the tour in China, whence Mr. Sheepshanks returned to Europe across Mongolia and Siberia in the pre-railway days. He gives a very interesting account of the lamas of Ourga, and he witnessed the ceremony of the Grand Lama, i.e., the Taranath Lama—leaving for country quarters. As the great man, raised high in a sedan chair on the shoulders of his attendant lamas, passed the traveller, he looked displeased at his not kneeling like the rest—which "British obstinacy forbade"; but he quickly recognized that the recalcitrant was a foreigner, and the expression of this human god turned to "a stare of eager curiosity." Mr. Sheepshanks succeeded in bringing away a genuine Tibetan prayer wheel, which a young lama procured for him "at a good price."

The writer had, in the course of his travels under conditions when travel was much more of a toil than the pleasure it has since become, many adventures, and they certainly lose nothing in the telling, for there are many good stories. It fell to the Bishop's lot to be the chief actor in one or two curious coincidences. In the year 1859 Bishop Hills gave to Mr. Sheepshanks his New Westminster charge. In 1894 Bishop Sheepshanks presented his old chief to a living in his diocese. In 1867 Mr. Sheepshanks, in passing through Siberia, gave a Greek archimandrite his views as to bishops being too highly paid in our Church, and curates being paid too little. Forty years later a Norfolk gentleman met the same archimandrite, who referred to the incident, and wondered what had happened to his English visitor. On hearing that he had become a bishop, he expressed curiosity to know whether his opinions had remained unchanged. The Bishop's comment, "I will tell the old gentleman when I next meet him," is typical of the breezy optimism and sound good sense which he displayed throughout his career "in the rough," and with which this narrative is redolent.

FURTHER excellent Church work is recorded in Eighteen Years in Uganda and East Africa, by Bishop Tucker, 2 vols. (Arnold). This book is really a history of the Uganda Protectorate, and deals with so many and such weighty issues that an adequate notice within narrow limits is difficult. Bishop Tucker's inevitable references to controverted questions are marked by fairness and good taste; we may mention his treatment of the thorny subject of the Roman Catholic Mission. His narrative is concerned in the first instance with strictly missionary matters, and with politics as incidental to them—for the affairs of the British East Africa Company and the events connected with the annexation are inextricably intertwined with the history of the Mission. There are not many passages of ethnological interest; and in this direction the Bishop is perhaps hardly a safe guide, as he says (p. 96) that the tribal institutions of the Baganda—which are only a more highly developed form of those virtually universal among the Bantu—were "never, I am convinced, evolved from within. [They have] come from the outside; from whence it is hard to say, but most probably from Abyssinia." The following passage throws an interesting side-light on the social organization of the people:—

"The problems connected with the relations of capital and labour, with which the European is so familiar, were unknown in Uganda at the time of which I am writing. The payment of wages was a novelty, little appreciated and hardly understood. The peasant rendered to his chief as a matter of course the labour of his hands. The chief thanked his dependants for their services as those who served him willingly: 'Mwebale, mwebale, ban-ange' ('Thank, thank you, my friends'), was his greeting as he went among them, as they laboured at house or fence. 'Awo munange' ('How kind of you, my friend') was the answer.....A missionary who tried to get a house built by paid labourers found that the only men in the country who would work for him were those who had the misfortune to be in debt. On visiting the building, to view the progress of the work, the missionary neglected to thank his workmen. He was reminded by his men of his neglect. 'But,' he pleaded in excuse, 'I pay your wages, why should I thank you?' Then came the answer: 'Was it ever known since the world began that a master refused to thank his men?'"

Other parts of the enormous diocese are dealt with besides Uganda proper: we get graphic pictures of the Kilimanjaro district; the missions at Freretown and Rabai, behind Mombasa; the Mpwapwa and Mamboya country, Bunyoro and Mount Elgon, and the Masai. The numerous illustrations, from the author's water-colour sketches, add greatly to the attractiveness of the book. Some misspelt proper names and Swahili words have escaped correction in the reading of the proofs. The mention of Swahili reminds us that Bishop Tucker seems a little hard on that language (ii. 216), cordially as we agree with his objection to its use in the schools of Uganda, to the exclusion of the rich and beautiful vernacular.

The Thoughts of Lucia Halliday, edited by R. M. (Methuen & Co.), are, as is customary with their kind, haphazard musings, generally commonplace enough, on a variety of topics, sublime and trivial, and make rather excessive demands upon the indulgence of the reader. "Thoughts" on books, religion, and morality are jumbled together with reflections called forth by violin strings, snow in summer, picture-hanging, and table d'hôte small talk; and all are set forth with the familiar air of combined aloofness and instruction evident in such a passage as the following:—

"For it is too true that in many instances life separates more than distance or death. Clough has given us a striking picture of this in his beautiful poem 'Qua cursum ventus,' where two ships, becalmed at eve, are carried far apart through the night, as the wind rises, and in the morning they find they are no longer side by side as before."

In a similar vein we are told of the Basques that "their origin is, however, obscure, and philologists have disputed over their language"; and of 'Comus' that it "would have been out of place in Charles II.'s court." The volume includes one or two short poems gracefully expressed, and a collection of "Anecdotes."

THE ENGLISH CHURCH PAGEANT.

FOUR years ago we chronicled the opening of the Pageant movement. The spectacle at Sherborne has been more fruitful of results than its promoters could have anticipated, and has enabled other towns to out-distance the originators. The main features, however, remain unchanged. Pageants testify to the value for popular purposes of teaching conveyed more directly than any book can convey it, to a revived interest in colour and beauty, and perhaps to an awakening of genuine dramatic feeling. They are essentially democratic folk-spectacles; and this quality was exhibited to the full in the biggest of all the series, which we witnessed last week at Fulham. The episodes were presented in such a way as to enlist the interest and active service of Churchmen of all classes from the different deaneries and districts taking part; and the organizing of the voluntary performers, 4,500 in number, can have been no light task. Nor was the task lightened by "swapping horses in mid-stream"; certain defects in the performance were probably due to the exchange of Mr. Frank Lascelles for Mr. Moss as Master which took place on the very eve of presentation. It was a piece of ill-fortune that the Master of the Pageant as performed should have been in command for a few weeks only.

In the Pageant as designed there was one great fault: it was too long. At the actual presentment on Thursday, the 10th inst., there was another: it was too slow. Probably the attempt to give ten episodes in the afternoon was an initial error. When to this we add the long waits between the acts, made longer by dismal weather, and by the dragging of all the choral interludes, and the apparent love for retardation of the conductors, it is not surprising that the show lasted more than four hours. In consequence, though all the seats were paid for, there was a very poor attendance in the evening, and row upon row of empty benches faced the performers. The depressing weather was, perhaps, in part responsible for this. But all through the afternoon performance there was a lack of verve, reflected in the listless air of the spectators, who showed enthusiasm only at the very pretty children's dance at the end of the miracle play. As one put it, "What all the saints have failed to do has been achieved by a ballet; these children have brought the house down." At the same time we must add that the feature seemed in keeping both in style and manner. This was far from being the case with the dance of the spangled maidens at the close of the "Seven Bishops" scene in the evening. The whole performance of the first day was rather a dress rehearsal; and we believe that many features underwent a change for the better on the succeeding days. But while a play which is to run for a hundred nights or more can well afford to waste a night, this is not the case with a pageant whose outside limit is a fortnight. Altogether, the impression left on our minds was that of a great opportunity largely missed through insufficient rehearsing. We say this even allowing for the inevitable defects of amateur performances—defects we are willing to palliate in regard to the enthusiasm and real sacrifices which many taking part displayed.

It was, as we have said, a great opportunity, and we must commend the effort to teach the English people something of what the continuity of the Church means, to bring before their eyes the exuberant gaiety and brightness which, along with squalor and ugliness, were so marked a feature of the Middle Ages. Nowadays we have all the ugliness, more than all the misery, and, except in the private mansions of the "triumphant classes," but little of the joy and splendour. The promoters have been blamed—we think, unfairly—for laying so much stress upon one aspect of Church life. But no one who knows the Middle Ages is ignorant that the cloister was one of its main features; that the monastic ideal was regarded by many who did not follow it as far the highest; and that the destruction of religious communities was not merely the aim of royal brigands like Henry VIII., but also definitely and theoretically the objective of Luther and Melancthon. In thus emphasizing the importance of monastic ideals in the Middle Ages, and stigmatizing the robbery of the sixteenth century, the promoters of the Pageant were not only within their rights; they would have been untrue to the perspective of history had they done otherwise. On the other hand, we think the dull and spiritless scene of Parker's consecration might well have been exchanged for some more definitely "Evangelical" episode, such as a sermon by Wesley or the foundation of the Church Missionary Society.

To come to the details of the performance, from start to finish the colour arrangements were admirable. Whether we take the blue of the warriors in the early scenes, or the costumes of James I. and his courtiers, or the crowd at Laud's execution, there was no mistake artistically or (so far as we could judge) archaeologically. The crowds and processions were well marshalled, and walked on the whole with dignity, but not always. In scenes like the coronation of Edward VI. and the trial of the Seven Bishops there was a great want of men in the crowd, also of noise; they were not "rowdy" enough, and were afraid of "giving themselves away."

By far the most dignified and impressive of all the episodes was the funeral procession of Henry V., in the evening. The whole arrangement of this, including the 'Dies Iræ,' was masterly, all the more effective because it was entirely without dialogue. Dialogue, except occasionally, is out of place in a pageant. From the nature of the performers, it is likely to be imperfectly executed; from the nature of the scene, it is sure to be imperfectly heard by many of the spectators. There was undoubtedly too much talking in this pageant, and the talk was nowhere of a very high order. One scene, which might have been the best, was irremediably spoiled by atrocious acting. Every schoolboy knows the story of Becket's murder, and we believe that any schoolboy taken at random would have made of it something more life-like and vivid than the presentment at Fulham, following as it did the rather affecting episode of Becket's entry into Canterbury and the coming of the four knights. We learn that this death-scene was cut out in later performances, and we are glad of it.

For the closing scenes both afternoon and evening we have nothing but praise: magnificent as spectacles, they were worthy of all that had preceded. The acting, as we have said, was nowhere first-rate, and sometimes third-rate; but the speaking of Latimer's sermon on the plough was effective; so also was the miracle play.

Despite a few flaws and a slight hint of a controversial tendency, the Pageant may be regarded on the whole as both true to history and fair to see. As was but fitting, it was preceded by an impressive choral Eucharist, and a sermon, brief, but effective, by the Bishop of London.

THE COLCHESTER PAGEANT.

THE rehearsal of the Colchester Pageant, to which the press was invited last Saturday, was carried out under conditions of weather which did not allow the players a fair chance. Though the rain had ceased before the performance began, the ground was so bemired as to "crave wary walking." Impetuous warriors could not help slipping, and the dancing in the middle of the arena was sadly hampered. Still there was plenty of spirit and ingenuity in the action, and when the whole has been revised and reduced it should prove one of Mr. Louis N. Parker's great successes. He mentioned at the luncheon given in the Town Hall that the scheme had been some two years in preparation, and the enthusiasm of the crowd of workers was evident throughout. Mr. Parker has had the support of a mayor of literary taste, and undefeated optimism. Much credit is due to the Mistress of the Robes (Mrs. Wm. Claridge), the Mistress of Designs (Miss Hastings-Irwin), and the Mistress of Headdresses (Miss Senior) for the excellent results of their work. The dresses were brilliant, and specially effective in the various children's dances. It was difficult to judge of the dancing itself in the conditions aforesaid, but, with all allowance for uncertain footing, the performers seemed somewhat at sea in their evolutions. The Morris Dance and Stately Dance will, however, with more practice, be as successful as the more irregular Dance of the Roman Maidens and of Fishermen and Fishwives. The Rigadoon, with Sir Arthur Sullivan's music, is worthy of applause for its colour and movement.

The scene in the Castle meadow has as its centre a white-columned temple inscribed "Iiviri et Senatus Coloniae Claudianæ." To the right of the spectator a gently rising bank allows of two effective entrances at some distance. The further of these entrances at the back of the meadow gave an occasion to emphasize the excellent horsemanship shown throughout. Cavaliers and chariots of different periods moved with ease and dignity. The mounted trumpeters were the best we have heard for some time. Sheep with blue ribbons round their necks, led by a band of girls, produced a pleasant pastoral effect, and one of their number was so determinedly histrionic as to intervene unexpectedly in the Morris Dance.

Colchester can claim an exceptional amount of history for a pageant, and the frequent references to the oyster, which had a song to itself, written by the Mayor, and the fisheries of the river Colne are justified by local pride. The ancient Briton who discovered the excellent quality of the unknown bivalve was ingeniously introduced; the noble and his followers who attempted to seize the fisheries were soundly thrashed; and a fishwife played Madame Sans-Gêne with Henry VI. in spirited style. The advance of Thomas Audley, Town Clerk, to honour and distinction did not interest us, and might be omitted.

There are, moreover, other scenes, or portions of scenes, which might well disappear. As, we suppose, about a third of the audience at best can hear the best speakers, the talk should be rigorously curtailed, e.g., the explanation by a mounted herald of 1189 of Murdrum, Lastage, Pontage, &c., to a comic old rustic, and some of the opposition between Bailiffs and Abbots. The whole episode of Eudo Dapifer went tediously. The capture of Colchester by the Roundheads, and shooting of two of the leading Cavaliers by a firing party, had admirably dramatic moments; but the details repre-sending the defence of the town, and the talk of the Cavaliers during the siege were far too long. The selection of a comely bride on two occasions at sight (somewhat in the manner of the folk-tales and fairy stories of our youth) was much more to the point.

The Romans, with the irruption of Boadicea and the triumph of Claudius, and Queen Elizabeth entertained by dances, old King Cole, and a magnetic shock from Dr. Gilbert, the author of 'De Magnete,' provided the best episodes. The song of Helena and her maidens to welcome Constantius Chlorus,—

Roman, come to the land of roses
Where the meadow river slips to the sea, was pretty and well executed.

A white-bearded chorus came forward at the close of each scene and sang verses which were tasteful (as might be expected from Mr. James Rhoades), but approximated too nearly to the jejune remarks of their Greek prototype.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE MEREDITH.

9, New Square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C., June 16, 1909.

As solicitors to the executors of the late Mr. George Meredith, we think it as well to call the attention of all persons who have in their possession any letters or other documents written by him to the fact that the copyright in such letters and documents is now vested in his executors.

WALTERS & Co.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Balsillie (David), Is a World-Religion Possible? 4/ net.
Barnes-Lawrence (A. E.), The Holy Communion: Its Institution, Purpose, and Privilege, 6d. net. Second Edition.
Dreyfus (Hippolyte), The Universal Religion: Baháism, 4/ net. Treats of its rise and social import.
Foster (G. B.), The Function of Religion in Man's Struggle for Existence, 5/ net.
Macleane (D.), Our Island Church, 2/6 net. Sketches from the History of English Church and State.
Momerie (Rev. A. W.), Essays on the Bible, 3/6 net. Edited by Mrs. Momerie, with a preface by J. Nield.
Morgan (G. Campbell), The Book of Job. Part of the Analyzed Bible, 3/6.
Resurrectio Christi, 3/6 net. An apology written from a new standpoint, and supported by evidence, some of which is new.
Rivière (J.), The Doctrine of the Atonement, Vol. II., 7/6.
Smyth (W. Woods), Bankrupt Views of the Bible: Part I.—Bankrupt Views. Part II.—What is the Bible? 2/6 net.
Spinoza's Short Treatise on God, Man, and Human Welfare, 6/ net. Translated by L. G. Robinson.
Tisdall (W. St. Clair), Comparative Religion, 1/ net.
Worsley (F. W.), The Fourth Gospel and the Synoptists, 3/ net. A contribution to the study of the Johannine problem.

Law.

- Gour (H. S.), The Penal Law of India, 22/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Arts connected with Building, by R. W. Schultz, C. F. A. Voysey, and others, 5/ net. Lectures on craftsmanship and design delivered at Carpenters' Hall, London Wall, for the Worshipful Company of Carpenters. Edited by T. Raffles Davison, with 98 illustrations of old and modern work.
Carmichael (M.), Francia's Masterpiece, 5/ net. An essay on the beginnings of the Immaculate Conception in art.
Lennygon (Francis), The Decoration and Furniture of English Mansions during the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries, 31/6 net. Contains several plates.
Proceedings of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, No. LII., 7/6 net.
Studio, Vol. XLVI., 6/ net.

Poetry and Drama.

- Carswell (D.), The Dawn, and other Poems, 1/ net.
Cawein (M.), New Poems, 5/ net.
Chronicle History of King Lear, 2/6 net. The original of Shakespeare's 'King Lear.' Edited by Sidney Lee.
Edwards (Rev. B.), Songs of a Parish Priest, 2/ net. Enlarged Edition.
Figgis (D.), A Vision of Life, 3/6 net. Poems with an Introduction by G. K. Chesterton.
Gibson (R. E. L.), A Miracle of St. Cuthbert, and Sonnets.
Gregory (Lady), Seven Short Plays, 3/6 net.
Martin (S.), The Return of the Gods.
Milton: The British Academy Tercentenary, 1/ net. Contains Meredith's lines, Dr. A. W. Ward's oration, and summary of Sir F. Bridge's address.—Samson Agonistes and the Hellenic Drama, by Sir R. C. Jebb, 1/ net. From the Proceedings of the British Academy.
Rice (C. Y.), Nirvana Days, 5/ net. A few of the poems in this volume are reprinted from two of the author's earlier volumes, the rest are new.

- Spenser (Edmund), The Faerie Queene, 2 vols., 105/ net. A limited edition printed on fine hand-made paper in the Cambridge type.
Webb (F. J.), World-Music, and other Poems.

Music.

- Handel-Mendelssohn Festival, Crystal Palace, 1909: Selection to be performed on June 24, 2/6. Words and music.

Bibliography.

- Griffin (Grace G.), Writings on American History, 1907. A bibliography of books and articles on United States and Canadian history published during 1907, with some memoranda on other portions of America.
Select List of References on the Valuation and Capitalization of Railroads, 10c. One of the publications of the Library of Congress.

Philosophy.

- Denls (Leon), Here and Hereafter, 3/6 net. A treatise on spiritual philosophy.
Kirkpatrick (E. A.), Genetic Psychology, 5/ net. An introduction to an objective and genetic view of intelligence.

Political Economy.

- Bernstein (E.), Evolutionary Socialism: a Criticism and Affirmation, 1/6 net. Translated by Edith C. Harvey. One of the Socialist Library.

History and Biography.

- Brasenose College Quatercentenary Monographs: Vol. I., General, by F. Madan, A. J. Butler, and E. W. Allfrey, 10/6 net.
Brasenose College Register, 1509-1909, Vol. I., 15/ net.
Brown (J. E.), Chantry Certificates for Hertfordshire, 2/ net. A transcript of the return made by the Commissioners in the reign of Edward VI., with an introduction.
Calendar of State Papers, Domestic Series, March 1st, 1676, to February 28th, 1677, preserved in the Public Record Office, 15/. Edited by F. H. B. Danell.
Dictionary of National Biography: Vol. XVI., Pocock—Robins, 15/ net. Reissue.
Duff (J. Wight), A Literary History of Rome, 12/6 net. From the origins to the close of the Golden Age.
Enock (C. R.), Mexico, 10/6 net. Deals with its ancient and modern civilization, history and political conditions, topography and natural resources, industries, and general development, and has a map and 75 illustrations, and an introduction by Major Martin Hume. One of the South American Series.
Greswell (Rev. W. H. P.), Chapters on the Early History of Glastonbury Abbey, 6/6.
Hodgson (W. E.), The Life of Thomas II., Archbishop of York, and his Connection with Southwell Minster. An essay for the eight hundredth anniversary of his consecration, to be held at Southwell on June 29. Contains 4 illustrations.
Janssen (J.), History of the German People. Vols. XIII. and XIV., 25/.
Mathews (J. M.), Legislative and Judicial History of the Fifteenth Amendment. One of the Johns Hopkins University Studies.
Memorials of Old Middlesex, 15/ net. Edited by J. Taverer-Perry, with many illustrations.
Pipe Roll Society, Vol. XXIX. The Pipe Roll for the twenty-sixth year of Henry II., collated with the Chancellor's Roll for the same year, with an introduction by Mr. Round.
Trenholme (Rev. E. C.), The Story of Iona, 8/6 net. With illustrations from photographs and drawings by Frances M. Richmond, and maps.

Geography and Travel.

- Beckett (A.), The Spirit of the Downs, 10/6 net. Impressions and reminiscences of the Sussex Downs, with 20 illustrations in colour by Stanley Inchbold.
Holidays Abroad. An illustrated booklet of a series of tours in less-known districts of Holland, North Germany, &c.
Holland (Clive), Tyrol and its People, 10/6 net. The author deals fully with the romantic history, people, and scenery of this corner of the Austro-Hungarian empire. The volume has 16 illustrations in colour by Adrian Stokes, and 31 other illustrations and a map.
Wherry (George), Notes from a Knapsack. The subjects of the chapters were suggested during climbs or walks in vacations spent on the Alps, or in the fields and villages at home, with illustrations.

Sports and Pastimes.

- Maclaren (A. C.), Cricket, 3d. With portrait and other illustrations.
Vasse (W.), Three Years' Sport in Mozambique, 8/6 net. Translated from the French by R. and H. M. Lydekker, with 80 illustrations.

Education.

- Brown (J. F.), The American High School, 6/ net.
Girls' School Year-Book (Public Schools), April, 1909, to April, 1910, 2/6 net. Issued under the direction of the editors of 'The Public Schools Year-Book.'
Watson (F.), The Beginnings of the Teaching of Modern Subjects in England, 7/6 net.

Philology.

- Bellé (L.), An Independent Examination of the Assuan and Elephantine Aramaic Papyri, 7/6 net. With 11 plates and 2 appendixes.
Hasan (Shayk), Persian Self-Taught in Roman Characters, 2/6. With English phonetic pronunciation.

School-Books.

- Dramatic Scenes from English Literature, 1/6. Selected and adapted by Fanny Johnson, with illustrations.
Florian (A. R.), A First Book of German Oral Teaching, 3/6.
Foxcroft (C.) and Samuel (T.), An Elementary Course in Practical Science, Parts I. and II., 6d. net each.
Low (W. H.) and Briggs (J.), Matriculation English Course, 3/6. One of the University Tutorial Series. Third Edition.
McIsaac (Isabel), The Elements of Hygiene for Schools, 3/6.
Michelet (Jules), Jeanne d'Arc, 2/. Edited by J. H. Sacret.
Tennyson's Enid (1859), 1/6. Edited, with introduction and notes, by C. B. Wheeler.

Science.

- American Journal of Anatomy, Vol. IX., No. 2. Edited by C. R. Bardeen, H. H. Donaldson, and others.
Archives of the Middlesex Hospital, Vol. XV., 7/6 net.
Darwin (C.), The Foundations of the Origin of Species. A sketch written in 1842. Edited by his son Francis Darwin.
Dawson (Grace), How to Rest and be Rested, 6d. net. The purpose of this little book is to point out the restful way of living, and show the connexion between body and mind.
Dixon (C.), The Bird-Life of London, 6/ net. With illustrations in colour and black and white.
Flun (F.), Wild Beasts of the World, Part XVI., 1/ net. With illustrations by L. Sargent, C. E. Swan, and W. Austen.
Fossil Plants, 6d. net. Contains 60 photographs illustrating the flora of the Coal Measures by E. A. N. Arber. One of Gowans's Nature Books.
Jordan (W. L.), The Sling, Part III., 1/ net. Remarks in connexion with lectures delivered in the Royal Institution and in the Institution of Civil Engineers, November, 1908, to April, 1909.
Livingstone College Year-Book, 1909, 6d. A record of a year's work at Livingstone College, and containing a review of recent progress in tropical medicine.
Mehrtens (A. C.), Gas-Engine Theory and Design, 10/6 net.
Ostwald (Wilhelm), The Fundamental Principles of Chemistry, 7/6 net. An introduction to chemistry. Authorized translation by Harry W. Morse.
Richey (H. G.), The Building Foreman's Pocket-Book, 21/ net.
Rose (T. Kirke), The Precious Metals, comprising Gold, Silver, and Platinum, 6/ net. Contains 47 illustrations.
Stone (C. H.), Practical Testing of Gas and Gas Meters, 15/ net.
Wright (H. J. and W. P.), Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them, Part XV., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.
Wright (W. P.), The Garden Week by Week throughout the Year, 6/ net. A practical handbook to gardening operations and the culture of important plants, with numerous coloured plates and half-tone engravings and 100 practical illustrations.
Zeigmondy (R.), Colloids and the Ultra-Microscope, 12/6 net.

Fiction.

- Baker (Emily), Peggy Gainsborough, the Great Painter's Daughter, 5/ net. Deals with the Gainsborough family circle. Illustrated.
Belloc (H.), A Change in the Cabinet, 6/. A story of political jobbery.
Blyth (James), The Liberty of Love, 6/. A study of modern ideas of marriage.—The Same Clay, 1/ net. New Edition.
Brehner (P. J.), A Royal Ward, 6/. The adventures of Lady Betty Walmisley take place in England when Europe is in the throes of the Napoleonic wars. There is a frontispiece by Christopher Clark.
Dennis (D. H.), Moths and the Maid, 6/. Relates to an unhappy marriage.
Ernst (Otto), Asmus Semper, 6/ net. The story of a boyhood, translated by Aletheia Caton.
Hart (Mabel), Sister K, 6/. Begins with the Sister's school-days, and continues with her hospital experiences.
Letts (W. M.), Diana Dethroned, 6/. Contrasts the wooing of a "headstrong, generous rascal," with that of an Australian cousin.
Oliphant (Mrs.), The Primrose Path, 7d. net. New Edition.
Page (Gertrude), The Silent Rancher, 6/. A romance of Rhodesia.
Shannon (James), Sheila of Dunslane, 6/. The daughter of a happy-go-lucky Irish baronet, goes through many love episodes—not all of a happy nature.
Stacpoole (H. de Vere), The Pools of Silence, 6/. A romance of the Tropics dealing, inter alia, with the Congo State.
Stevens (E. S.), The Veil, 6/. A romance of Tunisia, with illustrations in colour.
Vance (L. J.), The Bronze Bell, 6/. Relates the frustration of a second Indian rising.
Whitechurch (V. L.), Concerning Himself, 6/. The story of an ordinary man.
Wrench (Mrs. Stanley), Burnt Wings, 6/. A story of an ill-assorted marriage, complicated by outside attraction on both sides.

General Literature.

- Book of the English Church Pageant, Fulham Palace, June 10-16, 1909. Compiled by H. P. Allen, H. N. Bate, and others. Edited by C. R. Peers. Illustrated.
Cooper-Oakley (I.), Mystical Traditions, 4/. In the Antiquarium Traditionum Collectio of Milan.
Dicey (A. V.), Letters to a Friend on Votes for Women, 1/ net.
Manual of Cartomancy, Fortune-Telling, and Occult Divination, by Grand Orient, 2/6 net. Fourth Edition, revised and enlarged.
Our Coming Kings, by Vox, 2/6 net. A discussion of the present state of England and political reform.
Some Papers of Lord Arundell of Wadour, 8/6 net. Papers chiefly on politics.
South African Home Reading Union: The Bulletin, No. I. New Series. Issued quarterly.

Pamphlets.

- Brockhouse (H.), The Curse of the Country, 1d. Relates to the land monopoly.
Grant (W.), What still remains to be done for the Scottish Dialects. One of the English Association Leaflets.
Haslam (J.), Cotton and Competition, 1d.
Macdonald (J. R.), Socialism To-day, 1d.
Pedley (R. D.), Our Teeth: Why We lose Them and How We may keep Them.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

- Calluad (P.), La Problème de la Résurrection du Christ, 2f. 50.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Delisle (L.), Rouleau mortuaire du B. Vital, Abbé de Savignl. A very important phototype reproduction of more than two hundred inscriptions in churches in England as well as France, collected in the first quarter of the twelfth century.

Music and the Drama.

Beethoven-Jahrbuch, Vol. II. Edited by T. von Frimmel, the frontispiece being a portrait of A. W. Thayer, Beethoven's well-known biographer.
Shakespeare: König Lear, erläutert von R. Pröls, 1m. Vol. 97 of the Erläuterungen zu den Klassikern.—Othello, herausgegeben von M. M. A. Schröder, 1m. 70. The texts of the first Quarto and the first Folio on facing pages. Vol. 14 of the Englische Textbibliothek.

History and Biography.

Hauser (H.), Les Sources de l'Histoire de France, 1494-1610: Vol. II. François I. et Henri II., 5 fr. In the Manuels de Bibliographie historique.
Luchaire (A.), La Société française au Temps de Philippe-Auguste, 10 fr.
Perron (C.), Roland et Marie Philpon: Lettres d'Amour de 1777 à 1780, 7 fr. 50.

Philology.

Belléli (L.), Un nouvel Apocryphe: Étude sur un Fragment de Manuscrit du Vieux Caire. A reprint of an article on the Hebrew text.
Franz (W.), Shakespeare-Grammatik, 16m. Second Edition, enlarged to 600 pages.
Kottas (K.), Thomas Randolph: sein Leben und seine Werke, 3m. Vol. XXIX. of the Wiener Beiträge zur englischen Philologie.

Fiction.

Cardonnel (G. le), Les Soutiens de l'Ordre, 3 fr. 50.
France (Anatole), Les Sept Femmes de la Barbe-Bleue, et autres Contes Merveilleux, 3 fr. 50. See ante, p. 727.
Lasserre (P.), Henri de Sauvelade, 2 fr.
Vaucaire (M.), La Petite Madame "Bec et Ongles," 3 fr. 50.

General Literature.

Chuquet (A.), Littérature allemande, 6 fr. 50.

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

THE fiction in The Cornhill Magazine for July, besides the serials, includes 'An Unseen Terror,' by E. V. B., and 'The Seven-Thirty,' by Miss Dorothea Deakin. Mr. Laurence Binyon contributes a poem, 'Mother and Child.' Mrs. Henrietta O. Barnett writes on 'Babies of the State,' in the light of the recent Poor Law Report; Dr. W. H. Fitchett tells the story of the 'Eureka Stockade,' an incident in the early days of the Australian gold-diggings; and 'A Cape M.A.' discusses the prospects of the South African Union in an article 'Briton and Boer in South Africa.' Miss Mary Cholmondeley has a dialogue on 'Vicarious Charities'; and Katharine Tynan draws a sketch of 'The Lady of the Manor.' Other articles are 'The Oldest of Horticultural Societies,' by Mr. Frederick Boyle, and 'A Letter from a Portuguese Country House,' by Miss Constance L. Clare.

MR. BERNARD QUARITCH will shortly publish 'Relics of the Honourable East India Company,' a series of fifty plates, many in colours, by William Griggs, with letterpress by Sir George Birdwood and Mr. William Foster.

MR. SIDNEY LEE has just completed the delivery at Oxford, for the Common University Fund, of his course of lectures on Tudor England's literary relations with France. They will be published in the autumn, somewhat revised and enlarged, by the Oxford University Press, under the title of 'The French Renaissance in England.'

MR. MURRAY is shortly publishing 'John Goodchild,' a novel by a new writer, Mr. R. W. Wright Henderson. It deals with the time of the great railway mania in 1845.

AMONG the American books to be published shortly by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are a 'History of the City of New York in the Seventeenth Century,' by Mrs. Schuyler van Rensselaer, in two volumes; a 'History of the State of Washington,' by Prof. E. S. Meany, with maps, portraits, and other illustrations; and a volume of 'Selections from Early American Writers, 1607-1800,' edited by Prof. W. B. Cairns, which begins with Capt. John Smith, and ends with Charles Brockden Brown.

MESSRS. HEFFER of Cambridge hope to publish in the early autumn an edition of the 'Symposium' of Plato by Mr. R. G. Bury. This, the first annotated edition of the dialogue produced in England, will contain a revised text in which, for the first time, account will be taken of the recently discovered papyrus fragment. The commentary will deal specially with the literary and philosophical aspects of the dialogue.

THE July number of The Dublin Review promises articles on 'Edmund Burke on Party Action,' by the editor, Mr. Wilfrid Ward; 'A Century of Socialistic Experiments,' by Mr. W. H. Mallock; 'Lord Curzon and Oxford Reforms,' by Mr. Urquhart, Fellow of Balliol; 'The Modern Surrender of Women,' by Mr. G. K. Chesterton, and 'Swinburne's Lyrical Poetry,' by Mrs. Meynell.

THE death last Saturday of Mr. George Webb Appleton removes a capable writer of popular fiction. Mr. Appleton invented many ingenious mysteries and detective stories, the latest of which, 'Dr. Dale's Dilemma,' is shortly to be published by Mr. John Long. He was born in New Jersey in 1845, and travelled extensively for journalistic purposes. He was correspondent of The New York Times in Paris and Rome, and started the Lecture Bureau system in England.

WE receive for review from an English publisher 'The Tragedy of Russia in Pacific Asia,' which, being an American book, had already been sent to us in the latter half of last year, and was reviewed on August 29th. The same thing happened with an edition of Milton's minor poems taken up in this country long after its publication in the United States. In such cases publishers might, we think, take the trouble to ascertain what has already been said about their books, or, at least, to make a note of previous publication in the United States.

MR. COULSON KERNAHAN'S allegory 'The Child, the Wise Man, and the Devil' has just been translated and published in Esperanto, and his other allegory 'The Face Beyond the Door' is being put into Braille type for the blind to read. Both allegories are from his book 'Visions,' some of the contents of which have now been translated into eighteen languages.

THE VICOMTE DE REISET is at work on a study of the wife of Louis XVIII., better known as the Comtesse de Provence, in which, it is understood, there will be published diaries of Charles Felix of Savoy and of the wife of the Comte d'Artois, afterwards Charles X. The Court of Savoy was a refuge for the daughters of the reigning duke during the émigration, and, in addition to the portion of the papers now about to see the light, there are others in the possession of the present head of the house of Savoy, the King of Italy. The family has allowed free communication to the public of its most important papers, namely, those in the archives at Turin, but has been more reserved than other reigning houses in letting family letters see the light.

THE PRIX JEAN REYNAUD, of the value of 10,000 francs, in the gift of the Académie Française, awarded every five years "au travail le plus méritant," or "aux proches d'un grand écrivain disparu," was last week awarded to Madame Ferdinand Brunetière, widow of the critic. Five years since this prize was handed over to Mlle. Gaston-Paris. This year's Prix Née (3,500 francs) goes to the poet M. Frédéric Plessis, a professor at the Sorbonne, and one of the founders, with M. Jean Moréas, of "l'école romaine." The Prix Vitet (2,500 francs) has been given to M. Robert de la Sizeranne for his work as a whole (which includes 'La Peinture anglaise contemporaine' and 'Ruskin et la Religion de la Beauté'); and the Prix Narcisse Michaut (2,000 francs, for the best work on French literature) to M. Henry Boudeaux, literary critic of the Figaro and other papers.

THE French Prix National de Littérature, founded three years ago by the Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, is in effect a "bourse nationale de voyage," and is alternately awarded to a poet and a prose writer. The winner of the prize is at liberty to travel wherever he likes, the only condition being that on his return he must publish his "impressions de voyage." This year the award was made to prose in the person of M. Edmond Pilon.

Two familiar personages in the publishing world of Paris have died within the last few days. M. Claude Motteroz, who was in his seventy-ninth year, had a wide reputation, not only among printers as the editor of L'Imprimerie, but also as the printer and publisher of a long series of beautiful books, first for the Maison Quantin, and afterwards for the Librairies-Réunies, of which he was one of the two directors.

THE first number of An Sgeulaiche, a sixpenny monthly magazine of fiction in the Gaelic language, will be published at Greenock in August next. The magazine will be edited by Mr. R. Erskine, who is also its proprietor, and will be the first of its kind ever published.

RECENT Government Papers of some interest to our readers are: New College, Oxford, Statutes (1d.); University Colleges, Great Britain, Grant in Aid, Report of Advisory Committee (1½d.); Regulations for Secondary Schools, Wales (2d.); and Statutes for University Colleges, Cork, Dublin, and Galway (3½d. each); Statutes for Queen's University, Belfast (3½d.); and a Statute for the National University of Ireland (5½d.).

SCIENCE

The Life of a Fossil-Hunter. By C. H. Sternberg. With Introduction by H. F. Osborn. Illustrated. (Bell & Sons.)

THIS is the simple record of a life of hard work and adventure among some of the richest fossil-bearing rocks of Western America. It may be true, as stated in the Introduction, that fossil-hunting is "a distinctively American profession," yet it should be remembered that ever since geology became a recognized branch of study the professional collector has not been wanting. Nearly a century ago the geological cabinets of this country and of the Continent were indebted for some of their choicest specimens to the intelligence and courage of Mary Anning—a young woman who gained her livelihood by fossil-hunting, not without occasional danger, in the Liassic cliffs of Lyme Regis. But whilst in Britain such collectors have been few, in America, with its wide wealth of vertebrate relics in certain localities, the profession of fossil-finding has been systematically developed on a large scale.

Of these fossil-hunters of the West Mr. Sternberg was one of the pioneers. Such a man sees much of wild nature, and his life has generally so many features of interest that it is well worth recording. It is a rough life, which requires for success rather exceptional qualifications, and would be enjoyed only by an enthusiast. The collector has to work hard with his hands, and is usually ill-remunerated; whilst his labours, though contributing to the advancement of knowledge, rarely receive more than scant acknowledgment, sometimes not even that. He endures many hardships in camp-life, and is not infrequently called upon to face danger; he has to display much intelligence in discovering the relics, whilst when dealing with large vertebrates embedded in a stony matrix he has to exercise the dexterity of a mason in extracting them, and the skill of an engineer in removing them unhurt, transporting his massy treasures it may be over a roadless and hilly country or across a desert waste. Mr. Sternberg was born a collector, and in the course of his life has done such good work that we are disposed to pardon the little egotism which peeps out here and there in his pages. Many a museum, including our own Natural History Museum, owes much to his enthusiasm and resourcefulness.

Prof. Osborn, of New York, the distinguished authority on vertebrate palæontology, in a brief preface introducing the writer and his work, points out that the hunter of living game "is always bringing live animals nearer to death and extinction, whereas the fossil-hunter is always seeking to bring extinct animals back to life." This resurrection of the past has much fascination for Mr. Sternberg, who frequently lets his imagination play in giving a touch of life to the fossils which he has unearthed, and in reconstructing the physical conditions under which they must have lived. Nor has the service of the artist been neglected. Among the illustrations are several taken from paintings in the American Museum of Natural History, showing "the forms of ages past away," as restored by Prof. Osborn and Mr. Knight.

Mr. Sternberg began his life's work more than forty years ago by collecting leaves from the Cretaceous sandstones of the Dakota beds in Central Kansas. At that time the country, visited every spring by vast herds of buffalo, was just being opened up, and the early settlers suffered from constant raids by the Indians. Of these wild days the writer gives a graphic account. But it was not the Indians only who were dreaded: at one time Ellsworth city was held by a party of lawless ruffians, and "the dead-cart used to pass down the street every morning to pick up the bodies of those who had been killed in the saloons the night before, and thrown out on the pavement to be hauled away."

Without any introduction, except that of his own work in the Dakota beds, Sternberg wrote in 1876 to Prof. Cope, suggesting an expedition to collect fossils from the Chalk of Western Kansas. To this suggestion Cope, with characteristic generosity, sent immediately a favourable reply, with the necessary funds; and thus began a relationship between the two men which ripened as time went on, and continued as long as Cope lived. The young collector, encouraged by the great naturalist, set to work with a will, and was soon rewarded by the discovery of mosasaurian and other relics; but success was achieved only at the expense of health and many comforts, the explorer suffering from ague and having no drinking water but "alkali-water," a beverage rather like a solution of Epsom salts. With Cope he subsequently made an expedition to the Bad Lands of Montana, and afterwards worked for him in Oregon and Texas.

It is among the Permian strata of Texas that much of Mr. Sternberg's best work has been done. Here he spent years in collecting not only for Cope, but also for Von Zittel and others. To search for organic remains in these red rocks is a heartbreaking business, and it needs a man of exceptional energy to continue the quest under the trying climatic conditions of Texas; he has to work under a pitiless sun, with danger of storm and flood, and often with water almost undrinkable through being densely charged with fine red mud from the disintegration of the Permian rocks. But notwithstanding such difficulties Mr. Sternberg succeeded in obtaining fossils of remarkable scientific interest, such as the fin-backed lizard, Naosaurus, and other reptiles of pelycosaurian type. He is evidently a man who has always thrown a strong will into his work, and has not been easily daunted by difficulty or danger.

Mr. Sternberg's book is one to be thoroughly enjoyed by any reader fond of fossils, whilst it by no means lacks general interest as a story of camp-life in the Wild West.

From Ruwenzori to the Congo. By A. F. R. Wollaston. (John Murray.)—Mr. Wollaston accompanied, in the double capacity of medical officer and botanical collector, the expedition sent out in 1905 by the authorities of the British Museum. The immediate objects of the expedition were the fauna and flora of Ruwenzori, which have now "been investigated as completely as at present possible." The western side of the range, lying within the bounds of the Congo State, could not be explored to any satisfactory extent, "owing to the hostility of the natives." But it is probable that this would not have troubled the travellers, had they been allowed to proceed without a Belgian escort. Nearly four months were passed at Bihunga camp, in the Mubuku valley—most unfortunately, at an unfavourable time of year. None of the party was able to take advantage for mountaineering purposes of the break in the rains which usually occurs about the turn of the year, and which here occupied nearly the whole of January; and any climbing that was done took place in the most depressing circumstances that can well be imagined.

On leaving Bihunga at the end of April, the expedition proceeded to Muhokya, near Lake Ruisamba, where it remained nearly three months, passing on to Lake Albert Edward and round to the west, in order to complete the circuit of Ruwenzori. Its work was brought to an end with the return to Toro, and its members then separated—Messrs. Woosnam and Dent going westward, down the Congo to the coast, and the rest of the party back to Entebbe. Here one of them left for Mombasa, while the author and Mr. Carruthers prepared for the long journey to the West Coast. It appears that, by continuous travelling along the most direct route, it is now possible to cross the Continent, from Mombasa to Banana, in under eighty days.

Mr. Wollaston's book certainly does not come under the category referred to by his friend the late Prof. Newton, as "duller than anything short of Bradshaw." His style is easy, and he has a light and graceful descriptive touch—in fact, some of his pictures are really brilliant, e.g., that of Lake Naivasha on p. 18, and the first sight of Ruwenzori, on p. 32. Yet, to a perhaps hypercritical taste, something is lacking—something which is to be found in many a rambling, clumsy book with no literary pretensions—the African atmosphere. Now that regions which a generation ago were half fabulous, and almost unknown, are becoming more generally accessible, it is only to be expected that they should be visited by an increasing number of travellers to whom the land conveys no special feeling, for whom there is no "incommunicable thrill" in the scent of the sun-steeped grasses, the sound of the wind among the fan-palms, or the slow, grave melody of Bantu names.

The country between Lake Albert Edward and Tanganyika has been comparatively little visited, and includes Lake Kivu and the Virunga, or volcanoes of Mfumbiro, previously unvisited by Europeans, except Count Götzen and his party in 1893, Capt. Langheld, Dr. Kandt, and Mr. J. E. S. Moore. Travelling southwards towards Lake Kivu, between Chanyongombe and Chaninagongo, Mr. Wollaston had a good view of the lava-stream which had flowed from the latter mountain during the eruption of the previous year; but "the only signs we saw of present volcanic activity were a cloud of smoke that floated over the flat top of Tsha-nina-gongo, and a jet of steam that spouted from the southern slope of Nyamlagiro." When Count Götzen ascended Chaninagongo, the crater emitted a column of steam, and at night a fiery glow visible for many miles; but these phenomena appear to have ceased soon afterwards; for on Capt. Langheld's arrival, a few months later, the natives requested him to relight the burning mountain, "which the other white men had extinguished."

We are forced to pass over many tempting quotations, but cannot forbear to remark that it is a pity Mr. Wollaston felt "a concern" to plead the cause of the Congo State. One must sympathize with his desire for fair play and dislike of sensational atrocity-mongering; but his reference to Lieut. Boyd Alexander and Mr. A. H. Savage Landor as having "travelled widely in the Congo Free State, and recorded favourable reports of what they saw in different parts of the country," is either disingenuous, or shows that he has not read the works in question. His tu quoque (p. 265), as regards Angola has, we hope, answered itself by this time; and more than one incidental touch shows that the system he thinks unjustly attacked is a bad one, and bound to produce bad results. We should be glad to know in what "native language" Naivasha means "the tear"; we understand the name to be a corruption of the Masai En-aiposha, "the lake."

THE ECLIPSE OF A.D. 364.

Blackheath, June 14, 1909.

PROF. GINZEL of Vienna discusses this eclipse in his 'Spezieller Kanon der Sonnen- und Mondfinsternisse,' and quotes the account of it by Theon. He considers that the amount obscured was about 4 digits, or 0.33 of the sun's diameter. Oppolzer's map makes the central line pass over the extreme north of the British Isles to the south of Norway and Sweden.

The British description, unearthed by Mr. Anscombe in The Athenæum of the 5th inst., is not, I believe, mentioned in any modern work on eclipses. Although, as he remarks, the date is given in rather a peculiar manner, there can be no doubt that the account refers to the eclipse of June 16, A.D. 364. All astronomers will be much interested to see the result of Mr. P. H. Cowell's calculations, and whether they will make the eclipse total over Durham and the north of England. W. T. LYNN.

SOCIETIES.

LINNEAN.—June 3.—Dr. D. H. Scott, President, in the chair.—The President announced that he had appointed the following to be Vice-Presidents during the current session: Sir Frank Crisp, Mr. Horace W. Monckton, Prof. E. B. Poulton, and Lieut.-Col. Prain.—The first exhibition was by Prof. Dendy, of photomicrographs showing nuclear division in Galtonia candicans, Deene, and nuclear division and fertilization in Ascaris megalocephala.—Mr. A. D. Cotton exhibited dried and recent specimens in formalin, of Colpomenia sinuosa, Derbès & Sol, from Weymouth, explaining how this Mediterranean species had advanced during the last few years up the French coast, into the English Channel; it was believed to act injuriously to young oysters, by breaking them adrift on its rising by buoyancy when distended with air. Discussion was carried on by Mr. E. M. Holmes, Dr. J. C. Willis, Prof. Dendy, and Mr. J. C. Shenstone.—The first paper was by Mr. A. R. Horwood 'On Calamites (Calamitina) schutzei, Stur, and on the correspondence between the length of internodes and the position and function of the short internode in the Genus Calamites, and in the recent Equisetaceæ,' was communicated by Mr. E. E. Lowe.—The second paper was by Mr. H. O. S. Gibson, on the 'Cephalochorda (Amphioxides), of the "Sealark" Expedition was communicated by Mr. J. Stanley Gardiner.—The last paper, 'The Aleyonaria of the "Sealark" Expedition,' by Prof. J. Arthur Thomson, was also communicated by Mr. J. Stanley Gardiner, and read in title.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—June 2.—Dr. F. A. Dixey, President, in the chair.—Messrs. F. P. Jepson, E. C. Chubb, J. F. Musham, and O. C. Silverlock were elected Fellows.—Mr. Selwyn Image exhibited an example of the North-American sawfly, Sirex caudatus, Cresson, bred from a larva found at Highbury.—The Rev. G. Wheeler brought for exhibition a series of Anthocharis tages, var. bellezina, from Aix-en-Provence, taken this year, and A. belia from the South of France for comparison.—Lord Walsingham showed two set examples and pupal cases of Holocacista rivillei, Stn., originally described in 1750, and not again found before 1870, recently discovered by him in the South of France mining leaves of the grape-vine.—Dr. T. A. Chapman exhibited specimens of Callophrys aris, a new butterfly from the South of France, taken by him at Hyères three years ago and in the following year, and obtained by him this year in the Pyrénées-Orientales. He showed two intermediate examples of Pararge aegeria from Southern France, with a typical Southern specimen (ageria) and an English one (agerides) for comparison.—Dr. T. P. Lucas, who was present as a visitor, brought for exhibition a box containing thirty-one species of butterflies taken by him in the neighbourhood of Durban in two hours. He also gave a short account of the abundance of Lepidoptera at Brisbane, Queensland.—Mr. E. C. Bedwell exhibited examples of the myrmecophilous beetle, Heterius ferrugineus, Ol., from Boxhill, a species not recorded from Britain for forty-six years.—Mr. H. St. J. Donisthorpe exhibited specimens of Formica exsecta, several nests of which he had discovered near Aviemore in Inverness-shire in May. He pointed out that it had never been recorded from Scotland or the North before, and showed a map of the British Isles to illustrate the British distribution of the species. He showed also specimens of Formica rufipratorensis, pseudogynes and micrergates from Nethy Bridge, Inverness-shire.—Mr. L. Doncaster exhibited a drawer of Abroaxas grossulariata and its var. lacticolor, to illustrate breeding experiments, the results of which suggested that the sex-determinants behave as Mendelian characters, femaleness being dominant, and that males are homozygous in respect of sex, females heterozygous.—Mr. J. R. le B. Tomlin showed examples of Micropeplus celatus, Er., taken on marshy ground last April, near Cloghane, co. Kerry, by Dr. N. Joy and himself, an interesting addition to a small genus, so far reported only from Germany and Sweden.—Dr. G. B. Longstaff exhibited a number of specimens of Coccinella 11-punctata, L., from the White Nile, part of a migratory flight which lasted from 4.50 P.M. till nearly 6 P.M.; also a Scarabæus taken by him on the edge of the desert within half a mile of the Sphinx. It differed in several structural points from the common S. sacer, L., and has since been identified as S. compressicornis, Klug., an Arabian species.—Prof. E. B. Poulton brought for exhibition (a) a beautifully carved scarab of about the sixth century B.C. from Upper Egypt, apparently copied from S. sacer; (b) species of two different genera of Coccinellidae taken in cop. at Tubney, Berks; (c) a collection of Diptera from Oxford and the New Forest, with observations, and captured by Mr. A. H. Hann; (d) an example of the rare Castniid moth Castnia tharapon, Kollar (a Brazilian species), taken flying in his conservatory at Broadstone, Dorset, by Dr. A. R. Wallace; (e) a series of forty-nine females and seven males of Hypolimnas misippus from British East Africa to illustrate the hereditary tendencies in the female forms; (f) examples of the Müllerian mimicry in Euplœinæ; (g) and a collection of small moths captured at sea, probably 190 miles from the land of South-East Cochinchina, sent to him by Mr. F. Muir and Mr. J. C. Kershaw.—Prof. Poulton made some observations on the use of the saw of the sawfly during oviposition supplementary to the discussion on the subject at a previous meeting, and also communicated 'Notes on the Life-History of Aulacodes simplicialis, Snell.,' by Mr. Muir and Mr. Kershaw.—Mr. T. Bainbridge Fletcher exhibited a collection of Lepidoptera common to the African, Indian, and Australian regions, some of them occurring in America also. He also showed a collection from Ceylon of black ants and their mimics; a mass of the Cingalese bug, Dysdercus cingulatus, resembling a flower; and an example of the Coprid beetle Scarabæus gangeticus, taken on the wing carrying small winged Diptera of the Borboridae.—The following papers were communicated: 'On some New and Little-Known Neotropical Lycenidae,' by Mr. Hamilton H. Druce; 'A Description of the Superior Wing of the Hymenoptera, with a View to give a simple and more certain Nomenclature to the Alary System of Jurine,' by Mr. Claude Morley; 'On the Colonization of New Nests of Ants by Myrmecophilous Coleoptera,' by Mr. H. St. J. Donisthorpe; and 'New Genera of British Mymaridae (Haliday),' by Mr. F. Enock.

PHILOLOGICAL.—June 4.—Mr. H. A. Nesbitt, Treasurer, in the chair.—Prof. Weekley read a paper, 'More Anglo-French Etymologies.' The 'N.E.D.' explains abate, in the 'King's Quhair,' as "depression, easting down": it means the exact opposite, the delight of the hero on seeing his lovely lady; O. Fr. esbat, delight, pleasure (Cotgrave). Amain, in "They somewhat amayned their furie, 1578, is O. Fr. ameinrer, amoinrir, to diminish. To ameise is O. Fr. ameisier to appease. Ansire in John Wilson's 'Andronicus Commenius,' 1663, but not in 'N.E.D.' is obviously a mixed form, from ancestor and sire. Lyndsay's askar—"They gart me stand fra thame askar"—is O. Fr. à escart, à l'écart. Chert, a splintery variety of quartz, is an adaptation of Fr. echarde, splinter, which is of Germanic origin, as "shard, O.E. sceard," is no doubt connected with it. Perhaps quartz is from an O. Fr. pl. esquarts*; cp. esquerder in Godefroy and Catalan esquerdar, to split. The early Scotch cockermunny, "the gathering of a young woman's hair, when it is wrapt up in a band or fillet, commonly called a snood" (Jamieson), appears to be a corruption of Fr. coque a nonnain. Cotgrave has "mesange nonnette, a little titmouse called the nunne, because she seemes to weare a nunne-like fillet about her head." The early Scotch "coddereris, vagaboundis, and puyr boddies" probably means tinkers, and is a Picard form of O. Fr. chauderier, tinker, for "these drunken Tynckers, called also pryggies, be beastly people" (Harman). Dago, from Sp. Diego, is stated by the 'N.E.D.' to be of quite modern American origin; but in 1613 we find in Dekker's 'Strange Horserace,' "The Diego was a dapper fellow, of a free minde and a faire, bounteous of his purse, but sparing in his euppes." Pinion, applied to the erebellations of battlements, is more probably from peigne, a comb—like pinion, wool-combings, Fr. peignon—than from pignon, gable. Rare, a flush-decked ship, is probably a misprint for race, with the same meaning, which represents Sp. or Port. raso rather than Fr. ras. Sale, willow, is from Fr. saule, and not O.E. sealh, which gives sallow. Spenser's shard, interpreted by Johnson as "frith, strait," is O. Fr. eschard—"Le passage fust mout escars"—narrow, as our "strait" is from O. Fr. estreit, narrow. Tache, tack, a fastening, a nail, are aphetic forms of O. Fr. attache, clasp, brooch. Attaquer is the regular Norman-Picard form of attacher, and originally had the same meaning, still seen in s'attaquer à, to attack, that is, to fasten on. The Norman taque has given us our nautical tack. To tack with a needle is an aphetic form of Norm. attaquer, and is thus a doublet of the M.E. tachen, as Moisy shows. The verb tachen, to mark (cf. tetchy), is in 'Merlin,' E.E.T.S., i. 88/4, "a wif, the beste tacched of alle good condicions," is a stock phrase in O. Fr.—"et si estoit entecies de bones teces" ('Aue. et Nic.', 2), lit. marked with good marks. Tendril is to be connected with L. tendere, to stretch, rather than Fr. tendre, tender. That Fr. tendrille must have existed is clear from Cotgrave's "tendrillons, tendrells, little gristles." Prof. Weekley dealt also with chignon, clock (of a stocking), flawkertis (Scotch), imbrue, scarbote, to scotch, tassel, tiny, tret (Fr. trait, pull, the turn of the scale), to trick, trinket, turrel and turret or teret, a ring on a bit or harness for a chain or rein to pass through.

Dr. H. Oelsner subsequently read a paper on the MS. All Souls 182, which contains a valuable collection of early French manuals, compiled for the purpose of teaching French to English people. He dealt with those portions of the MS. which have not yet been printed by Stengel and others, giving some account of the epistolaries and proverbs, and of sundry grammatical items that are scattered throughout the volume on odd folios. Dr. Oelsner is covering the whole field of these early manuals, which are of considerable importance, not only from the philological standpoint, but also for our knowledge of the manners and history of the time, in the introduction to Wynkyn de Worde's 'Lytell Treatise' which he is editing for the E.E.T.S. There he will print numerous specimens of various kinds from all the manuscripts known to us.

MATHEMATICAL.—June 10.—Sir W. D. Niven, President, in the chair. The following papers were communicated: 'On the Behaviour at the Poles of a Series of Legendre's Functions Representing a Function with Infinite Discontinuities,' by Mr. F. J. W. Whipple; 'An Analogue of Pascal's Theorem in Three Dimensions,' by Mr. W. H. Salmon; 'Some Symbolical Expressions for the Eliminant of Two Binary Quantics,' by Mr. A. L. Dixon.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

WED. British Numismatic, 8.
THURS. Royal, 4.30.
— Society of Antiquaries, 8.30.
FRI. Physical, 9.—'A Transition Point in Zinc Amalgam,' Prof. Carhart; 'A Method of producing an Intense Cadmium Spectrum, with a Proposal for the Use of Mercury and Cadmium as Standards in Refractometry,' Dr. T. M. Lowry; 'On the Measurement of Wave-length for High-Frequency Electrical Oscillations,' Mr. A. Campbell; and others.

Science Gossip.

THE seventy-ninth annual meeting of the British Association, under the presidency of Sir J. J. Thomson, will take place at Winnipeg from August 25th to September 1st.

WE are pleased to notice that Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, one of our oldest contributors, has received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University of Göttingen as a recognition of his distinguished services to geography.

THE announcement is made of the resignation of two professors at Glasgow University—Prof. Cleland of the Chair of Anatomy, and Prof. Jack of the Chair of Mathematics; and of two at Edinburgh University—Prof. Chione of the Chair of Surgery, and Prof. Kirkpatrick of the Chair of History. We regret also to hear that Prof. Cunningham, of the Chair of Anatomy, is seriously ill.

MR. R. B. HENDERSON, assistant master at Rugby School, has written an introduction to the study of moths and butterflies for the Rugby School Natural History Society, entitled 'The Scaly-Winged.' It will be published immediately by Messrs. Christopher.

THE Illuminating Engineering Society has now been provided with a constitution and by-laws, and proposes to collect the scattered data bearing on the subject, and provide an opportunity for the impartial discussion of all methods of lighting. There are many matters of vital interest to the nation, such as the illumination of streets, schools and hospitals, factories, and public buildings, which the society can profitably discuss. Its first session will be held next November. Any one interested may become a member, and may be of either sex and any nationality. Particulars can be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, Mr. L. Gaster, editor of The Illuminating Engineer, 32, Victoria Street, S.W.

THE Report of the Astronomer Royal, Greenwich Observatory, is published as a Parliamentary Paper, price 1s.

MR. H. F. NEWALL, past President of the Royal Astronomical Society, having been succeeded last February by Sir David Gill, was on Tuesday elected the first Professor of Astrophysics at the University of Cambridge.

WE learn from The Observatory that a scheme is on foot to place a window or tablet in Wanstead Church in memory of the Rev. James Pound, uncle of Bradley, the third Astronomer Royal, the discoverer of aberration and nutation, whose observations at Greenwich may be said to have laid the foundation of modern astronomy. Pound made many valuable observations himself, which were used by Newton and Halley, and to his early training of his nephew in science was greatly due the excellence to which Bradley attained. Pound was appointed rector of Wanstead in 1707, and died there in 1724; but hitherto there has been no fitting memorial to him. The present rector, the Rev. J. R. Corbett, will be glad to receive subscriptions for this object, as will also the editors of The Observatory, the next number of which will contain a short account of Pound by Mr. Lynn.

THE Nautical Almanac has recently been issued for the year 1912. The contents and arrangement are the same generally as those of the preceding year. A total eclipse of the sun will take place on October 10th; the central line will pass from North to South America, but the duration of totality will nowhere exceed two minutes.

Nos. 4327-8 of the Astronomische Nachrichten contain the results of the measurements of a large number of double stars, obtained in the course of last year by Dr. Dobereck at Sutton, Surrey.

EXAMINING photographic plates taken by M. Blazko at the Moscow Observatory, Madame Ceraski has detected variability in two stars, situated in the constellations Gemini and Perseus respectively. The former appears to be of long period (perhaps about eight months), and, according to twelve photographs obtained between 1905 and 1909, the brightness is about the ninth magnitude at a maximum, and below the eleven and a half at a minimum. The changes in the other seem to be comprised between the eleventh and twelfth magnitudes; the period is either short or irregular. The two stars will be reckoned in a general list as var. 19, 1909, Geminorum, and var. 20, 1909, Persei.

THE fifth number of Vol. XXXVIII. of the Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani has appeared. There are papers by Prof. Riccò on the structure of the solar protuberances, and by Prof. Bemporad on the sudden absorption of the solar radiation in the atmospheric strata at different heights on Mount Etna; also a continuation of the diagrams of the spectroscopic images of the sun's limb observed at Catania, Kalocsa, Madrid, Odessa, Rome, Zò-sè, and Zurich from September, 1906, to the end of that year.

FINE ARTS

EXHIBITION OF CHOSEN PICTURES AT THE GRAFTON GALLERIES.

FREQUENTERS of the regular picture shows of London should during the next few weeks pay a visit to the Grafton Galleries as a corrective; and we shall be surprised if they leave without in some degree modifying their customary opinion that modern painters are, in comparison with those of almost any other period, a feeble and degenerate race. That opinion is, of course, encouraged by the circumstances in which painting is usually shown. The lack of intelligent patronage makes the selling of pictures almost like a lottery, in which the painter hastens to take as many shares as possible, hurrying his works wet from the easel to the walls of an ever-increasing number of picture galleries. Even so it would appear from this hastily gathered and more or less retrospective exhibition that many of the best pictures return to the possession of the artists even when they are by the men most before the public. Indeed, considering the amount of money that is invested, and study expended on the work of earlier masters, we think that living artists have just ground for complaint. At the same time, if they are as a body to make good their claim to rank on equal terms with the over-appreciated painters of other days, exhibitions must be better organized and the vulgar scramble for attention reduced to reasonable proportions.

It is this more than anything which has discredited modern art. There are not too many exhibitions in proportion to the population, but too few capable artists of reputation to supply them. There is also a temptation for the relatively small number of painters who monopolize public attention to exhibit too much, lest they should lose the right to exhibit at all. In the work of reforming this state of things there may be place for an institution like the Allied Artists Association, which lays the onus of selection entirely on the shoulders of the artist. There will also be a place for exhibitions, carefully selected on a basis of sound criticism, but there seems to be every year less utility either in exhibitions of which the Royal Academy is the typical example, wherein the importance allowed to old custom and popular taste and the accidents of fitting, rob the selection of its judicial status, or in the exhibitions of small societies whose members already belong to five others, and therefore only show inferior examples of a talent already familiar to the art-loving public.

The show at the Grafton is certainly not faultless, but if the average of modern work shown in London were of equal quality it would be more difficult than it is for amateurs to disparage the work of our time; nor do we think less highly of the judgment which has brought it together because it has included a large number of works which we have ourselves already signalled out, on their previous appearance in minor exhibitions. Thus it is a great pleasure to see again Mr. Orpen's Reverie (No. 8) so subtly perfect an example of the science of values as to touch on sublimity. This is by far the finest painting that Mr. Orpen has done, and would grace any collection. Mr. Cayley Robinson's group of works (89-93) is also admirably dignified, the work of a man whose neglect for the greater part of his career is a reproach to a whole generation of retrospective critics and fervent admirers of the same qualities when they occur in the painting of a primitive Italian master. The Deep Midnight (90), Mother and Child (91), and Reminiscence (92) we have already praised in previous exhibitions. Dawn (93) is a variant of a theme we have been offered before, but a variant so far superior to the previous versions that it ranks now with the other three among Mr. Robinson's finest pictures. Mr. Maurice Greiffenhagen's Sons of God (54) is again as fine a picture as the artist ever painted, a sensuously beautiful piece of decoration, suave and skilful in execution. Beside such work as this, or the same artist's Miss Sybil Waller (55), Mr. Augustus John's Family Group looks somewhat coarse in handling. As painting it cannot compare with the kindred work which Mr. John is showing at the New English Art Club. Mr. John's use of colour seems to be experimental rather than based on any clear theoretical conception. He is none the worse painter on that account, but this picture shows him at a somewhat confused stage, when he is evidently groping after the simplicity that belongs to "flat colouring," yet clings to the strong modelling that serves his vivid realism, and finds no better solution than that of naively patching together on the same canvas passages conceived in a divergent spirit. If we were analyzing the work of a deceased artist as does the modern expert, we should confidently, though perhaps mistakenly, describe as of later date the picture now hanging in the Suffolk Street Galleries, in which the artist rises to a point of view from which he discerns his two aims as reconcilable. But if the Grafton Gallery painting is pictorially a little of a blunder, by how narrow a margin does it escape being a masterpiece, how fiercely direct in characterization are the heads of the women, how vigorous is the design of the group, and how happy the fluttering lightness of touch of the distant sea—the one passage of mysterious quality which the painter has allowed himself! This self-denial has its value, and it is in part due to it that the portrait group has a closer contemporary quality which makes Mr. Greiffenhagen's admirable work look like graceful picture-making by comparison.

Among the drawings in the end gallery is the work of an artist who wavers between Mr. Greiffenhagen's part of the "charmeur" and Mr. John's of the bare truth-teller. Mr. E. J. Sullivan in his conception of the illustrator's craft as essentially an adaptable one, varying with the author, plays many parts, and always with a reasonable amount of credit. We see him, for example, in illustrations of Tennyson taking on a suggestion of early Victorian technique not quite happily; but it is clear that he has been passing through a period when the limitations of book illustration have been a little irksome. Certainly the most striking works in his large and representative collection are those in which he shows himself as destined to be among the most powerful original lithographers now at work. The two finest of these large designs are the gigantic Awakening of Chaos (247) and The Loves of Zephyrus and Flora (203). In the latter any idea of conforming to traditional characterization is flung aside, and a formidable, sinewy creature, half man, half bird, swoops fiercely earthward. A passionate woman throws herself into his arms with as fierce an abandonment. The furious fling, the sense of weight of this trailing figure so confidently received, gives an impression of wing power in the ravisher which is irresistible, and in this less rigorous form of black-and-white art Mr. Sullivan is at present technically stronger than in pen-drawing.

The reason is not far to seek. The necessity of producing a large number of designs which is one of the results of the lowering of prices in the world of illustration has not with him, as with some others, resulted in a bankruptcy of ideas. It has stimulated their flow till his power of pen-drawing cannot keep pace with his invention, though he is as facile with a pen as a decent artist need be, and perhaps a little more so. He draws better with the broader point of the chalk simply because it is quicker, and he needs to lay on fewer strokes to the minute. We welcome his appearance in the new medium with perhaps a little uneasiness as to whether he will be able to preserve his position in the more exacting art of pen-drawing. In this medium, while he still, as always, works best when in a fury, there is a slight loss of control—the line is loose and prodigal of angles, and the design in consequence is vigorous enough, but slightly wants continuity, compactness, and objective reality. He probably did drawings intrinsically better when invention was more sluggish.

The only other exhibitor whom we have space to notice in detail is Mr. George Lambert. The Shop (46) is a masterly piece of painting, as good as anything he has done in execution, but it necessarily looks affected by its union of extremely literal vision with fantastically improbable grouping. It thus provokes our sense of actuality in order to shock it. The painter, in his shirt-sleeves, stands meditatively at one end of the picture, facing the edge of the canvas, an officer, magnificent in regimentals, at the other end gazing at Mr. Lambert's back. In the background are a lay figure and a small boy equally in profile, and looking the same way (the former, by the way, is magnificently characterized and has evidently interested the artist at least as much as his other sitters). Of course, it is possible that in the course of painting a portrait in a mirror Mr. Lambert might see a group somewhat like this, and had he represented himself as painting, the picture would have been intelligible, the officer evidently sitting for his portrait and watching the process. As it is, all the figures seem to be sitting for their portraits, and one wonders why the artist grouped them in so preposterous a fashion. Mr. Lambert has always been inclined to mix his standards, offering decorative design and an execution aiming alternately at actuality and formal patterning, but he has not hitherto pushed the contradiction so consistently to an extreme, and moved living creatures about his canvas like so much furniture, merely for purposes of balancing.

We can only briefly notice among the other features of the show the vivid Signora Lotto of Mr. Francis Dodd (6), which is a wonderful rendering of a certain kind of engaging naïveté which we think of as vanishing with the nineteenth century. Even more perfect are the drawings of the same artist—the wistful King of England, D.V. (226), the Artist's Mother (227), and an Enemy of the People (229), all wonderfully true and intimate. Not quite so unaffected, but strongly painted, is Mr. Strang's Portrait of a Young Man (33). We appreciate also the sound, careful work of Mr. Walter Russell, The Top of the Hill (38) and Mr. Gerald Kelly's work, A Portrait (82).

OTHER EXHIBITIONS.

In the Summer Exhibition at the Goupil Galleries the paintings in the ground floor galleries are of very uneven merit. On the one hand we have a very pleasant sketch by Boudin (1), a wonderful piece of virtuosity by Vollon (7), a Corot of the most interesting period (11), and a Theodore Rousseau, La Rivière (15), at once tender and grandiose, even if its dignity is a little compromised by a detestable little figure which looks like a later addition. On the other hand, we must place La visite aux Pauvres (10) among the worst of the works of Diaz, and the Canaletti in the outer room are a disappointment, being unworthy of so great a name. Dupré's Marine (28) is theatrical, as is also the landscape of Jonckind's Clair de Lune (26). This, however, is evidently a mere "pot-boiler," furbished up, but not sufficiently to spoil a sky magnificently observed and probably painted from nature. The pastel Le Corps de Ballet by Degas is not one of his finest, but every work is of interest which comes from a master unique in his generation by the thoroughness and sincerity of his research. Of living English painters, Mr. Peppercorn (24) and Mr. W. Nicholson (29) show the most complete work. Mr. John's Wild Flowers (33), which we remember to have seen some time back, has greatly improved in the interval. The laboured, muddled method in which this picture was painted produced in the first instance a result repulsive and hardly intelligible. In the unification which comes to paint with time, much of this confusion has vanished, and we are able to see how stout and genuine was the struggle which occasioned it.

In the collection of Eighteenth-Century Prints, which make the second half of the Exhibition, it is interesting to see how superior in decorative beauty and draughtsmanship the French artists are to their English contemporaries. The engravings after Moreau le Jeune and St. Aubin are a delight, marvellous in their delicate sense of the colour possibilities of black and white and their elaborate mastery of an art shown with a lightness which is the perfection of modesty. It is impossible to resist the conclusion that these men worked for a public more discerning than we have ever had in England.

In the galleries at No. 158B, New Bond Street, is an exhibition of miniatures of the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. English miniaturists of the eighteenth century gain reputation by the fact that their followers were so inferior to them, this being an art which in modern hands has indeed degenerated. Cosway, Smart, Plimer and the rest of them, were rarely very good in drawing, or very subtle in expression, and only occasionally do we find, as in Nos. 31 or 36, any sign of that power of designing the colour of the miniature in harmony with the stones in which it is set, which makes a pendant a single work of art. The seventeenth-century work shown is much better, several works by S. Cooper (60 and 61, for example) being dignified pieces of portraiture, if not supremely fitted for use as personal adornments. The same may be said of No. 76, attributed to Vandyck, and another fine miniature in oil, No. 74. The sixteenth-century miniatures were still finer, but this earlier work is hardly represented at all.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL NOTES.

THE first volume of the Annals of Archaeology and Anthropology issued by the University of Liverpool seems now to be complete, and forms a fairly even record of work on the whole good and conscientiously performed. When the editor (Prof. J. L. Myres) feels more at home in his task, he will no doubt insist upon a stricter observance of literary form by his colleagues, and will be a little more careful in his choice of contributions from outside than at present. His own article 'Midas beyond the Halys' is very interesting, and gives an account of the Black Stone of Tyana copied by Prof. Garstang in his last year's explorations in Asia Minor, duly chronicled in this journal at the time (see The Athenæum, No. 4226). The inscription on this stone is written in the large uncials of a script which Prof. Myres styles "an archaic form of Ægean alphabet," and in the ancient "Phrygian" language. The punctuation dots, which, he tells us, are usual in Phrygian inscriptions, enable one to trace the word-forms with fair certainty, and the text is in lines of which only four are preserved, while it is written boustrophedon, beginning apparently from right to left. Prof. Myres is of opinion that he can recognize therein the name of Midas, which he holds to be the same as that of the King Midas of Herodotus, and that the inscription was made for that sovereign. With less assurance he thinks, too, that he finds there the well-known name of Atys, which, he suggests, was in that time and place pronounced "Aquys," a conjecture which would have far-reaching consequences. He is doubtless near the truth when he describes the monument as of the early part of the seventh century B.C., and it is of great importance to all who are interested in the study of Greek origins, which is now constantly receiving fresh light. A full description of Prof. Garstang's work at Saktje-Geuzi and an article by the last-named scholar on Dr. Hugo Winckler's excavations at Boghaz-Keui give a useful account of the latest contributions to our knowledge of Hittite remains.

Not unconnected with this is an article by Mr. H. R. Hall called 'Mursil and Myrtilos,' which appears in the current number of the Journal of Hellenic Studies. In his very useful, if somewhat unequal book on 'The Oldest Civilization of Greece,' Mr. Hall seven years ago poured contempt upon those who claimed the Pelopidæ as Hittites, but he is now not quite so sure that they are wrong. From the cuneiform tablets discovered by Dr. Winckler at Boghaz-Keui, he deduces that the Hittite king whose name, when written in Egyptian hieroglyphs, has been read as "Maurasar" was really named Mursil, which reminds Mr. Hall of Myrtilus, that charioteer of Cnomaus whom Pelops is said to have cast into the sea, and to whom he afterwards, as Pausanias cautiously records, may have erected in the hippodrome at Altis in Elis a cenotaph known as the Taraxippus, because it inspired wild terror in the competing horses. From this he proceeds to argue that Pelops "the Lydian" was a Hittite immigrant; and it is certainly possible, in view of the latest discoveries, that some "sub-king or general" of the Hittites may have "reached Greece and founded a dynasty there." Why, because Myrtilus may cover a Hittite name, Pelops, who, according to the legends, first bribed and then slew him, should be a Hittite too, Mr. Hall does not tell us; but he is on surer, though still slippery, ground when he comments on Dr. Winckler's wonderful discovery that the people of Mitanni, well known as the correspondents and allies of the Egyptian kings of the Eighteenth Dynasty, worshipped such purely Aryan deities as Mitra, Varuna, Indra, and the Açvins or Heavenly Twins. The Mitannians were probably closely connected, as Mr. Hall says, "in race and culture" with the Hittites; and thus we have, for almost the first time, a suggestion of the road by which Sanskrit and its congeners may have travelled from India by Asia Minor and Ionia into Greece and Southern Europe.

In the same Journal appears a communication made by Mrs. Arundell Esdaile to the British School at Rome, dealing with the statue of a boy found in the winter of 1899 during the tunnelling operations beneath the Quirinal. He wears a short tunic without cincture, and has beside him a staff bound with myrtle, while the author speaks of a myrtle wreath indistinguishable in the photographs given as illustrations to the paper. These attributes suggest an attendant at the Mysteries, and the truth of this is confirmed by an almost exactly similar statue which she reproduces in her article, and which she found in the house of the keepers of the Magazzino Archeologico. The latter figure bears in his arms the χοιρίδιον, or little pig, which we know to have been borne by the assistants at Eleusis. It also very closely resembles the other statue, but, unlike this, has both feet and legs complete, which enables us to observe that one foot only is covered by a sandal, the other being left bare. This offers a strong presumption that the baring of one foot had some ritual significance in the Mysteries, and Mrs. Esdaile gives references to other examples, collected by Dr. Amelung in his 'Skulpturen des Museo Vaticano,' which illustrate the same practice. Mrs. Esdaile's contention that when, in the fourth book of the 'Æneid,' Dido is described as offering her last sacrifice to the Chthonian gods unum exuta pedem vinculis, allusion is made to the same idea, seems therefore justified. How it came to form part of a ritual more familiar to some of us is, to use a classic phrase, another story.

The current number of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society contains an extremely interesting account by Prof. A. von Le Coq of an expedition led by him into Chinese Turkestan at the expense of the Royal Museum für Völkerkunde in Berlin. Prof. Le Coq succeeded in this the late Prof. Pischel, and discovered perhaps the most important relics yet brought to light of that lost Manichæan faith which once competed on equal terms with Christianity in Southern Europe. At Turfan or Turpan, in Chinese territory, he discovered a great quantity of MSS. in a variety of the Estranghelo character which turned out to be the long-lost script peculiar to the Manichæans, and these are now being deciphered by Prof. F. W. K. Müller and others. In addition he found a large wall-painting in "water colour" (qy. fresco?) of a Manichæan high priest in white sacerdotal robes, and with a nimbus composed of conventional representations of the sun and moon. His white robes are connected by a rectangular piece of embroidery across the breast, and a similar band passes over each shoulder. On his head is a tall white cap embroidered with gold, and the face is described as "oval, the nose aquiline, but the eyes small and rather slanting in their position," while they are said to "recall the manner of Chinese artists when painting the portrait of a European." From the fact that the central figure is greater than life-size, while the priests and nuns grouped round it are a good deal less, the author suggests that this may be a representation of Manes himself. There were also found on the same site banners made out of cotton cloth covered with a thin layer of stucco, on which had been painted in "water colour" the central figure above described, with a man and a woman kneeling on each side of him; and also some paintings on silk showing the souls of the faithful in the moon-boat, warriors in armour with long cross-hilted swords, and priests sitting on thrones made like a lotus, one of whom holds a curious cross. The author draws our attention to the singular way in which some of these finds resemble Byzantine art. The date of most of them seems to be the ninth century A.D.

The Egyptologist, Dr. Georges Foucart, now professor at the University of Aix and Marseilles, has in his just-published 'Méthode comparative dans l'Histoire des Religions' done much to take away the reproach of dilettantism which some German scholars have been quick to cast upon this latest development of archaeology. He sums up the whole matter in the words:—

"L'Histoire des Religions doit suivre à travers les âges les phénomènes religieux des divers peuples, en commençant par les plus anciens; elle doit chercher à expliquer leur ordre et leurs manifestations par les rapprochements des monuments et des textes appartenant aux différentes sociétés humaines."

In this study he introduces several new methods of attack, and gives various reasons why the religions of primitive or non-civilized folk should not be taken as what he calls a "religion type" or standard of comparison. Instead, he chooses the religion of Ancient Egypt, in which his competence is acknowledged by all, and traces with great skill and in most readable fashion the gradual evolution of religious beliefs in the Nile Valley. The wisdom of his choice is particularly shown in the matter of magic, for he says with truth that Egypt is the only country in which we can at present almost trace the beliefs generally called magical back to their primitive source. He will have very little to do with "the once fashionable totemistic theory, thinking apparently that totemism, in the strictest sense of the word, was really confined to the North American Indians. It is possible that he has not here given full weight to the arguments on the other side.

The last number of Le Muséon rather unkindly calls attention to two recent cases in which the learned have been taken in in matters in which they were supposed to be specially expert. One of these is that of a well-known Chief Rabbi, a most voluminous writer on Semitic subjects, who published last year in the Zeitschr. des deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft what he imagined to be a very early Hebrew recension of the Book of Joshua, earlier than Josephus, and differing greatly from the Masoretic text. His mistake was shown by the Samaritan High Priest Jacob, the son of Aaron, who declared to persons worthy of credit that he had not only himself composed this supposed new text from the Arabic version, but had even published it in Jerusalem some seven years ago. The other case is that of the famous scarabs supposed to have been made to record the circumnavigation of Africa, and purchased as such by the Museum of Brussels for 400*l.* It has since turned out that they were forgeries, and the widow and son of a well-known Egyptologist are now actually in prison for the offence. Yet, as the writer in Le Muséon says, it would be most interesting to know who the Egyptologist was who composed the text.

The exhibitions of the result of last winter's excavations in Egypt are now being arranged. That of the Egypt Exploration Fund will open at King's College, London, in the first week of July, and Prof. Garstang's on the 9th of the same month at Burlington House.

A MITHRAIC STATUETTE FROM ASIA MINOR.

It has always been a matter of surprise that so little evidence remains of the worship of Mithras in Asia Minor, considering that it was so strong in the West, and especially on the Danube and Rhine frontiers among the soldiers stationed in guard along those important lines. Yet one important inscription, which I published many years ago in the Revue des Études Anciennes, proves that the ritual was familiar to the Phrygian people; and some slighter pieces of evidence, for example a Tarsian coin-type, point to the same conclusion. Also it is, of course, evident that Asia Minor was the intermediate region over which the Mithraic religion spread to the West. I have hitherto been inclined to attribute the scantiness of Mithraic traces in the country to the strength of Christianity. That this cause did operate is certain, but it does not form a sufficient explanation. The army was the chief seat of Mithraism under the later Roman Empire, and it is at military stations that most of the traces are found. The Mithraic worship was fostered in the army by the Emperors as a counterpoise to the influence of Christianity, and as a buttress of the thorough-going loyalty and religious patriotism which they wished to encourage. If that was the case, there is no apparent reason why the Eastern legions should be free from Mithraism. Although Christianity was much stronger among them than in the Western armies, still it is hardly doubtful that the great majority of the Eastern soldiers were pagans. The attempt made by Galerius to purify the army from Christians, even though it is proved by the recently discovered epitaph of Bishop Eugenius to have failed, is at least a proof that there was some apparent possibility of eliminating the Christian element, i.e., that that element was in a minority among the soldiers. Where the conflict between the Christian and the pagan element was keen, there one would expect to find that the rival religion to Christianity was flaunted by opponents of the new faith. The want of any evidence of Mithraism among the Eastern armies, therefore, is probably due only to the backward state of exploration along the Euphrates frontier. The only expedition along part of the Euphrates frontier that has been made with definitely archæological ends in view was that conducted by Mr. D. G. Hogarth, and he would be the last to think that any single journey of exploration would exhaust the possibilities of discovery. The evidence about the stations and troops of the Euphrates frontier is still mainly literary, and literature is almost as silent about Mithraism as it is about Christianity. When the archæological evidence is collected the hold of both the rival religions on the Eastern armies may be illuminated.

In the dearth of evidence one small item may be mentioned as illustrating what is to be expected in the future. Recently we had the opportunity of seeing for a few moments a small statuette of Mithraic character. The owner, who thinks it is a portrait of Alexander the Great, cherishes a most exaggerated opinion of its value, which will have to be toned down. But for the present it is impossible to deal with him; and I describe the statuette here in order that it may be recognized and its provenance known, when it comes into the European market, as it probably will do soon. It represents a Roman soldier, standing with his head slightly thrown backwards, so that the eyes look a little upwards. The work is rude, but not devoid of spirit. The soldier has an air of pride and exultation, which (if intended by the artist) is very successful and in accordance with his surroundings. He stretches out his arms to the two sides, and lays his right hand on the head of a half-length female form (devoid of attributes), which seems to rise out of the ground (like representations of the goddess Gaia), while he rests his left hand on a short column whose top ends in a lion's head (rudely indicated, but shown to be a lion by the hair or mane). He wears a cuirass, on the breast of which is a Gorgoneion and underneath it a scorpion or some similar sort of animal, or shell-fish like a lobster. I observed no other kind of armour, but Mr. Calder noted that the soldier wears a helmet. He has whiskers and beard cropped very close, and a long moustache. I take him to be a "Lion" in the mystic initiation of Mithras; and his air of pride as he lays his hand on the lion's head intimates his claim to this rank in the ritual. He is about eleven inches high, and the column and goddess about five or six.

My wife, who saw him for a moment, reminds me that his arms were too big and long, though she was, like me, struck with the proud expression of the statuette.

We had only a brief and hurried look at the statuette, which we dared not study carefully, lest our interest in it should double the owner's estimate of its value. Hence my observation of details was defective. As things have turned out, it would have been better to study the statuette carefully, and swell the owner's estimate of its value, leaving him to come to terms with some buyer. He counts on selling it to some of the German railway officials, or some of the engineers who are working out the great irrigation scheme for the plain of Konia.

The statuette is said to have been brought from the Karadja Dag. I have little doubt that this means that it was found in the amateur digging which (as I hear) the natives have been carrying on at Emir-Ghazi, since we directed their attention to the place by our repeated visits last year and previously. I learn also that a sarcophagus with sculptures of the Sidamaria type, though small in size, has been found between Emir-Ghazi and Arissama (the ancient Ardistama). Now, there remains no doubt in my mind that Emir-Ghazi is the site of the Byzantine military station Kasis or Kases, which formerly I wrongly inclined to place further east in the plain of Venasa ('Histor. Geography,' pp. 220, 250, 293, 356) on account of the underground dwellings which are a feature of that plain and were so of Kasis. They are also found at Emir-Ghazi, which retains the old name, modified only so far as to give a meaning: Kazi was taken as the Arabic Ghazi, conqueror. Kasis was a Tourma of the Cappadocian Theme until about A.D. 890, when it was transferred to the Kharsian Theme. Emir-Ghazi is a military post of the highest importance. It lies in a narrow plain between Karadja Dag on the south and Arissama Dag on the north; and in this position it commands many lines of communication, while above it rises the impregnable castle of Arissama. The statuette suggests that it was probably also a Roman military station. The natives opened a number of graves in 1908, and found only Roman pottery and glass, the date of which was proved conclusively by a coin of the period of Constantine which we extracted from one of the vases. The excavations which we made in a large tumulus, on the other hand, revealed only hand-made pottery which Prof. Körte of Göttingen dates about the seventh century B.C., while the Hittite inscriptions also attest the ancient importance of Kasis. Prof. Sayce read in them the title of the King of the Kasimiya or people of Kasi, which further confirms the identification. I would also take Ptolemy's Khasbia in Lycaonia as identical with the old name Kasimiya (B corresponding to M). This would give the boundary between Cappadocia and Lycaonia very narrowly, for Arissama village is only three or four miles east of Emir-Ghazi; and Ardistama was in Cappadocia, according to Ptolemy. In fact, the boundary line evidently ran along the axis of Karadja Dag, and across to Arissama Dag, leaving Emir-Ghazi to Lycaonia and Arissama Kale to Cappadocia. But from the military point of view both places go together.

W. M. RAMSAY.

THE ROMAN WALLS OF GLOUCESTER.

ALTHOUGH many details (some of them valuable ones) are known regarding the Roman town of Glevum, the state of ignorance in which we have been left regarding its walls and the precise position of its gates is much to be regretted. For, with the exception of portions of the east wall—found, and identified, and preserved, by the late Mr. John Bellows, and running beneath his printing-works at Eastgate, and again near the Public Library, toward its south-east angle—almost nothing is known, and the various plans printed of the Roman town must be considered as conjectural only.

Owing, however, to the statement of Mr. Bellows himself (vol. vi. p. 170, Proc. Cotswold Field Club), to the effect that under the shop occupied by one Harry Jacobs, in the lower part of Westgate Street (i.e., eastward adjoining the Shire Hall), he had found "proofs nine feet thick" "of one of the massive buttresses of the Castle of the West

[i.e. River] Gate of the Roman city of Glevum," it has confidently been assumed that the west wall likewise has been correctly located. Perhaps somewhat too easily satisfied with a structure which he only saw by candle-light in the cellar of the above shop, Mr. Bellows was certainly led to believe that he had once more identified the ancient city wall, and that, furthermore, he could trace the line of it northwards beneath houses in College Street, running toward the south porch of the Cathedral, "its direction being straight into the porch"; and again, "backward [i.e. southward] along the space between Berkeley Street and the Shire Hall."

Curiously enough, he drew the wall not precisely as he described it, but as passing east of the porch by several feet. The County Council having recently acquired the site of the above shop and its neighbours, it became a matter of serious importance to examine carefully the clearing, and particularly the exposed cellars, so as to identify and measure and photograph the wall and buttress described by Mr. Bellows. At the request of my friend Mr. F. A. Hyett (Chairman of Quarter Sessions, and historian of Gloucester), I duly did so. The result so far proves that the said wall and buttress are no part of any Romano-British wall or gate, but are portions of a sixteenth-century mansion belonging to Tudor Gloucester. Neither does the masonry or the footing of the wall evidence the usage of any Roman materials.

In this view the City Surveyor, Mr. Robert Phillips, fully concurs. He adds that the structure may belong to any time between the fifteenth and seventeenth centuries.

In consequence, the minor evidences adduced by Mr. Bellows as to the line of the west wall must, I think, be put aside, and that line must be considered not yet proven. Perhaps it should be looked for as much as fifteen yards eastward of its hitherto conjectured position. A simple N.—E. trench opened in the Cathedral Close on the south side of that building—without inconvenience to the public, and at trifling expense—would probably determine once and for all the important point in consideration, and would greatly add to our knowledge of the dimensions of Glevum after it had become a walled town. It is to be hoped that the Dean and Chapter may be persuaded to do this right worthy work.

ST. CLAIR BADDELEY.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 10th and 11th inst. the important collection of pictures and drawings belonging to the late Sir John D. Milburn, very high prices being realized.

Pictures of the Early English School: Gainsborough, Miss Adney, half figure to left, 2,940*l.*; J. Tompion, Esq. (Beau Tompion), in brown coat and red vest trimmed with gold, 1,470*l.* Hoppner, Lady Langham, standing by the side of some rocks overlooking the sea, 5,460*l.*; Lawrence, Lady Aberdeen, 1,942*l.* Raeburn, Countess of Aboyne, 1,680*l.* Reynolds, Sir Robert Fletcher, 441*l.* Anonymous, Portrait of an Old Woman, in red shawl and mob cap, knitting, 110*l.* A. Geddes, Portrait of a Lady, in white dress with green shawl, 136*l.*

Modern Pictures, English School: J. Aumonier, A Herefordshire Common, 110*l.* G. Clausen, Willow Trees at Sunset, 126*l.* T. S. Cooper, A Cow, a Calf, and Four Sheep, on the bank of a river, 120*l.* A. East, The Shepherds' Walk, Windermere, 367*l.* J. Farquharson, Winter, 682*l.* P. Graham, A Highland Spate, 409*l.* C. Napier Hemy, In the Track of the Trawlers, 336*l.* J. Linnell, Noonday Rest, a harvest field, with three labourers asleep against some sheaves of corn, 210*l.* Millais, "No!" a young lady, in black, with blue ribbons, standing near a table, reading a letter, 630*l.* Sir E. J. Poynter, The Message, 304*l.* D. G. Rossetti, The Bower Meadow, two females in the foreground playing musical instruments, two others dancing in the background, 714*l.* G. Vincent, A Gipsy Encampment, at the edge of a wood, a stream in the foreground, 231l. G. F. Watts, A Greek Idyll, 546l.

Continental Schools: J. B. C. Corot, Une Symphonie, in the foreground, by the side of a stream, a shepherd in red cloak, seated, piping to a goat, evening light, 2,520l.; Le Coup de Vent, a landscape, with two cows and a sheep near a pool, on the left some trees bent by the wind, 1,680l.; Environs d'Arleux, a milkmaid milking on the right, two peasant women and a girl on the left, 2,520l. H. Harpignies, The Last Days of Summer, a blue river flowing in a sandy bed, on a bank to the left leafless trees on which birds are perched, 1,207l.; Un Coup de Vent, a landscape, with a peasant and dog near some trees, 420l.; The Bridge, 136l. Ch. Jacque, The Shepherdess, a dog by her side, her flock drinking at a pool in the foreground, 1,732l. J. F. Millet, Les Falaises, high dunes on the right, waves breaking among the rocks, a headland in the distance, 1,155l. J. Breton, A Peasant Woman driving home a cow, 110l. N. Diaz, Environs de Fontainebleau, a peasant and cattle in a pasture, 504l.; A Peasant Girl, in red skirt and white blouse, walking along a woodland path, carrying a puppy, 262l. J. Dupré, Le Soir, a rough road across a common, 304l.; Les Baigneuses, a woody river scene, with children bathing, 378l. H. Fantin-Latour, An Idyll, 294l.; Dahlias, 157l.; Roses in a Bowl, 189l. E. Isabey, The Massacre of St. Bartholomew, 189l.; The Trumpeter, 126l. F. P. ter Meulen, A Flock of Sheep grazing on a River Bank, 141l. A. T. J. Monticelli, By the River Bank, 472l. F. Roybet, The Cavalier, 273l.; The Chief of the Inquisition, 220l. H. le Sidaner, A Summer Evening, houses on a canal, 126l. F. Thaulow, Clair de Lune, a village on a river, with a punt, cart, and figures, 199l.

Drawings: G. Barret, Evening Glow, 94l. D. Cox, Returning from Market, 115l.; Richmond Castle, 105l. C. Fielding, Edinburgh, 215l.; Evening Glow, Sussex, 75l.; A Coast Scene, 89l.; A Coming Storm, shipping off Broadstairs Jetty, 84l. Birket Foster, Going to Market, 252l. Sir J. Gilbert, Falstaff and his Ragged Regiment, 73l. J. Holland, The Rialto, Venice, 210l.; Rotterdam, 50l. J. Linnell, The Coming Storm, 52l. T. M. Richardson, A Rocky River Scene in the Highlands, 57l.; Loch Leven Castle, 78l. Turner, Küsnacht, Lake of Lucerne, 1,785l.; Splügen Pass, 535l.; Venice, 52l. E. M. Wimperis, Near Hemingford, with a peasant woman and girl on a rustic bridge, 105l. P. de Wint, A Farm Scene, with cattle in a pool, 63l.

After the conclusion of the Milburn Sale the following drawings belonging to the late Mr. E. Nettlefold were sold: G. Barret, Morning, a classical river scene, with a temple and buildings, 220l.; Evening, a classical river scene near the coast, with a castle, viaduct, and waterfall, 210l. W. Hunt, A Young Peasant Girl, in a wood-shed, 65l. Turner, Lucerne from the Walls, 1,365l.; Folkestone, twilight, 1,050l.; Hastings, 367l.; Shrewsbury: the New Welsh Bridge, 399l.; Sidmouth, 199l.; Ramsgate, 147l. A picture by J. Docharty, A Salmon Pool in the Highlands, brought 273l.

The following works were from various properties. Drawings: Turner, Windermere, 1,995l.; A View on the Rhine, 346l. J. F. Lewis, The Harem of a Memlook Bey, 525l. H. G. Hine, Corfe Castle, 183l. Birket Foster, A Woody Stream, with a peasant boy and sheep, 89l.; A Windy Day on the Surrey Hills, 215l. S. Prout, A View in Nuremberg, 94l.; A. Mauve, A Peasant with Sheep, at the door of a shed, 262l. J. W. North, Charles' Wain, girls returning from a Christmas dance at a farm, 115l. C. Stanfield, Wreckers off Fort Rouge, Calais, 168l. J. H. Weissenbruch, A Dutch River Scene, with a windmill, 105l. Rosa Bonheur, The Lion Family, 556l. Birket Foster, Desenzano, Lago di Garda, 70l. F. Nash, The Louvre from the Seine, 50l. P. de Wint, A Landscape, with gleaners returning, 173l.

Pictures: Turner, Margate Jetty, 441l.; Off Deal, 535l.; A Sailing-Boat off Deal, 567l. G. Chambers, Shipping off Sheerness, 120l.; Erskine Nicol, Sunday Morning, 210l. H. Fantin-Latour, Roses Trémières, 430l. N. Diaz, A Landscape, with five horses near a stream, 199l. A. Vollon, Henri IV.'s Bridge, Paris, 194l. Vicat Cole, Harvest-Time, Abinger, Surrey, 157l. T. S. Cooper, A Group of Seven Sheep, in a meadow, 152l. J. Maris, The Mouth of a River, with boats, 147l. A. Neuhuys, Minding Baby, 110l. B. W. Leader, A Sunny Evening, North Wales, 294l. H. Holbein, Portrait of a Gentleman, in black dress with a fur collar, and Portrait of a Lady, in black dress with red sleeves and white linen cap, holding some jewels (a pair, in one frame), 367l. P. J. Clays, Dutch Boats on the river, near Dordrecht, 168l. C. F. Daubigny, A River Scene, with a village and bridge, 126l.

Fine-Art Gossip.

OWING to the closing of rooms at Trafalgar Square mentioned last week, most of the late Flemish, Spanish, and French pictures have had to be withdrawn from public exhibition. An exception has, however, been made in the case of Rubens's 'Triumph of Silenus' and 'Judgment of Paris,' and Velasquez's 'Venus and Cupid' and 'Christ at the Column,' which have been hung on screens placed at the entrance to the different rooms leading out of the Central Octagon Hall. Space will also be found for all but four of the Dutch pictures which were formerly in the "Peel Room," and many of them have already been hung on eight new screens in the "Rembrandt Room."

At the end of this month an exhibition of the works of Ford Madox Brown will be opened at the Leicester Galleries, Leicester Square. Messrs. Ernest Brown & Phillips have obtained the loan of many famous paintings and water-colours. Mr. F. M. Hueffer, grandson and biographer of the painter, will write introductory notes to the catalogue.

A MUSEUM has been opened at Toledo dedicated exclusively to the works of Il Greco. The collection has been arranged in a building situated next door to the house once inhabited by the master, and all his paintings in the Municipal Museum at Toledo will eventually be removed thither.

AN exhibition of the works of Hans Thoma will be held at Magdeburg to celebrate the painter's seventieth birthday. The pictures, which are lent by two collectors only, are, with the exception of one water-colour landscape of 1876, works of Thoma's late period. The exhibition will also contain a number of designs for faience, which are good specimens of the master's sureness of hand and feeling for line.

THE Bulletin des Musées de France, a very useful review, the publication of which was suspended for some time, has now entered upon a new career. The first number of the new series contains, among other interesting articles, an account of the marble medallion portrait of Charles IX. on horseback, recently acquired by the Louvre, and ascribed to the workshop of Germain Pilon, and a notice of the fine portrait by Nattier of Marie Leczinska now in the Museum at Versailles.

HEFT 3 of the periodical Kunst und Kunstwerk, published at Vienna, contains an appreciative notice of the metal workers of Birmingham, and the school now flourishing under the auspices of the Birmingham Museum, with a sub-committee of members of the School of Art and the Jewellers' Association.

THE annual prizes in the gift of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts were announced on Saturday last. The Prix Paquin has been divided between M. Antoni, painter, and M. Garas, architect. The Prix Bernheim Jeune has been awarded to M. Dejean, sculptor; and three other prizes have been won by M. Perrichon, the engraver, and M. Périllard and M. Vorin, architects.

THE chief French art prize of the year, the Prix National, was awarded on Monday last to M. Henri Jacquier, a member of the Société des Artistes Français, whose picture in this year's Salon is inspired by a line in Victor Hugo: "Donne-lui tout de même à boire, dit mon père." The title of the picture is 'Après la Bataille.' The "bourses des voyage," of 4,000 francs each, have been voted to M. Desch, M. Georges Bergès, and M. Clovis Cazes. Three "bourses" have been awarded to sculptors and two to architects; whilst the single one for engravers has been taken by M. E. J. Laboureur of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts.

EXHIBITIONS.

SAT. (June 19).—Miss Dorothy Cox's Pictures and Water-Colours, 'River, Marsh, and Upland,' New Dudley Galleries.
— Paintings by Eugène Boudin and S. Lépine, Leicester Galleries.
— Anders L. Zorn's Original Etchings, Mr. Gutekunst's Gallery.
TUES. Second Portion of the Summer Exhibition, New Gallery.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

STEINWAY HALL.—Miss Sunderland and Mr. Thistleton's Concert.

THE programme of the third and last concert of Old Chamber Music given by Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton yesterday week contained works of considerable interest. One or two songs of Antonio Caldara, the Spanish composer, are known, especially 'Come raggio del Sol'; but a Sonata in B minor for strings and harpsichord proved a novelty. It is one of a set of twelve works of the kind, marked as Op. 1, and bearing the date 1700, so that, although Caldara lived until 1736, these sonatas belong to the period immediately preceding Bach and Handel. The music is bold and dignified. Felice dall' Abaco was represented by a fine Sonata for violin. In style the music reminds one both of Handel and Bach—of the former in the slow movements, of the latter in the Allegros. But Abaco was born fifteen years before the two composers named, so he too, as regards this Sonata—one, apparently, of a set marked as Op. 1—may have been a predecessor. A third work, an interesting Concerto for two oboes, strings, and harpsichord, was by an English composer, John Hebden, born c. 1690, of whose life nothing appears to be known. These and other works were well rendered by the concert-givers and other excellent artists.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Kubelik's Recital. Fräulein Gerhardt's Recital.

KUBELIK at his recital last Saturday afternoon played Mozart's fourth Violin Concerto in D, which, though it does not represent the composer at his greatest, is full of charm, and in his simple rendering of the music, the interpreter made one forget the virtuoso. Later the artist in pieces by Paganini, notably the G minor Étude and the Moto Perpetuo, once again proved his mastery of the finger-board; but wonderful as were these displays, it was a greater pleasure to hear him in the Concerto, in which technique was a secondary matter. The New Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald, gave a brilliant performance of Dvorák's delightful 'Carnival' Overture.

Fräulein Elena Gerhardt gave a vocal recital on Tuesday evening. Her singing in Gluck's 'O del mio dolce' was beautiful in tone, and refined in feeling. Schubert was represented by his lovely 'An die Musik,' and by two familiar, yet delightfully fresh Lieder, 'Das Fischermädchen' and 'Die Forelle,' and all three were sung with marked charm. The clever artist did not, however, quite succeed in 'Erlkönig'; the rendering was too much on the surface. In six songs by Brahms, all of them familiar, there was much to praise, though now and again there was a touch of artificiality. Fräulein Gerhardt had the great advantage of an accompanist, Herr Nikisch, whose playing is not only skilful, but also sympathetic both as regards the singer and the music.

Musical Gossip.

Two cycles of 'The Ring' will be given at Bayreuth on July 25th-28th and August 14th-17th. Madame Gulbranson will impersonate Brünnhilde; Frau Wittich, Sieglinde; and Herren Burgstaller, Ernest Krauss, Hans Breuer, and Walter Soomer, Siegmund, Siegfried, Mime, and Wotan respectively. At the seven performances of 'Parsifal,' July 23rd and 31st, and August 4th, 7th, 8th, 11th, and 20th, the title-rôle will be taken alternately by Herren Burgstaller and F. Vogelstrom. For the five performances of 'Lohengrin,' July 22nd, August 1st, 5th, 12th, and 19th, Herr Alfred von Bary and Frau Lilly Hafgren-Waag will impersonate Lohengrin and Elsa. The festival conductors will be Dr. Richter and Herren Karl Muck, Michel Balling, and Siegfried Wagner.

A COMMITTEE has been formed for the erection of a monument to Wagner at Munich, the city in which 'Das Rheingold,' 'Die Walküre,' 'Tristan und Isolde,' and 'Die Meistersinger' were first performed. The design of the sculptor Waderé for a marble statue has been accepted. It is to be placed in front of the Prince Regent Theatre.

THE Paris Académie des Beaux-Arts has awarded the Rossini prize (3,000 francs) for the best setting of the prize poem of 1908, 'Laure et Pétrarque,' by MM. Fernand Beissier and Eugène Adenis, to M. Marcel Tournier. Sixteen scores were sent in, and three sittings were held before the jury could come to a decision. The winner is a premier prix of the Conservatoire; moreover, he is now en loge for the Prix de Rome.

Mlle. EMMA CALVÉ gave a concert at Queen's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. In 'O ma Lyre immortelle' from Gounod's 'Sapho' the artist at once showed that she was in splendid voice. Next came two light chansons of the eighteenth century, both rendered with rare grace and charm. In David's florid 'Air du Mysoli' (flute obbligato M. Fleury) Mlle. Calvé's singing was wonderfully clear and brilliant; while the 'Habanera' from 'Carmen' made one hope that she would soon again be heard here in that opera. Messrs. Manrico Bacci, Kennerley Rumford, Hollman, and Paul Goldschmidt took part in the concert.

THE programme of the second concert of the English String Quartet (Messrs. Thomas F. Morris, H. Kinze, Frank Bridge, and Ivor James) included as novelty a clever and interesting Quartet by Mr. Frank Bridge, which at the Bologna International Competition of 1906 won honourable mention. It was admirably rendered, as was the Brahms Quartet in A minor (Op. 51, No. 2) with which the concert opened.

At the Ladies' Concert of the University of Dublin, held last week in Trinity College, the principal work was Sir Robert Stewart's cantata 'A Winter Night's Wake.' The work, which is in manuscript, was first performed by the Society during the lifetime of the composer. It is bright and tuneful, and abounds in humorous passages.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

- SUN. Concert (Pachmann), 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
 MON.-SAT. Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
 MON. Miss Kitty Cheatham's Recital, 3.15, Steinway Hall.
 — Miss Alice Esty's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
 — Madame Mackenzie Fairfax's Vocal Recital, 8, Æolian Hall.
 — Miss Estella Rossetti's Song Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
 — South Hampstead Orchestral Concert, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
 TUES. Handel-Mendelssohn Festival, 2, Crystal Palace.
 — Mr. Waldimir Cernikoff's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
 — Miss Maude Valérie White's Concert, 3, Bechstein Hall.
 — The Wreckers, 3, His Majesty's Theatre, with Beecham's Orchestra.
 — Mr. Max Mayer's Song Recital, 3.15, Steinway Hall.
 — Mr. Victor Benham's Pianoforte Recital, 8.30, Æolian Hall.
 — Miss Rose Koenig's Wagner Recital, 8.30, Leighton House.
 — Mr. Graham Peel's Song Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
 WED. Miss Ivy Angove's Violin Recital, 3.15, Æolian Hall.
 — Miss Gwendoline Pelly's Violin Recital, 3.15, Steinway Hall.
 — Miss Esther Palliser and Mr. R. Whitworth's Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
 — Mr. Joan Lloyd-Powell's Pianoforte Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
 THURS. Handel-Mendelssohn Festival, 2, Crystal Palace.
 — Miss Eldina Bligh's Violin Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
 — Mr. O'Neil Phillips's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
 — Miss Laura Evans Williams and Mr. Iles's Vocal Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
 FRI. Mr. Louis Bachner's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
 — Kubelik Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
 — The Wreckers, 3, His Majesty's Theatre.
 — Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's Orchestral Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
 — Miss Aussejac and Mr. C. W. Clark's Recital, 8.30, Æolian Hall.
 SAT. Handel-Mendelssohn Festival, 2, Crystal Palace.
 — Mr. Francis Richter's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

ADELPHI (Matinée Productions). — The World and his Wife. Adapted by C. F. Erdlinger from 'El Gran Galeoto' of Jose Echegaray.

WHY 'El Gran Galeoto' should only just have attracted Mr. Martin Harvey's attention it is a little difficult to understand, for the play is nearly thirty years old and can boast a European reputation. Still, with a theatre usually half a generation behind our fiction, we have constantly to be saying, Better late than never, and the enthusiasm which greeted 'The World and his Wife' last Tuesday afternoon may have been mainly intended for the leading actor, but may also be taken as some compliment to the playwright. His masterpiece is not free from a certain romantic extravagance, but on the whole the thesis he illustrates in 'El Gran Galeoto' may be fairly taken as proved. It amounts to this: that scandal not infrequently creates the sins which it imputes—forces its victims to commit the very offences of which originally they were entirely innocent. Echegaray chooses for his purpose the wife and the friend of a man of jealous though generous temper, and shows how sheer libel and gossip force them into each other's arms. Nothing is further from their thoughts than infidelity, but at every step they find themselves at the mercy of mischance—at every step the most harmless action, which under ordinary conditions could be explained satisfactorily, takes on a fatally sinister aspect. At last, in sheer despair of fighting against public opinion, they accept their cue from scandal, and determine to give it some ground.

The play has its share of striking situations and rather elaborate rhetoric, Mr. Harvey as the maligned Don Ernesto and Mr. Ainley as the jealous husband being provided with exactly the sort of parts in which they appear to advantage. Both are actors who excel in passages of vigorous declamation and emotional intensity, and here they have ample opportunities. Mr. Ainley really looks the Spaniard, and catches the Southern note of passion; while Mr. Harvey for once is not doomed to wear a uniform cloak of melancholy, and proves that he is thoroughly capable of vivacity. Mr. Ben Webster gets a nice light-comedy touch into the (imported) part of an English diplomat; and if Miss N. de Silva has rather too monotonous a diction for the heroine, she does not let down the play. It deserves something better than a week's matinée run.

LYRIC.—The Fires of Fate: a Modern Morality Play in Four Acts. By Arthur Conan Doyle.

IT is strange how serious you may determine to be as a playwright, and how little impression all your earnestness may produce. On the stage some effect you have counted as of minor rather than major importance will upset your calculations, and will strike home to the emotions of an audience that has listened but half-heartedly to the message you had thought so significant. That seemed to be Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's case last Tuesday night. He had set himself to present nothing less than a modern mystery play, and had expended an extraordinary amount of eloquence on establishing two points: first, that life even under sentence of death may well be worth living; secondly, that character can only be truly tested by suffering; and lo! a single scene which verges on the sensational won him the enthusiasm which all his moralizing might have failed to achieve.

In 'The Fires of Fate' we are introduced to a hero who has contemplated suicide because he has only a year more of life before him, and to a Congregational minister whose motto is that out of sorrow and pain good will come, and we see these men and others subjected to one of the severest ordeals civilized persons could undergo. Yet the thing which told at the Lyric the other night is not the romantic situation of the hero, unable as a doomed man to confess his love to the girl who has gained his affections, not the behaviour of his chance companions when they are confronted with an ugly fate, not the sermons of the minister breathing unconquerable hope and faith, but simply a scene in which dervishes surprise a party of Europeans at a moment in which they are isolated on a hill in the desert, and cannot prevent their women-folk from falling into the hands of the marauders. When the timorous dragoman reveals the secret of the white ladies' hiding-place, when the Europeans fight madly in a vain effort to protect their women from possible dishonour, then it is that we are deeply stirred by this play, and only then. We ought to be much concerned about the plight of the hero, tongue-tied from a sense of duty in his sweetheart's presence; but we are sure a time will come when he will find himself cured and able to give voice to his passion. We ought, perhaps, as we watch the moral collapse of this prisoner or that under the indignity of Arab insults, to ask what we ourselves should do under like conditions; but we know all the while that, thanks to a signal made by the hero when he was left for dead on the hill, help is surely coming. We ought to listen with heart-searchings to the rhetoric of the minister, but we watch instead for signs of rescue—the heliograph, for instance. This is so because the methods adopted by the author, notwithstanding his elaborate efforts at illustrating a philosophy of life, are merely those of romantic melodrama.

Still, it is good stirring melodrama, and it is capitally acted. Mr. Lewis Waller as the hero has a part after his own heart—a part that requires him to be chivalrous and picturesque, sad at times, and quietly fervent. Not for many a day has he preserved such restraint as in this impersonation. Miss D'Alroy is as piquant a representative of the American girl as even Americans could wish to see. Mr. A. E. George as the minister, Mr. Evelyn Beerbohm in a Cockney part, and Mr. Shiel Barry, who delivers the dragoman's droning Egyptian-English speeches with the drollest gravity, could none of them be easily bettered.

IRISH DRAMA.

COURT (IRISH NATIONAL THEATRE): Riders to the Sea, The Shadow of the Glen, and The Well of the Saints, by J. M. Synge; Kathleen Ni Houlihan, by W. B. Yeats; Hyacinth Halvey, by Lady Gregory.—In the plays of the late Mr. Synge, Mr. Yeats, and Lady Gregory we have art reflecting the common life of the common people, expressing in epitome the joys and sorrows and aspirations, the resigned lethargy and the restless day-dreaming, the humour and the melancholy of the Irish peasant. Such a perfect tragedy in miniature as 'Riders to the Sea' represents this and something more. Its figure of Maurya, the old mother who has been robbed one by one of all her fishermen sons, and declares at the last in a majestic passion of grief that there is nothing more she can suffer from the cruelty of the sea, is Irish enough in the lyrical fervour of her lamentations, in a sort of foresight she has, and in her ultimate submission to fate. But the story contains at the same time, elements of universal appeal; it sums up briefly the pathos of sea-faring life, the agony of the women who can do no more than wait and weep at home. On the other hand, Mr. Yeats's little allegory 'Kathleen Ni Houlihan,' with its picture of Ireland as a wrinkled crone telling of the men who have died for her and calling upon others for self-sacrifice, demands a deep sympathy with the history of the sister island, and a stern suppression of the instinct to smile, before its symbolism can reach the hearts of aliens. But when once the grey hairs and lined visage of the old woman are forgotten in a realization of what it is she impersonates, it is easy to understand the fervour of patriotism and sentiment which this piece might provoke in an Irish audience. Lady Gregory's 'Hyacinth Halvey,' a skit on the propagandism of the Board of Agriculture, shows the gayer and more light-hearted side of rural Ireland, and so to some extent do 'The Shadows of the Glen' and 'The Well of the Saints.' But both these plays of Mr. Synge have a suspicion of grimness about their humour. The one tells how a young wife counted too soon on the death of her miserly and harsh old husband, the other is a fable describing how two blind beggars were so disillusioned by the recovery of sight that they were only too glad to return to their former state of blindness. In both there is an insistence on the Irishman's fondness for the practical joke; in both the playwright adopts a curiously detached and impersonal attitude towards his characters. He has no wish to make them other than they are and soften down their asperities; even any sympathy he has for them is that of a Providence looking down on little creatures from an infinite distance. So we get here a curious combination of realism and dream-world, of poetry and folk-comedy. Even the dialogue has this double aspect; it is at once racy of the soil, and again it has a richness of fancy and a flow of music which seem a little beyond a peasant's attainment. However that may be, it is the rhythm of Mr. Synge's speeches, reproduced with such care by Miss Sara Allgood and her fellow-players, which provides one of the chief charms of this folk-drama of Ireland.

Dramatic Gossip.

ON the return of the Irish Players to the Court Theatre Mrs. Patrick Campbell will join the company for one week to play Deirdre in the play of that name, by W. B. Yeats. The first performance of this play will take place next Monday.

MR. HERBERT TRENCH's programme for the opening season of his Repertory Theatre will include, in addition to 'King Lear,' new plays by Mr. Rudolf Besier, Mr. St. John Hankin, and Mr. Gilbert Cannen; while he will revive Mr. Max Beerbohm's 'The Happy Hypocrite,' and 'The Cat and the Cherub' by Mr. Chester Fernald.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—

"It may be of interest to Shakespearean students to know that a posthumous edition of Shakespeare's König Lear, erläutert von Robert Proelss, has lately been published by Messrs. Ed. Wartig of Leipsic. The Erläuterungen of Robert Proelss ('Romeo und Julia,' 'Macbeth,' 'Julius Cäsar,' 'Hamlet,' &c.), being directed chiefly to the elucidation of the dramatist's train of thought and observation of human nature, are distinguished by their essentially æsthetic and scenic point of view from those commentaries which are devoted mainly to grammatical and historical criticism."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—C. J. F.—K. H.—A. W. G.—H. W.—G. N.—Received.
H. G. R.—H. M.—Not suitable for us.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENTS	742
BELL & SONS	740
BLACKWOOD & SONS	741
CATALOGUES	742
CONSTABLE & CO.	719
EDUCATIONAL	717
ENO'S FRUIT SALT	743
EXHIBITIONS	717
GAY & HANCOCK	720
MACMILLAN & CO.	720, 741
MAGAZINES, &c.	742
MISCELLANEOUS	742
NOTES AND QUERIES	743
PRINTERS	742
PUTNAM'S SONS	743
SALES BY AUCTION	718
SHIPPING	742
SITUATIONS VACANT	717
SITUATIONS WANTED	718
SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.	743
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	742
UNWIN	720

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

VOL. I. NOW READY, 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE HANOVERIAN QUEENS OF ENGLAND.

By ALICE GREENWOOD.

With 2 Photogravure Plates and a Map.

This work is a continuation of Strickland's 'Queens,' which ends with Queen Anne. The first volume deals with Sophia Dorothea (wife of George I.) and Caroline of Anspach (Queen of George II.). The second volume will treat of Charlotte (Queen of George III.), Caroline of Brunswick (Queen of George IV.) and Adelaide (Queen of William IV.), and is in active preparation.

MISS KAYE-SMITH'S NEW SUSSEX STORY.

Cloth, 6s.

STARBRACE.

By SHEILA KAYE-SMITH.

"A novel which ranks among the best books of the season, and assures for the author a place among the few novelists who now make the dead past live." Westminster Gazette.

"A very strong and arresting study in human cross-strains, ... in every way worthy of the author of 'The Tramping Methodist.'"—Glasgow Herald.

"One of the most vivid and imaginative stories which we have come across for many months."—Country Life.

JUST PUBLISHED, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON'S LURE.

An Anthology of Prose and Verse Passages bearing on London.

By HELEN and LEWIS MELVILLE.

With Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers designed by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

"Altogether this is a delightful book; in its pages you see London with the eyes of those who have felt its enduring fascination, and have sought to give expression to its inexhaustible variety."—Daily Telegraph.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Newly Translated, with Introduction and Notes.

By E. E. C. GOMME, B.A.

An entirely new and literal translation, chiefly from the Parker MS., but extracts have been made from the other MSS. wherever the difference of phraseology or fact justified their insertion.

READY NEXT WEDNESDAY, 8vo, illustrated, 8s. net.

FIFTY YEARS OF DARWINISM; or, Modern Aspects of Evolution.

Being Eleven Centennial Addresses in Honour of Charles Darwin, given before the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

With an Introduction by T. C. CHAMBERLAIN, University of Chicago.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, 6s.

A HISTORY OF COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION.

An Outline Sketch.

By LEWIS F. ANDERSON, Ph.D.

Although the work of an American educationist, the interest of this work is not by any means confined to the United States, as it deals very largely with English and European Educational History.

EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

BELL'S ENGLISH TEXTS FOR SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

General Editor: A. GUTHKELCH, M.A.

NEW VOLUMES.

FAIRY POETRY. A Selection by R. S. BATE, M.A., Assistant Master at St. Dunstan's College, Catford. 1s.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON. Selections. Edited by E. A. J. MARSH, M.A., Assistant Master, Hanley Secondary School. 1s.

HAKLUYT'S VOYAGES. Selections. Edited by the Rev. A. E. HALL, B.A. 1s.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

THE VOLUME IV., COMPLETING THE WORK, READY THIS DAY.
CAMBRIDGE NATURAL HISTORY.

Edited by S. F. HARMER, Sc.D. F.R.S. and A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S.

FULLY ILLUSTRATED. IN TEN VOLUMES, 8vo, PRICE 17s. NET EACH.

Volume IV. CRUSTACEA AND ARACHNIDS.

Crustacea. By GEOFFREY SMITH, M.A., and the late W. F. R. WELDON, M.A. Trilobites. By HENRY WOODS, M.A. Introduction to Arachnida and King-Crabs. By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S. Eurypterida. By HENRY WOODS, M.A. Scorpions, Spiders, Mites, Ticks, &c. By CECIL WARBURTON, M.A. Tardigrada (Water Bears). By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S. Pentastomida. By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S. Pycnogonida. By D'ARCY W. THOMPSON, C.B. M.A.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

VOLUME I.

PROTOZOA. By Prof. MARCUS HARTOG, M.A. (D.Sc.Lond.).
PORIFERA (Sponges). By IGHERNA B. J. SOLLAS (B.Sc.Lond.).
COELENTERATA AND CTENOPHORA. By Prof. S. J. HICKSON, M.A. F.R.S.
ECHINODERMATA. By Prof. E. W. MACBRIDE, M.A. F.R.S.

Volume II. WORMS, LEECHES, &c.

Flatworms. By F. W. GAMBLE, M.Sc. Nemertines. By Miss L. SHELDON.
Threadworms, &c. By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S. Rotifers. By MARCUS HARTOG, M.A. Polychaet Worms. By W. BLAXLAND BENHAM, D.Sc. Earthworms and Leeches. By F. E. BEDDARD, M.A. F.R.S. Gephyrea, &c. By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S. Polyzoa. By S. F. HARMER, Sc.D. F.R.S.

Volume III. SHELLS.

Molluscs and Brachiopods. By the Rev. A. H. COOKE, A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S., and F. R. C. REED, M.A.

Volume V. INSECTS AND CENTIPEDES.

Peripatus. By ADAM SEDGWICK, M.A. F.R.S. Myriapods. By F. G. SINCLAIR, M.A. Insects. Part I. By DAVID SHARP, M.A. F.R.S.

Athenæum.—"The series certainly ought not to be restricted in its circulation to lecturers and students only; and, if the forthcoming volumes reach the standard of the one here under notice, the success of the enterprise should be assured."

Mr. F. G. AFLALO in Country Life.—"The editors will, on the completion of the series, have the satisfaction of contemplating a work with which, for thoroughness and interest, no other of recent appearance can compare."

Knowledge.—"If succeeding volumes are like this one, the Cambridge Natural History will rank as one of the finest works on natural history ever published."

Science Gossip.—"Every library, school, and college in the country should possess this work, which is of the highest educational value."

* * A Complete Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, post free on application.

Volume VI. INSECTS. Part II.

Hymenoptera continued (Tubulifera and Aculeata), Coleoptera, Strepsiptera, Lepidoptera, Diptera, Aphaniptera, Thysanoptera, Hemiptera, Anoplura. By DAVID SHARP, M.A. F.R.S.

Volume VII. FISHES, &c.

Fishes (exclusive of the Systematic Account of Teleostei). By T. W. BRIDGE, Sc.D. F.R.S. Fishes (Systematic Account of Teleostei). By G. A. BOULENGER, F.R.S. Hemichordata. By S. F. HARMER, Sc.D. F.R.S. Ascidians and Amphioxus. By W. A. HERDMAN, D.Sc., F.R.S.

Volume VIII. AMPHIBIA AND REPTILES.

By HANS GADOW, M.A. F.R.S.

Volume IX. BIRDS.

By A. H. EVANS, M.A. With numerous Illustrations by G. E. LODGE.

Volume X. MAMMALIA.

By FRANK EVERS BEDDARD, M.A. Oxon. F.R.S., Vice-Secretary and Prosector of the Zoological Society of London.

Field.—"The Cambridge Natural History series of volumes is one of very great value to all students of biological science. The books are not intended for popular reading, but for utilization by those who are desirous of making themselves thoroughly acquainted with the branches of zoology of which they treat."

Times.—"There are very many, not only among educated people who take an interest in science, but even among specialists, who will welcome a work of reasonable compass and handy form containing a trustworthy treatment of the various departments of Natural History by men who are familiar with, and competent to deal with, the latest results of scientific research. Altogether, to judge from this first volume, the Cambridge Natural History promises to fulfil all the expectations that its prospectus holds out."

A HANDBOOK OF BRITISH INLAND BIRDS. By ANTHONY COLLETT. With Coloured and Outline Plates of Eggs by ERIC PARKER. 6s.

TALES OF THE BIRDS. By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.; extra gilt, 3s. 6d.

MORE TALES OF THE BIRDS. By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

A YEAR WITH THE BIRDS. By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A. With Illustrations by BRYAN HOOK. 3s. 6d. Prize Editions, 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.

SUMMER STUDIES OF BIRDS AND BOOKS. By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A. 3s. 6d.

BIRDCRAFT. A Field Book of 200 Song, Game, and Water Birds. By MABEL OSGOOD WRIGHT. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

GRAY LADY AND THE BIRDS. Stories of the Bird Year for Home and School. By MABEL O. WRIGHT. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE LIFE OF ANIMALS: the Mammals. By ERNEST INGERSOLL. With 15 Full-Page Colour Plates and many other Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

BEAST AND MAN IN INDIA. A Popular Sketch of Indian Animals in their Relations with the People. By JOHN LOCKWOOD KIPLING, C.I.E. With Illustrations by the Author. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: the Land of the Orang Utang and the Bird of Paradise. By ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, O.M. Maps and Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

WANDERINGS IN SOUTH AMERICA, THE NORTH-WEST OF THE UNITED STATES, AND THE ANTILLES. By CHARLES WATERTON. Edited by Rev. J. G. WOOD. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. People's Edition, 6d.

NATURAL HISTORY AND ANTIQUITIES OF SELBORNE. By GILBERT WHITE. Illustrated. 3s. 6d. net.

NATURAL HISTORY OF SELBORNE. By GILBERT WHITE. 3s. 6d. net. [Library of English Classics.]

BY ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY.

LIFE AND HER CHILDREN. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE FAIRY-LAND OF SCIENCE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THROUGH MAGIC GLASSES AND OTHER LECTURES. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WINNERS IN LIFE'S RACE; or, the Great Backboned Family. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SHORT HISTORY OF NATURAL SCIENCE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MORAL TEACHINGS OF SCIENCE. Crown 8vo, 3s.

CURIOSITIES OF NATURAL HISTORY.

By FRANK BUCKLAND. Popular Edition, with Illustrations. Each Series separately, 2s. 6d.; extra gilt, 3s. 6d., as follows:—

First Series.—RATS, SERPENTS, FISHES, FROGS, MONKEYS, &c. Second Series.—FOSSILS, BEARS, WOLVES, CATS, EAGLES, HEDGEHOGS, EELS, HERRINGS, WHALES. Third Series.—WILD DUCKS, FISHING, LIONS, TIGERS, FOXES, PORPOISES, Fourth Series.—GIANTS, MUMMIES, MERMAIDS, WONDERFUL PEOPLE, SALMON, &c.

Both the following volumes contain much practical information on Sport and Natural History.

2s. 6d. each; cloth elegant, 3s. 6d. each.
WALKS, TALKS, TRAVELS, AND EXPLOITS OF TWO SCHOOLBOYS. By CANON ATKINSON.

PLAYHOURS AND HALF-HOLIDAYS; or, Further Experiences of Two Schoolboys. By CANON ATKINSON.

ROUND THE YEAR. A Series of Short Nature Studies. By Prof. L. C. MIALL, F.R.S. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

INSECT LIFE. Souvenirs of a Naturalist. By J. H. FABRE. Illustrated. 6s. Prize Library, 2s. 6d.

MADAM HOW AND LADY WHY; or, First Lessons in Earth-Lore for Children. By CHARLES KINGSLEY. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. Also Prize Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; cloth elegant, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

GLAUCUS; or, the Wonders of the Seashore. By CHARLES KINGSLEY. With Coloured Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. Also Prize Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; cloth elegant, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Situations Vacant—continued.

MINISTRY OF EDUCATION, EGYPT.

ASSISTANT-MASTERS WANTED for SECONDARY SCHOOLS in CAIRO and ALEXANDRIA, under the Ministry of Education, to teach (1) the English Language and English Subjects, especially History, and (2) Science (Experimental Physics and Chemistry) respectively. To enter on duties OCTOBER 1. About 500 Boys in each School, mostly Mohammedans.

Candidates should not be less than 23 or over 30 years of age, should have a robust constitution, and have taken a University Degree with Honours. They must have experience as Teachers. Preference will be given to Applicants who hold a Diploma in Teaching. Appointment under contract. Salary E.360l. per annum. Length of engagement, two years. Allowance for passage out to Egypt and for return at close of contract. Teaching Hours, on an average, Four Daily, Fridays only excepted. Summer vacation not less than Two Months.

Applications, with full statement of qualifications (School, College, Class of Degree, experience in teaching), and accompanied by Copies only of Testimonials, to be sent, before JULY 10, to J. W. CROW-FOOT, Esq., at Subdeanery, Lincoln, to whom Candidates may apply or for further information.

Situations Wanted—continued.

POST REQUIRED. — University Training. French and German Scholar. Several years Secretarial, some Journalistic experience. Typist. Methodical. — Box 1603, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Miscellaneous.

LONDON PUBLISHING HOUSE REQUIRES A WORKING PARTNER with about 3,000l. Capital, upon which a good return may be fairly expected. University Man or practical experience preferred. Apply, B. T., care of Fairbairn & Wingfield, 64, Cannon Street, E.C.

TRANSLATION, Research, Indexing, Articles, or other Literary Work. Classics, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese. Varied experience. Moderate Terms.—Miss SELBY, 30, Northumberland Place, Bayswater.

RESEARCH WORK at the British Museum or elsewhere undertaken. Translations, French and German. Experienced.—Miss KENNEDY, 54, Grove End Road, London, N.W.

ACCURATE RESEARCH and GENEALOGICAL WORK undertaken by R. M. GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Advice also supplied to Persons drawing up their own Pedigree. Excellent Testimonials.—3, Chalonier Street, West Kensington.

Type-Writers, &c.

TYPE-WRITING 9d. per 1,000 words; Carbons 3d. French and German Type-writing 1s. per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3s. 100 Copies (quarto), 15s. per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand. Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITER. KINDLY NOTE CHANGE OF ADDRESS. MISS E. M. TIGAR, 10, MAITLAND PARK VILLAS, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Private Dictation Room. Circulars, &c., Duplicated. References. Established sixteen years.—SIKES & SIKES, 223A, Hammersmith Road, London, W.

Catalogues.

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner, Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols, 2l. 10s.; Trigg's Art Garden Design, Italy, 34 Guineas, for 21s.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3l. 3s.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. CATALOGUES issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

No. 365.

JUNE SUPPLEMENT TO GLAISHER'S CATALOGUE

Of Popular and Attractive Books at Cheap Remainder Prices.

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LIMITED,

Remainder and Discount Booksellers,

265 HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON (and at 14, George Street, Croydon).

The Books are on view at both Addresses.

FREE ON APPLICATION.

CATALOGUE No. 331, HEBRAICA and JUDAICA, containing a PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late Rev. CHARLES TAYLOR, D.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, on Sale by

BOWES & BOWES (formerly Macmillan & Bowes),

1, Trinity Street, Cambridge.

CATALOGUE of BOOKS on ART, including important Works on Architecture, Costumes, Furniture, Decoration, Old Masters, the English School, &c. (1,296 items). Post free on application to

JAMES RIMELL & SON, 53, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.

Books and Engravings Bought or Exchanged.

Magazines, &c.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine Street, London, W.C., JUNE 19, contains:—

BUILDING CONSTRUCTION AT BETHLEHEM (with illustrations).

IMPROVEMENT SCHEMES IN PARIS.

ARCHITECTURE AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.—V.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH PAGEANT.

THE SANITARY INSTITUTE: HOUSE DRAINS.

ILLUSTRATIONS:

SELECTED DESIGN FOR THE NATIONAL LIBRARY FOR WALES: ELEVATIONS, PLANS, AND SECTION;

COMPETITION DESIGN FOR NATIONAL LIBRARY FOR WALES.

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all News-agents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

STUDIES IN EUROPEAN PHILOSOPHY.

BY

JAMES LINDSAY, D.D.,

Author of 'Recent Advances in Theistic Philosophy of Religion.'

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"It is a great style of work, for which one can only wish from the heart the most universal recognition."

Prof. EUCKEN.

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THREE GOOD NOVELS.

THE GAY PARADISES.

By Mrs. STEPHEN BATSON. 6s.

Academy.—"We heartily recommend the story to all our readers."

Daily News.—"A sincere and vivid piece of work."

Daily Mirror.—"An admirable picture of life in London one hundred years ago."

Daily Chronicle.—"A vivid picture of a century ago."

THE SECRET TERROR.

By "BRENDA." 6s.

Times.—"A thoroughly good novel."

Scotsman.—"Cannot fail to interest and impress readers about the troubles of real life."

Morning Leader.—"Powerful and straightforward."

THE CHIPPENDALES.

By ROBERT GRANT, Author of 'Unleavened Bread.'

6s.

[Now ready.]

STANLEY PAUL & CO. Clifford's Inn, London.

UNIVERSAL BIBLIOTHEK AND AUTEURS CÉLÈBRES.

The entire selection of the popular German Series UNIVERSAL BIBLIOTHEK is on view for sale at MUDIE'S, 8d. per part. Also the well-known French Series, AUTEURS CÉLÈBRES, at 8d. per part. Full Lists of both on application.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY LTD., 30-34, New Oxford Street, W.C.

Shipping.

PLEASURE CRUISES.

SPITZBERGEN.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 5.

JULY 1 to JULY 27.

SPITZBERGEN, NORWAY, &c.

Fares from 30 guineas.

NORWAY.

From LONDON and LEITH.

No. 6.

JULY 29 to AUGUST 11.

No. 7.

AUGUST 13 to AUGUST 26.

THE NORWEGIAN FJORDS.

BY

Fares from 12 Guineas.

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT "VECTIS."

SEA-SICKNESS CAN BE CURED.

We are quite satisfied, from the numerous tests we have made, and from the Testimonials received, that we have discovered an infallible preventative of Sea-sickness, Train-sickness, &c., in ZOTOS.

ZOTOS is contained in small capsules of gelatine, quite tasteless, easily swallowed whole, and readily soluble. Our Booklet, 'How Sea-sickness is Prevented,' with Pamphlet of Testimonials, sent free on request.

ZOTOS, LTD., 32 and 34, Theobalds Road, London, W.C.

Authors' Agents.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.

The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHESE, 24, Paternoster Row.

Printers.

THE HISTORY OF YOUR LANDED ESTATES should be put into permanent form. We undertake this Work in its entirety. Searches made; material arranged and printed under Expert Supervision.—GERRARDS, Ltd., Genealogical Printers, 411A, Harrow Road, London, W.

NOW READY, Price One Shilling and Sixpence net.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT, EXPOSITORY AND PRACTICAL,

Comprising:—
BRIEF NOTES ON THE PARABLES AND MIRACLES OF OUR LORD.
NEW TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY.
GEOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF PLACES NAMED.
APPENDIX ON SOME EUROPEAN TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.

With 5 Maps.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S. Associate of King's College, London, Lay Reader in the Diocese of Southwark.

"Sunday-school teachers and others will readily find a considerable amount of help in this handy and carefully written little book."

Guardian, June 2, 1909.

London:

SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

SECOND EDITION, price One Shilling net.

BIBLE CHRONOLOGY: the Principal Events Recorded in the Holy Scriptures, arranged under their Probable Respective Dates, with a Description of the Places named, and a Supplement on English Versions. By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"This compendious and useful little work."

Guardian, March 14, 1906.

London:

SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

For Acidity of the Stomach.

For Heartburn and Headache.

For Gout and Indigestion.

DINNEFORD'S

MAGNESIA.

For Sour Eructations and Bilious Affections.

A Safe and most effective Aperient for regular use.

JUST PUBLISHED.

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO.

CHARACTERS AND EVENTS OF ROMAN HISTORY FROM CÆSAR TO NERO.

By the AUTHOR of 'THE GREATNESS AND DECLINE OF ROME,' &c.

Translated by Frances Lance Ferrero.

8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

"The book should be read both with interest and profit by any reader of culture."—Scotsman.

SEND FOR OUR CATALOGUE AND ANNOUNCEMENT LIST.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 24, Bedford Street, Strand, London, and New York.

YOUR BIRTHRIGHT IS HEALTH.

THE SCIENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

'Health is a Man's Birthright. It is as natural to be well as to be born. All pathological conditions, all diseases, and all tendencies to disease are the result of the transgression of physiologic and hygienic law. This is the science of health in a nutshell.'—DENSMORE.

Eno's Fruit Salt

IS NATURE'S ANTIDOTE FOR HUMAN ILLS
arising from the neglect or violation of her laws.

'Our Acts, our angels are, for good or ill, our fatal shadows that walk by us still.'

'And such is life, so gliding on, it glimmers like a meteor, and is gone.'

CAUTION.—Examine the capsule, and see that it is marked ENO'S 'FRUIT SALT.' Without it you have the sincerest form of flattery—IMITATION.

Prepared only by J. C. ENO (Limited), 'FRUIT SALT' WORKS, LONDON, S.E.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

NOW READY.

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

SUPPLEMENT TO

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Containing an Account of the Flag, Reprinted June, 1908.

With Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co. LTD.

NOW READY.

NEW AND IMPORTANT NOVEL BY THOMAS PINKERTON.
THE ADOPTION OF RHODOPE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION OF
CATHOLICISM ON A PHILOSOPHICAL BASIS.

By HENRY JAMES SAINT-BENNO CUNLIFFE,
M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

FEUDAL ENGLAND.

By J. HORACE ROUND. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

WORKS BY SIR JAMES RAMSAY, BART.
THE FOUNDATIONS OF ENGLAND.

With Maps and Illustrations. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 24s.

THE ANGEVIN EMPIRE, A.D. 1154-1216.

With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s.

THE DAWN OF A CONSTITUTION;

Or, the Reigns of Henry III. to Edward III.
(A.D. 1216-1377.)

With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"The best books of reference for the facts of English history for the period covered by them."—Notes and Queries.

KANT'S PHILOSOPHY AS RECTIFIED BY SCHOPENHAUER.

By M. KELLY, M.A. M.D., late Major R.A.M.C.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

VALUATION: its Nature and Laws.

By Prof. URBAN. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

STUDIES IN ROMAN HISTORY.

Vol. II. By E. G. HARDY, M.A. D.Litt. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

HEGEL'S EDUCATIONAL THEORY AND PRACTICE.

By MILLICENT MACKENZIE, M.A., Professor of Education, University College, Cardiff. With an Introductory Note by Prof. T. S. MACKENZIE, Litt.D.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. net.

THE CLIMATE OF STRATHPEFFER.

By H. W. KAYE, M.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

OPINIONS OF MEN, WOMEN, AND THINGS.

By the late HARRY QUILTER. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.
net. Also an EDITION DE LUXE of 50 Copies on Art Paper, bound in vellum, 3l. 3s.
"Seventeen characteristic articles from the pen of the late Mr. Harry Quilter are reprinted in this interesting and readable volume of excursions in criticism."—Scotsman.

SONNENSCHN'S QUOTATION SERIES.

The two following are now issued in crown 8vo form at
3s. 6d. net.

DICTIONARY OF ITALIAN
QUOTATIONS.

By P. H. DALBIAC and T. B. HARBOTTLE.

DICTIONARY OF GERMAN QUOTATIONS.

By LILIAN DALBIAC.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS
YEAR-BOOK, 1909.

Nineteenth Year of Issue. 3s. 6d. net.

THE SCHOOLMASTERS' YEAR-BOOK AND DIRECTORY, 1909.

Seventh Annual Issue. 7s. 6d. net.

THE GIRLS' SCHOOL YEAR-BOOK.
(PUBLIC SCHOOLS.)

Fourth Annual Issue. Compiled with the co-operation of the Association of Head Mistresses. Part I.: Full account of about 130 of the leading Public Schools for Girls. Part II.: Articles on the various Careers open to Educated Women. Revised, Rewritten, and Supplemented in the present Issue. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LTD.,
25, High Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

BLACKWOODS' BOOKS.

A GOOD SELECTION OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

LIFE OF FIELD-MARSHAL SIR NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, G.C.B.

By G. W. FORREST, C.I.E., Author of 'History of the Indian Mutiny,' &c. 18s. net.

"The story of Neville Chamberlain's life forms an epitome of the military history of India for more than forty stirring years, and a splendid tale it is... It would be difficult to find a more judicious and sympathetic biographer than Mr. Forrest... From first to last his pages are alive with interest."—Times.

"Mr. Forrest has proved himself a thoroughly competent biographer, and has produced an interesting record of a full, honourable, and useful life."—Scotsman.

SOME MEMORIES OF MY SPARE TIME, 1856-1885.

By General the Right Hon. Sir HENRY BRACKENBURY, G.C.B. 5s. net.

FIFTY YEARS OF IT.

The Experiences and Struggles of a Volunteer of 1859.

By the Right Hon. LORD KINGSBURGH, K.C.B. (J. H. A. Macdonald), Lord Justice-Clerk.

10s. 6d. net.

"Full of good things."—Daily News. "Should be read by every Territorial."—Daily Mail. "Admirable."—Scotsman.

THE ENGLISHWOMAN IN INDIA.

By MAUD DIVER, Author of 'Captain Desmond, V.C.' 5s. net.

"Mrs. Diver has given us here a very interesting book... full of puzzles. Still, it is good to have to think about them."—Spectator.

"Gives an excellent idea of the activities of Englishwomen in India."—Birmingham Post.

SIDE TRACKS AND BRIDLE PATHS.

By LIONEL JAMES ("The Intelligence Officer"), Author of 'On the Heels of De Wet.'

Illustrated. 6s.

"Characterized by the masterly grasp of the subject, the same terse and forceful expression of the author's meaning, that went so far to give his earlier books the success they achieved."—Scotsman.

THE PLACE OF HISTORY IN EDUCATION.

By J. W. ALLEN, formerly Brakenbury Exhibitioner, Balliol College, Oxford, Hulsean Professor of Modern History at Bedford College, University of London. 5s. net.

"A very remarkable book. It is one which any student of history would do well to read, and which every teacher of history should as a matter of duty read."—Morning Post.

ESSAYS ON THE BIBLE.

By the Rev. A. W. MOMERIE, M.A. D.Sc. LL.D., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Edited by Mrs. MOMERIE. 3s. 6d. net.

6/- NOVELS. 6/-

CECILIA KIRKHAM'S SON.

By Mrs. KENNETH COMBE.

"A clever and true study; an interesting and very readable book."—Daily Chronicle.

"A charming love story, combined with the interest of a detective tale."—Manchester Guardian.

"This clever story."—Spectator.

"A book of real feeling."—Observer.

"A sound piece of work."—Times.

"Well thought out."—Daily Telegraph.

WHERE EVERY PROSPECT PLEASES.

By EDMUND SELLAR.

All who read this author's 'Glentyre' should read this book which Mr. Sellar has just produced—a story of Ceylon.

"This lively book, which can be safely recommended as an entertaining companion... ripples over with fun."

"An entertaining story."—Times. Scotsman.

MARCIA: a Transcript from Life.

By MARGUERITE CURTIS, Author of 'The Bias.'

"A real transcript, written with unfailing insight, skill, and sympathy."—Times.

"Cannot but prove interesting reading."—Scotsman.

THE GREEN CURVE.

By OLE-LUK-OIE.

Depicts the realities of war.

Press Opinions:—"Powerful," "Vivid," "Remarkable," "Forceful and sincere," "Entertaining," "Convincing," "Fascinating," "Most readable," and "Notably good."

THE AFFAIR ON THE BRIDGE.

By MORGAN-DE-GROOT, Author of the 'Bar-Sinister.'

"It is refreshing to come upon a novel at once freshly observed in the actualities of Dutch life, and strong in a healthy imaginative interest of making love and making fortunes."—Scotsman.

THE SILVER SPOON.

By G. H. STEVENSON.

"The novel gets at human nature and everyday circumstance, and all who read it will wish that the same pen will ere long turn out something equally good."

Dundee Advertiser.

THE BEST method of teaching a child is by appealing to its imagination.
THE BEST book of "English History" is therefore

READ THIS STORIES OF THE ENGLISH.

Told to a Child. By F. 5s. net.

"If history can be given a form likely to make it palatable to young folks, 'F' has succeeded in doing so. It is no exaggeration to say that the book represents not only a masterpiece in literature for children, but a work of no slight value for the national good. It leads the child on and up through British history to a realization of what citizenship of such an Empire as Britain means. 'Stories of the English' should find a welcome in every household, and when the season of gifts comes round it should not be forgotten. Fifty striking illustrations conclude with the famous picture of Napoleon on board the Bellerophon."—Scotsman.

BLACKWOODS'

Shilling Editions of Popular Novels.

BOUND IN CLOTH. WITH COLOURED ILLUSTRATION ON WRAPPER.

THE DAFT DAYS. By NEIL MUNRO, Author of 'John Splendid,' 'The Lost Pibroch,' &c.

CAPTAIN DESMOND, V.C. By MAUD DIVER, Author of 'The Great Amulet.'

THE LUNATIC AT LARGE. By J. STORER CLOUSTON, Author of 'Count Bunker,' &c.

THE GREAT AMULET. By MAUD DIVER, Author of 'Captain Desmond, V.C.'

IN PREPARATION.

THE MOON OF BATH. By BETH ELLIS, Author of 'Barbara Winslow, Rebel,' &c.

"The most brilliant of all the magazines."

READ

BLACKWOODS' MAGAZINE

FOR JUNE.

"I wonder whether readers are appreciating as they should the extraordinary life and vigour with which 'Blackwoods' Magazine' is being conducted. It is like no other magazine in the world in its range of subject and interest."

CLAUDIUS CLEAR.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4261.

SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(University of London).

A Performance of
SOPHOCLES' 'ELECTRA'
(in Greek)

will be given at

THE ROYAL COURT THEATRE, SLOANE SQUARE,

on

JULY 15 and 16, at 8.30 P.M.,

and

JULY 17, at 3 P.M.,

In Celebration of the Sixtieth Year of the College and

In Aid of the Building and Endowment Fund.

The Play will be produced under the direction of Mr. G. R. FOSS.

The Music has been specially composed by

Mr. GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

An Acting Version of the Play, with a Translation by the late Prof. Lewis Campbell, is now on sale at the College, and will be sold in the Theatre at each performance.

Prices of Admission: Boxes, 3l. 3s. and 2l. 2s.; Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Dress Circle, 7s. 6d.; Upper Circle, 4s.; Pit, 2s. 6d. (unnumbered); Gallery, 1s. (unnumbered).

Tickets and further particulars may be obtained from Miss STRUDWICK, Secretary, Greek Play Committee, Bedford College, York Place, Baker Street, W.

Exhibitions.

FORD MADOX BROWN EXHIBITION.

Collected Works of FORD MADOX BROWN.

Open 10 till 6. Admission One Shilling.

THE LEICESTER GALLERIES, LEICESTER SQUARE.

ZORN ETCHINGS EXHIBITION.

Now Open at

MR. R. GUTEKUNST'S, 16, King Street, St. James's, S.W.

10-6 daily. Saturdays, 10-2. Admission 1s.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S

SUMMER EXHIBITION OF PORTRAITS AND LANDSCAPES by EARLY BRITISH and FOREIGN MASTERS is NOW OPEN.

SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King Street, St. James's.

Educational.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL,

PADDINGTON, W.

(University of London.)

The WINTER SESSION will BEGIN on OCTOBER 1. The Medical School occupies an exceptional position in the West-End of London, and has a good Athletic Ground (eight acres) within easy reach.

The ENTIRE MEDICAL CURRICULUM is provided for the Degrees of the Universities, the Diplomas of M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., and the Government Medical Services.

SIX ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS in Natural Science, value 145l. to 25l., will be competed for on SEPTEMBER 20-22.

Illustrated Handbook on application to THE DEAN.

TUDOR HALL SCHOOL.

CHISLEHURST, KENT.

(Formerly for 50 years at Forest Hill, S.E.)

Principal—Miss MARGARET WORTERS.

Advanced Modern Education for the Daughters of Gentlemen.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.

Preparation for Universities and Professions.

Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or

TUTORS in England or Abroad

are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to

MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

EDUCATION (choice of Schools and Tutors

Gratis). Prospectuses of English and Continental Schools, and of successful Army, Civil Service, and University Tutors, sent (free of charge) on receipt of requirements by GRIFFITHS, SMITH, POWELL & SMITH, School Agents (established 1833), 34, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

Situations Vacant.

UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW.

CHAIR OF MATHEMATICS.

The CHAIR of MATHEMATICS will be VACANT by the resignation of Prof. JACK on SEPTEMBER 30 NEXT. The University Court will proceed during the summer to the appointment of his successor. Information respecting the duties and conditions of the Office may be obtained on application to the undersigned.

ALAN E. CLAPPERTON, Secretary of University Court, University of Glasgow, June, 1909.

THE UNIVERSITY OF SHEFFIELD.

APPOINTMENT OF LECTURER IN LATIN.

The COUNCIL are about to appoint a LECTURER IN LATIN. Salary 160l. per annum.

Applications must be sent in by JULY 1. Further particulars may be obtained from

W. M. GIBBONS, Registrar.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF DUDLEY.

DUDLEY DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

SENIOR LECTURER (MAN) WANTED for MIDDLE of SEPTEMBER NEXT. Must possess Degree from some British University and practical and theoretical knowledge of Educational Method. Salary 180l. to 220l. Also JUNIOR LECTURER (MAN) for Mathematics and Science. Salary 150l. to 180l., and JUNIOR LECTURER (WOMAN) for History and French. Salary 120l. to 150l. All should be able to assist in general subjects of Training College Curriculum.

Forms of Application (on receipt of a stamped addressed foolscap envelope) may be obtained from the undersigned, and must be returned, with envelope endorsed "Training College," not later than

JUNE 28.

Education Offices, Dudley.

J. M. WYNNE,

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, 43 and 45, Harley Street,

London, W.—The PROFESSORSHIPS OF CLASSICS and of GEOGRAPHY will fall VACANT at the END OF THIS TERM.—For further information apply to Miss CLEMENTSON, at the College.

HARTLEY UNIVERSITY COLLEGE,

SOUTHAMPTON.

Principal—S. W. RICHARDSON, D.Sc. M.A.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invite applications for the appointment of a LADY LECTURER in EDUCATION. Commencing Salary 150l. per annum.

Applications, giving particulars of age, training, qualifications, and experience, with copies of three recent Testimonials, must be sent to THE PRINCIPAL on or before JULY 3, 1909.

Further particulars may be obtained upon application to THE REGISTRAR.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

GOLDSMITHS' COLLEGE.

SCIENCE DEPARTMENT.

There will be a VACANCY for a LECTURER in CHEMISTRY in this DEPARTMENT in SEPTEMBER NEXT. The Lecturer will have entire charge of the Chemistry Section. His attainments must be such as to ensure his immediate "recognition" by the Senate as a Teacher of the University.

The Salary will be not less than 300l. nor more than 350l. a year, depending on the attainments and experience of the Person selected for appointment.

Further particulars can be obtained from THE WARDEN, Goldsmiths' College, New Cross, S.E., by whom actual applications for the post should be received not later than THURSDAY, July 1.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL is about to appoint a JUNIOR ASSISTANT LECTURER in French. Detailed conditions may be obtained from THE REGISTRAR.

ESSEX EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

COLCHESTER DISTRICT SUB-COMMITTEE.

HEAD MASTER OF COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL

(BOYS AND GIRLS) AT HARWICH.

WANTED, a fully qualified HEAD MASTER for the NEW COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND GIRLS AT HARWICH.

The Gentleman appointed must be a Graduate of one of the Universities of the United Kingdom.

SALARY 250l. per annum, rising by annual increments of 20l. each to 350l. per annum, with a Capitation Grant of 1l. in addition on the first Fifty Paying Scholars and 10s. for each paying Scholar after that number. Applications must be made on Forms, which will be supplied by me, and must be sent in not later than JULY 3, 1909, to me, the undersigned.

J. H. NICHOLAS, Secretary.

County Offices, Chelmsford, June 21, 1909.

PORTSMOUTH EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

MUNICIPAL SCHOOL OF ART.

APPOINTMENT OF A TEACHER OF MODELLING

AND WOOD CARVING.

A TEACHER OF MODELLING and WOOD CARVING will be REQUIRED in SEPTEMBER NEXT. He must be able to teach Figure Modelling in the Round, Modelling Design, Casting (Waste Moulds), and the Application of Design to Wood Carving, in addition to Practical Work in the Craft.

The commencing Salary will be at the rate of 85l. to 90l. per annum, according to qualifications.

The Candidate appointed will be required to devote about Twenty-one Hours Weekly to the Work of the School (about half this time being required in the Evening Classes). He may devote the remainder of his time to Private Study or Professional Work, other than Teaching.

Forms of Application and particulars of appointment will be sent on receipt of a stamped addressed foolscap envelope.

Applications should be forwarded not later than JULY 7, addressed to THE SECRETARY, Offices for Higher Education, The Municipal College, Portsmouth.

June, 1909.

WOODHOUSE DUAL SECONDARY SCHOOL.

The GOVERNORS of the above DUAL SECONDARY SCHOOL will require, at the BEGINNING of SEPTEMBER NEXT, the services of the following Teachers:—

(a) A SENIOR MISTRESS, with strong qualifications in English Literature, or English History, or Modern Languages. A Degree or its equivalent, previous High School experience, are essential. The person appointed will, under the Head Master, be responsible for the general supervision of the Girls in attendance at the School. Commencing Salary 175l. per annum.

(b) An ASSISTANT MASTER, offering Mathematics and Science. A Degree or its equivalent, previous Secondary School experience, and the possession of a Teaching Diploma will be an advantage. Commencing Salary 150l. per annum.

Forms of Application, which must be returned, with copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, not later than JULY 10 next, may be had from Mr. S. ABSON, Secretary to Governors, Education Offices, Woodhouse, near Sheffield.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

THE ATHENÆUM is published on FRIDAY AFTERNOON at 2 o'clock.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

VISITING TEACHER OF ANATOMY.

(a) The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the post of MALE VISITING TEACHER OF ANATOMY, TIME STUDY, &c., at the L.C.C. WESTMINSTER TECHNICAL INSTITUTE, Vincent Square, S.W., for Three Attendances a Week at a Fee of 12s. 6d. an Attendance of about Three Hours.

Applications (see below) must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on SATURDAY, July 3, 1909.

SCIENCE MASTER.

(b) The COUNCIL invites applications for the post of SCIENCE MASTER at the L.C.C. SCHOOL OF BUILDING, Ferndale Road, Brixton, S.W., at a Salary of 150l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 200l. The appointed Candidate will be required to give his whole time to the duties of the Office. Applications (see below) must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on SATURDAY, July 3, 1909.

EXAMINERS.

(c) The COUNCIL also invites applications for inclusion in its panel of Examiners in the following subjects:—

English, French, German, Greek, Latin, Geography, History, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Workshop Arithmetic.

Botany, Elementary Experimental Science, General Elementary Science.

Drawing (Freehand and Model), and Elementary Design, Needlework.

Building Construction, Casting and Moulding, Electrical Instrument Maker, French Polishing, Ladies' Tailoring, Land Surveying, Pattern Making, Quantity Surveying, Sanitary Engineering, Smithing, Upholstery.

Applications (see below) must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on MONDAY, July 19, 1909.

Applications should be made on the Official Forms, to be obtained, together with particulars of the appointments, from THE EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned by the time specified, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date. All communications on the subject of appointment (a and b) must be marked "T. 1," and of appointment (c) "G," and a stamped addressed foolscap envelope must be enclosed.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for employment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.

Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., June 23, 1909.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the undermentioned posts:—

THE COUNTY SECONDARY SCHOOL, CLAPHAM—

(I.) ASSISTANT MISTRESS specially qualified in French and German. Salary 120l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l., subject to satisfactory service, to 220l.

(II.) DRAWING MISTRESS, who should also be able and willing to help in English Subjects and Junior Form Work. Salary 160l. a year fixed.

THE COUNTY SECONDARY SCHOOL, KENTISH TOWN—

ASSISTANT (Junior Form) MISTRESS who would also be able to teach some Mathematics or Latin in the Senior Forms. Salary 120l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l., subject to satisfactory service, to 220l.

Candidates for these posts (except the Drawing Mistress) should possess University Degrees or other equivalent qualifications.

The successful Candidates will be required to commence work in SEPTEMBER NEXT.

Applications for the posts of Assistant Mistress should be made on Form H.40, and for the post of Drawing Mistress on Form H.428, to be obtained, together with particulars of the appointments, from the EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned not later than 10 A.M. on MONDAY, July 12, 1909, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date. All communications on the subject must be endorsed "H.4," and must be accompanied by a stamped addressed foolscap envelope. Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for employment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.

Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., June 24, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF DUDLEY.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

PRINCIPAL of TECHNICAL SCHOOL and ORGANIZER of EVENING SCHOOL WORK REQUIRED. He must possess a Science Degree, have had experience in the kind of work desired, and devote his whole time to the duties. Salary 200l. to 250l., according to qualifications and experience.

Applications (on Forms to be obtained from the undersigned on receipt of a stamped addressed foolscap envelope) to be sent in not later than JULY 12, 1909, to J. M. WYNNE, Director of Education, Dudley.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

1. MASTER OF METHOD (Assistant to Principal) REQUIRED, to begin work about SEPTEMBER 21. Must be a Graduate of a British University, with Training College experience. Honours in Classics a recommendation. Salary at the rate of 220l. per annum.

2. MISTRESS OF METHOD, who may be appointed Lady Superintendent, REQUIRED at the same time. Must be a Graduate, with Training College experience, and qualifications in Nature Study and Kindergarten Method. Salary at the rate of 200l. per annum.

Application Forms for the above posts may be had from the undersigned, who will receive applications up to JULY 3.

T. W. BRYERS Education Secretary.

15, John Street Sunderland.

LEICESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.
COUNTY GRAMMAR SCHOOL OF KING EDWARD VII.,
COALVILLE.

The COMMITTEE invite applications for the HEAD-MASTER-SHIP of the above SCHOOL, which will be OPENED in SEPTEMBER NEXT. Accommodation about 175 (Boys and Girls). Salary 350l. per annum. Copies of the Articles of Government may be obtained (price One Shilling each) from the undersigned, to whom applications for the vacant post should be sent not later than WEDNESDAY, July 14.

W. A. BROCKINGTON, Director of Education.
33, Bowling Green Street, Leicester.

LEICESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.
LOUGHBOROUGH TECHNICAL INSTITUTE.

The COMMITTEE invite applications for the following positions in the above INSTITUTE, which will be OPENED in SEPTEMBER NEXT:—

(1) SCIENCE MASTER and PRINCIPAL OF THE INSTITUTE. Salary 225l. per annum.

(2) ART MASTER. Salary 200l. per annum.

Applications should be sent to the undersigned not later than WEDNESDAY, July 14, according to Memorandum to be obtained from the Office, 33, Bowling Green Street, Leicester.

W. A. BROCKINGTON, Director of Education.

MINISTRY OF EDUCATION, EGYPT.

ASSISTANT-MASTERS WANTED for SECONDARY SCHOOLS in CAIRO and ALEXANDRIA, under the Ministry of Education, to teach (1) the English Language and English Subjects, especially History, and (2) Science (Experimental Physics and Chemistry) respectively. To enter on duties OCTOBER 1. About 500 Boys in each School, mostly Mohammedans.

Candidates should not be less than 23 or over 30 years of age, should have a robust constitution, and have taken a University Degree with Honours. They must have experience as Teachers. Preference will be given to Applicants who hold a Diploma in Teaching. Appointment under contract. Salary E.360l. per annum. Length of engagement, two years. Allowance for passage out to Egypt and for return at close of contract. Teaching Hours, on an average, Four Daily, Fridays only excepted. Summer vacation not less than Two Months.

Applications, with full statement of qualifications (School, College, Class of Degree, experience in teaching), and accompanied by Copies only of Testimonials, to be sent, before JULY 10, to J. W. CROW-FOOT, Esq., at Subdenery, Lincoln, to whom Candidates may apply for further information.

THE CITY OF LONDON COLLEGE,
WHITE STREET, MOORFIELDS, E.C.

The GOVERNING BODY require for the DAY SCHOOL TWO TEACHERS (Men or Women). One to teach FRENCH and GERMAN, the other ENGLISH and MODERN HISTORY. Preference will be given to Candidates possessing a University Degree or its equivalent.

The Language Teacher must possess a proper knowledge of the Spoken and Written Languages, and of modern methods of teaching them.

Candidates must be prepared to give their whole time to the work of the School.

Commencing Salary 150l. a year. Applications must reach the undersigned on or before THURSDAY, July 1, 1909.

DAVID SAVAGE, Secretary.

HANLEY EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

MUNICIPAL SECONDARY SCHOOL.

WANTED, on SEPTEMBER 7, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS, to teach Mathematics to the Girls. Good qualifications in the subject and teaching experience are essential.

Commencing Salary 100l. to 120l. (dependent upon the above-named requirements).

Forms of Application may be obtained from, and should be returned as early as possible to, the undersigned.

JOHN HODDER, Secretary.

Town Hall, Hanley.

COUNTY OF SOUTHAMPTON.

WINCHESTER COUNTY SCHOOL.

WANTED, for SEPTEMBER, non-resident MISTRESS. Degree and Teacher's Diploma essential. Principal Subjects, Mathematics and Class Singing. Salary 100l.—Application to be made on Forms to be obtained from THE DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION, The Castle, Winchester, and to be returned to THE HEAD MISTRESS, County School, Winchester, not later than JULY 12.

BATLEY GIRLS' GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

WANTED for SEPTEMBER, a FORM MISTRESS to teach chiefly French and Elementary Mathematics. A Degree and residence abroad essential. Drawing desirable. Commencing Salary 100l. to 110l., according to qualifications and experience. Application Forms may be obtained from

G. R. H. DANBY, M.A. (Oxon), Sec. and Director.
Education Offices, Batley, June 21, 1909.

TYLDESLEY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

CARNEGIE FREE LIBRARY.

The above COUNCIL invite applications for the appointment of LIBRARIAN, at a commencing Salary of 90l. per annum.

Applications, stating age, experience, &c., together with copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, to be sent to the undersigned on or before SATURDAY, July 3, 1909.

By Order,

W. J. MATTHEWS, Clerk to the Council.

June 21, 1909.

WANTED, SECRETARY and ORGANIZER for well-known CHARITY. Must be able to address Public Meetings and address Audiences of Children. Rising Salary and unlimited opportunity for good Man.—Write Box D 839, Smith's Advertising Agency, 100, Fleet Street, E.C.

PUBLISHER seeks an energetic ASSISTANT, young and capable, with knowledge of the Publishing Trade.—Apply, stating age, experience, Salary, &c., to Box 1597, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Situations Wanted.

TO PUBLISHERS.—Advertiser, fully experienced, OPEN TO ENGAGEMENT as MANAGER, or in other position in any Department—Reading, Manufacturing, or Selling—where responsibility and experience are required.—Box 1605, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PARISIAN LADY, of the University of Paris, Professor of Literature, good Musician, desires a HOLIDAY ENGAGEMENT. Would travel. Highest references from Paris, London, Amsterdam.—Write M. B., 51, Rue Decamps, Paris.

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN with best Literary, Architectural and Pecuniary training, Matriculated London University, Probationer Royal Institute British Architects, desires POSITION of PRIVATE SECRETARY in ENGLAND. Type-writing and Shorthand if desired. Would drive Private Motor. Salary 150l. Good recommendations.—Box 1599, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

THE late Acting-Secretary of the Aborigines Protection Society, consequent upon its Amalgamation with another Society, seeks a SIMILAR APPOINTMENT, or position as Private Secretary. Highest references.—A. J. G. BRYANT, 240, White Horse Road, Croydon.

AUTHOR and SECRETARY seeks RE-ENGAGEMENT.—Correspondence, Translations, Engravings, Cataloguing, &c. Two years and half with leading Collector and M.P. Mezzotints a speciality. Highest references.—Box 1606, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.

Miscellaneous.

TRANSLATION, Research, Indexing, Articles, or other Literary Work. Classics, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese. Varied experience. Moderate Terms.—Miss SELBY, 30, Northumberland Place, Bayswater.

REGINALD GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Cantab., undertakes GENEALOGICAL and RESEARCH WORK. Three years' experience in Ulster's Office, Dublin. Highest references. Terms moderate.—3, Chalonier Street, West Kensington.

RESEARCH WORK at the British Museum or elsewhere undertaken. Translations, French and German. Experienced.—Miss KENNEDY, 54, Grove End Road, London, N.W.

A VERY interesting Black and - White KENTISH MANOR HOUSE, Sixteenth Century, with large Hall and great Fireplace, and antique Furniture, Tapestry, and Portraits, TO BE LET, for Four to Six Winter Months. Close to Main Line Station, 1½ hours London. Interesting Garden, with giant Elms and Ornamental Water. Four to Five Guineas per Week to reliable Tenants.—Apply F.S.A., Box 1604, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Authors' Agents.

TO AUTHORS. Serials and Short Stories wanted, also Humorous Sketches. NORTHERN NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE, KENDAL.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.

The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHESE, 24, Paternoster Row.

Printers.

FAMILY RECORDS, PEDIGREES, MEMOIRS, &c., PRINTED under Expert Supervision, and Searches made where MS. is incomplete. Write for Estimates and all Particulars.—GERIARDS, LTD. (The Westminster Press), Producers of Printing of Distinction, at 411A, Harrow Road, London, W.

Sales by Auction.

The Rashleigh Collection of Coins.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 28, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the RASHLEIGH COLLECTION OF COINS, the Property of EVELYN W. RASHLEIGH, Esq., Stoketon, Saltash, Cornwall.

May be viewed. Illustrated Catalogues may be had, price 2s. 6d. each.

Engravings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 28, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS (Framed and in the Portfolio), comprising Arundel Society Publications—Mezzotint and other Portraits after Sir J. Reynolds, J. Hoppner, Sir T. Lawrence, L. F. Abbott, R. Cosway, G. Romney, Sir G. Kneller, Sir P. Lely, and others—Fancy Subjects of the English School, some printed in Colours—Sporting Prints in Colours—and a few Drawings and Oil Paintings.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE, will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, July 1, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including the LIBRARY of the late BENJAMIN HICKLIN, Esq., J.P., and other Properties, comprising Works on Natural History and Sport—Publications of Learned Societies—Works of Standard English and French Authors—Poetry and Drama—Travel—Biography—History, &c.—Selator and Thomas, Book of Antelopes—Lafontaine's Fables, illustrated by Ondry, Large Paper—Editions de Luxe of the Works of Dickens and Thackeray—Manning and Bray's Surrey—Dugdale's Monasticon, 1846—Walton's Complete Angler, 1664—Ackermann's Cambridge—Milton's Paradise Regained, First Edition—"Breeches" Bible, First Edition, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A valuable Collection of Japanese Colour Prints of the best period, the Property of FRITS HARTVIGSON, Esq., of Hertford Lodge, Albert Bridge, S.W.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, July 2, at 1 o'clock precisely, a valuable COLLECTION of JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS of the Best Period, all framed in polished oak, with sunk mounts, the Property of FRITS HARTVIGSON, Esq., of Hertford Lodge, Albert Bridge, S.W.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Hazlitt Collection of Coins.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, July 5, and Four Following Days, and on MONDAY, July 12, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable COLLECTION of GREEK, ROMAN, ORIENTAL, CONTINENTAL and FOREIGN and BRITISH and COLONIAL COINS, in Gold, Electrum, Silver, Bronze, &c., consisting chiefly of choice Specimens in preservation and artistic merit found during the last thirty years by W. C. HAZLITT, Esq., of Barnes Common, Surrey.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had. Illustrated copies price 2s. 6d. each.

The Library of the late Dr. FRANCIS ELGAR.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, July 8, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY of the late Dr. FRANCIS ELGAR, comprising a Collection of rare Works connected with Shipping, Navigation, and the Navy—First and Collected Editions of Modern Authors, and Standard Works in the various Branches of Literature; also ORIENTAL BOOKS AND MANUSCRIPTS, the Property of the late A. C. KAY, Esq., M.K.A.S., and other Oriental Scholars.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

An extensive Collection of English and Foreign Books—Works on Ornithology, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 30, and THURSDAY, July 1, at 1 o'clock, an extensive COLLECTION of ENGLISH and FOREIGN BOOKS, including fine copies of Gould's Birds of Europe, 5 vols., the Birds of Asia, 7 vols., and the Mammals of Australia, 3 vols., morocco—the Ornithological Writings of Hewitson, Seebohm, Stevenson, Lilford, Hume, Wyatt, Harting, Dixon, &c., some extra illustrated, and other Books on Natural History—Ray Society's Publications, 62 vols.—the Historical Works of Green, Gardiner, Prescott, Napier, Kingslake, and others—Modern German and French Works on Classical Antiquity and Roman Law, History, Philosophy, and Divinity, chiefly bound in half morocco—the Huth Library Catalogue, 5 vols.—Cokayne's Complete Peerage, 8 vols.—the Vale Press Shakespeare, 39 vols.—a few Books in Old English Literature—Topographical Works, including Shaw's History of Staffordshire, 2 vols.—Musée Français, &c., 6 vols., and other Folio Illustrated Books.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Valuable Law Books—Office Furniture—Engravings, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on FRIDAY, July 2, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE LAW BOOKS, including the LIBRARY of a BARRISTER (retiring from Practice), comprising a fine Set of the Law Reports from the commencement in 1865 to 1909, fully noted up, 370 vols., half calf—another Set from 1865 to 1903—Law Journal Reports from the commencement in 1822 to 1865—Early Reports in Equity and Common Law—the English Reports: House of Lords, 11 vols.—a Selection of Modern Text-Books, &c.; also Mahogany Bookcases—Engravings, &c.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

The Library collected by Dr. RICHARD WATSON, Bishop of Llandaff, during the later years of the Eighteenth Century, and now removed from Calgarth Park, Westmorland.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., EARLY IN JULY, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising a Collection of Curious and Early Works on Alchemy, Chemistry, Metallurgy, Mathematics, Pharmacy, Agriculture, &c.—Watson's History of Halifax, with fore-edge painting, and other Topographical and Antiquarian Books—a fine Copy of the rare Complutensian Polyglot Bible, 6 vols., 1514-17—the First Greek Bible, Venice, 1539—Folio Editions of the Fathers; an extensive Collection of Historical, Political, and Economic Tracts and Pamphlets—Houbraeken's Heads—Hayley's Life of Romney—Old Novels and Poetry, in boards or original calf bindings.

Catalogues are preparing.

The Library of the late Dr. THOMAS GOUGH (removed from Westmorland).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., EARLY IN JULY, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising Parkinson's Paradisi in Sole, 1656, and Theatre of Plants, 1640—Gerarde's Herbal, 1597—Curtis's Flora Londinensis, 2 vols.—Richardson's Fauna Boreali Americana, 2 vols., and other Natural History Books—Meyrick's Ancient Armour, coloured copy, 3 vols.—Books in Old English Literature—Early Works on Physics and Mathematics, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely.

On MONDAY, June 28, TWO SMALL COLLECTIONS of OBJECTS OF ART AND VERTU, the Property of GENTLEMEN.

On MONDAY, June 28 (at 2 o'clock), upwards of EIGHT HUNDRED DOZENS of FINE WINES.

On TUESDAY, June 29, MODERN ETCHINGS and ENGRAVINGS.

On WEDNESDAY, June 30, OLD ENGLISH SILVER PLATE of the late Mrs. C. I. HANBURY and others.

On THURSDAY, July 1, PORCELAIN, the Property of a GENTLEMAN, and PORCELAIN, DECORATIVE FURNITURE, and TAPESTRY from various sources.

On FRIDAY, July 2, important PICTURES by OLD MASTERS and WORKS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

On FRIDAY, July 9, the highly important COLLECTION of ANCIENT and MODERN PICTURES and WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS of Sir W. CUTHBERT QUILTER, Bart., who has disposed of his House and Picture-Gallery, 74, South Audley Street, W.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., EARLY IN JULY, VALUABLE BOOKS, including a Library removed from Tunbridge Wells and other Properties, comprising Library Editions of Standard Authors in fine Bindings—Works on Natural History, including a Set of Loddige's Botanical Cabinet, Large Paper—County Histories—Books with Coloured Plates, illustrated by Rowlandson and Cruikshank, including Syntax's Three Tours, The Dance of Life and Death, Poetical Sketches of Scarborough (remarkably fine copy in boards, uncut) and others of the Series—Ackermann's Oxford and Cambridge Universities—Catlin's North American Indian Portfolio—Howitt's Oriental Field Sports—Harris's Game and Wild Animals of South Africa, 1840—Repton's Landscape Gardening—a Collection of Old Deeds, mostly relating to Manors in Kent, from the Library of the late Robert Hovenden, Esq., the Archaeologist—Book Plates, Autograph Letters, &c.

Catalogues in preparation.

[Classified Advertisements continued on p. 770.]

HARPER & BROTHERS.

A NEW VOLUME BY MARK TWAIN.

Is Shakespeare Dead?

Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
A serious book full of humour. In the guise of fun, it is a real contribution to the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy. [Third Impression.
"By a man whose translucent common sense is second only to his rich and perennial gift of humour."—Daily Mail.

A Nice Pair.

By Henry J. Barker, Author of 'Merry Moments.' 3s. 6d.
"Full of quaint humour, which, compared to the forced effects of many modern stories, is wholly delightful." Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

The Rubaiyat of Bridge.

Illustrated. 2s. net.
By Carolyn Wells, Author of 'Rubaiyat of a Motor Car.'
"Irresistible—so apt, so bright, so smartly to the point."—Daily Chronicle. [Second Impression.

NEW 6/- FICTION.

The Inner Shrine.

Illustrated. Anonymous.
"That it is from a practised hand is perfectly obvious—notable for an assured touch and competent handling. Characters admirably and attractively individualized—always direct and distinguished."—Liverpool Courier. [Fourth Impression.

Katrine.

Illustrated. By Elinor Macartney Lane.
"The author of 'Nancy Stair' has not lost her art—refreshing and delightful."—Globe.
"Full of imagination and charm. Katrine's wanderings and misfortunes have left but little mark on her innate beauty and simplicity."—Westminster Gazette. [Fourth Impression.

Peter, Peter.

Illustrated. By M. R. Warren.
A charming story of two young people revelling in rustic poverty.

The Lady in the White Veil.

Illustrated. Rose C. O'Neill.
"Cleverly written—certainly ingenious. It outruns the most breathless of farces."—Daily Chronicle.

HARPER'S LIBRARY OF LIVING THOUGHT.

Per volume: cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

Latest Issues:

The Life of the Universe.

Illustrated. By Prof. Svante Arrhenius.
2 vols. Author of 'Worlds in the Making.'
"For those who desire to obtain an adequate conception of the various theories of man's origin from the earliest times to the present day, we can thoroughly recommend these volumes. The information he affords is both accurate and useful, and he has many most suggestive remarks to offer."—Globe.

The Ether of Space.

Illustrated. By Sir Oliver Lodge.
"This handy and fascinating volume opens up new views into the nature of the universe. Precise and lucid, it summarizes our knowledge of the all-pervading substance which fills all space and penetrates all matter—the substratum of matter itself."—Birmingham Post.

The Transmigration of Souls.

By Prof. D. A. Bertholet.
A concise account of the belief in metempsychosis traceable in ancient and modern history. [Immediately.

Jesus or Paul?

By Prof. Arnold Meyer.
The author here shows that although it was Jesus who led mankind to the intimate communion with God as a Father, it was mainly St. Paul who founded that form of Christianity which, though embarrassing in many ways to-day, alone proved capable of spreading the teaching of Jesus. [Immediately.

Please write for a descriptive leaflet of volumes issued and forthcoming.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR JULY.

Contributions by JACK LONDON, MARJORIE BOWEN, ALICE BROWN, NORMAN DUNCAN, W. D. HOWELLS, &c.

The Great Wall of China. By W. E. GEIL.

The Mermaid Club. By EDMUND GOSSE.

The Fear of Death. By Dr. E. L. KEYES.

Seven Complete Stories and Sixty Illustrations.

HARPER & BROTHERS, 45, Albemarle Street, London, W.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Story of the British Antarctic Expedition,

1907-1909, will be told by LIEUTENANT SHACKLETON, M.V.O., and will be published in two Volumes in November. MR. HEINEMANN begs to announce that there will be issued, simultaneously with the Ordinary Edition of this work, an AUTOGRAPH EDITION DE LUXE, limited to 350 Numbered Copies, price Ten Guineas net. Each copy of this Edition will be signed by Lieutenant Shackleton and by every Member of the Expedition.

This unique feature will certainly give this Edition an exceptional and permanent value. Orders will be booked as received, and under no circumstances will the number of 350 be exceeded.

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

TOURIST SEASON, 1909.

JUST PUBLISHED.

STANFORD'S CATALOGUE OF MAPS AND BOOKS FOR TOURISTS giving details of all the latest and best Maps and Guide Books, irrespective of Publisher, with Index Maps of British and Foreign Government Surveys (and much other information indispensable to Tourists).

GRATIS ON APPLICATION.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOKS FOR TRAVELLERS.
MURRAY'S HANDBOOK FOR IRELAND.

SEVENTH EDITION, thoroughly Revised throughout.
Edited by JOHN COOKE, M.A.
43 Maps and Plans. 645 pages, crown 8vo, 9s.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK FOR SCOTLAND.

EIGHTH EDITION, Remodelled, Enlarged, and thoroughly Revised.
Edited by SCOTT MONCRIEFF PENNEY, M.A.
57 Maps and Plans. 590 pp. (thin paper), crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK FOR SWITZERLAND
NINETEENTH EDITION, Remodelled and thoroughly Revised.

With 34 Maps and Plans. 664 pp. (thin paper), crown 8vo, 10s.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK OF TRAVEL-TALK.

Being a Collection of Questions, Phrases, and Vocabularies in English, French, German, and Italian.

TWENTIETH EDITION, Revised, Augmented, and Brought up to Date, with New Introductory Section on Pronunciation. Size 5 in. by 3½ by ¾ in., cloth, rounded corners, 752 pp., thin paper, 3s. 6d.

Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, gratis.

ROME AND THE CAMPAGNA. Seventeenth Edition. 10s.
EGYPT AND THE SUDAN. Eleventh Edition. 14s.
FRANCE. Part II. Eighteenth Edition. 7s. 6d.
DENMARK AND ICELAND. Sixth Edition. 7s. 6d.
NORWAY. Ninth Edition. 7s. 6d.
SOUTH GERMANY AND AUSTRIA. Part I. Fifteenth Edition. 7s. 6d.
SOUTH GERMANY AND AUSTRIA. Part II. Fifteenth Edition. 6s.
SPAIN. In Two Parts. Ninth Edition. 20s.
CENTRAL ITALY AND FLORENCE. Twelfth Edition. 9s.
SOUTH ITALY. Part I. Ninth Edition. 6s.
SOUTH ITALY. Part II. SICILY. Ninth Edition. 6s.
GREECE. Seventh Edition. 20s.
CONSTANTINOPLE. 7s. 6d.
SYRIA AND PALESTINE (The Holy Land). A Revised Edition, largely Rewritten. 18s.
ASIA MINOR. 18s.
NEW ZEALAND. 7s. 6d.
BERKS. Entirely Rewritten. 6s.
BUCKS. Revised Edition. 6s.
DERBY, NOTTS, LEICESTER, AND STAFFORD. Third Edition. 9s.
HAMPSHIRE. Fifth Edition. 6s.
HERTS, HUNTINGDON, AND BEDS. 7s. 6d.
ISLE OF WIGHT. Fifth Edition. 2s. 6d.
THE LAKES (WESTMORLAND AND CUMBERLAND). 6s.
LANCASHIRE. 6s.
LINCOLNSHIRE. Second Edition. 7s. 6d.
NORTHAMPTON AND RUTLAND. Second Edition. 7s. 6d.
OXFORDSHIRE. 6s.
SHROPSHIRE AND CHESHIRE. Third Edition. 6s.
SOMERSET. Fifth Edition. 6s.
SURREY. Fifth Edition. 6s.
SUSSEX. Fifth Edition. 6s.
NORTH WALES. Fifth Edition. 6s.
SOUTH WALES. Fourth Edition. 6s.
WARWICKSHIRE. 6s.
WILTS AND DORSET. Fifth Edition. 6s.
YORKSHIRE. Fourth Edition. 14s.
ENGLAND AND WALES. Second Edition. 12s.

London: EDWARD STANFORD,
12, 13, and 14, Long Acre, W.C.
Geographer to His Majesty the King.

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

VOL. IV., CONCLUDING THE WORK.

The Cambridge Natural History.

In 10 vols. fully illustrated, medium 8vo, 17s. net each.

Vol. IV.—CRUSTACEA. By GEOFFREY SMITH, M.A., and the late W. F. R. WELDON, M.A.—TRILOBITES. By HENRY WOODS, M.A.—Introduction to ARACHNIDA and KING-CRABS. By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S.—EURYPTERIDA. By HENRY WOODS, M.A.—SCORPIONS, SPIDERS, MITES, TICKS, &c. By CECIL WARBURTON, M.A.—TARDIGRADA (Water Bears). By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S.—PENTASTOMIDA. By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S.—PYCNOGONIDA. By D'ARCY W. THOMPSON, C.B. M.A.

* * A complete Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, post free on application.

GEM EDITION READY ON TUESDAY.

Saint Paul. A Poem.

By FREDERIC W. H. NYERS. Bound in peltine. Gilt top, fcap. 16mo, 1s. net.

Oxford Lectures on Poetry.

By A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D., formerly Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

COMPLETE IN 1 VOL.

The Golden Treasury

of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language.

Selected and Arranged by F. T. PALGRAVE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Greek Architecture.

By ALLAN MARQUAND, Ph.D. L.H.D., Professor of Art and Archaeology in Princeton University. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. net.
(Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities.)

Australian Socialism.

An Historical Sketch of its Origin and Developments. By A. ST. LEDGER, Senator for the State of Queensland in the Commonwealth Parliament. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

Notes from a Knapsack.

By GEORGE WHERRY, M.A. M.C. Cantab. F.R.C.S. Member of the Alpine Club. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

CLASSICAL SERIES.—New Volume.

Thucydides. Book III.

Edited by E. C. MARCHANT, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Selections from Early American Writers, 1607–1800.

Edited by Prof. WILLIAM B. CAIRNS. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

History of the State of Washington.

By Prof. EDMOND S. NEANY. With Maps and Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. net.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d. Annual Subscription, 16s.

Lieutenant Shackleton and the South Pole.

By Major-General A. W. GREELY.

THE WAITING HAND: a Story of Thirteen at Table. The Second of Three Stories with the same motive, by one of the following Writers, MARGARET DELAND, S. WEIR MITCHELL, OWEN WISTER.

And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s LIST.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

Memoir of George Howard Wilkinson, Bishop of St. Andrews.

By ARTHUR JAMES MASON, D.D. With Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 28s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

"It only remains to thank Dr. Mason very heartily for the book he has given us."—Guardian.

"Dr. Mason deserves to be praised for his admirable work. The narrative is always clear and never dull, and he allows the man of the book to reveal himself."—Athenæum.

A History of the Church of England.

By the Rev. M. W. PATTERSON, Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Oxford, Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Exeter. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

Cloister to Court.

Scenes from the Life of Charlotte of Bourbon, Abbess of Jouarre, Princess of Orange. By FRANCES M. COTTON-WALKER. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. (Inland postage 4d.)

"The book does not contain a dull page throughout. It teems with incident and picturesque narrative. In questions of historic detail it is thoroughly accurate."—Church Gazette.

The Gilds of China, with an Account of the Gild-Merchant, or Co-Hong, of Canton. By HOSEA BALLOU MORSE, sometime Statistical Secretary, Inspector-General of Customs, China. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

The Annual Register: a Review

of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1908. 8vo, 18s. (Inland postage 5d.)

* * Volumes of 'The Annual Register' for the years 1863–1907 can still be had, price 18s. each.

Human Economics.

Books I. and II. Natural Economy and Cosmopolitan Economy. By ARTHUR H. GIBSON, F.C.A. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

Some Papers of Lord Arundell of Wardour, 12th Baron, Count of the Holy Roman Empire, &c. With a Preface by the Dowager LADY ARUNDELL OF WARDOUR. With Portrait. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

Explorers in the New World before and after Columbus, and The Story of the Jesuit Missions of Paraguay. By MARION MCMURROUGH MULHALL, Member of the Roman Arcadia. With pre-Columbian Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

NEW EDITION, REVISED.

Artificial Manures: their Chemical

Selection and Scientific Application to Agriculture. By M. GEORGES VILLE. New Edition, Revised by Sir WILLIAM CROOKES, D.Sc. F.R.S., and JOHN PERCIVAL, M.A., Professor of Agriculture, University College, Reading. With 6 Plates. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

VOLUME FOR 1909.

The Annual Charities Register

and Digest. Being a Classified Register of Charities in or available for the Metropolis, together with a Digest of Information respecting the Legal, Voluntary, and other Means for the Prevention and Relief of Distress and the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor. With an elaborate Index, and an Introduction, 'How to Help Cases of Distress,' by C. S. LOCH, Secretary to the Council of the Charity Organization Society, London. 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

DEDICATED BY GRACIOUS PERMISSION TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

THE STORY OF THE HOUSE-

HOLD CAVALRY, 1661–1902. By Capt. Sir GEORGE ARTHUR, Bart., late Second Life Guards. With Photogravure Portraits and other Illustrations, including 6 Coloured Plates. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo. Édition de Luxe, limited to 40 copies, 10l. 10s. net. Ordinary Edition, 3l. 13s. 6d. net.

"Sir George Arthur has earned the gratitude of all his companions in arms for the manly and spirited fashion in which he has told his stirring story."—Daily Telegraph.

CONTEMPORARY FRANCE.

By GABRIEL HANOTAUX. Volume IV. (1877–1882). Translated from the French. With Portraits. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

This volume completes the monumental work of M. Gabriel Hanotaux, the whole work covering the period from 1870 to 1882.

PLAYS, ACTING AND MUSIC.

A Book of Theory, by ARTHUR SYMONS. Demy 8vo, 6s. net. [Shortly.]

This volume forms part of Mr. Symons's attempt to give concrete expression to a theory or system of æsthetics, of all the arts, and deals mainly with the stage, and secondarily with music.

THE ROMANCE AND MYSTERY OF "WIRELESS" EXPLAINED.

RADIO-TELEGRAPHY. By C. C. F. MONCKTON, M.I.E.E. With 173 Diagrams and Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"A very interesting and valuable book."—Nature.

RADIOACTIVITY AND GEOLOGY.

An Account of the Influence of Radioactive Energy on Terrestrial History. By J. JOLY, M.A. Sc.D. F.R.S., Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"One of the most interesting and valuable geological works that have appeared in recent years."—Glasgow Herald.

STATE INSURANCE. A Social and Industrial Need. By FRANK W. LEWIS. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"His book deals generally, and ably, with the subject—especially with Germany, America, Great Britain, and her Colonies."—Times.

SOME ACROSTIC SIGNATURES

OF FRANCIS BACON, Baron Verulam of Verulam, Viscount St. Alban, together with some others, all of which are now for the first time deciphered and published by WILLIAM STONE BOOTH. Illustrated with Facsimiles and Acrostic Figures. Large 4to, 25s. net.

ENGLISH HERALDIC BOOK

STAMPS. Figured and described by CYRIL DAVENPORT, F.S.A. Illustrations. Super-royal 8vo, 25s. net.

The first book on this subject in English, with about 300 illustrations.

FAMOUS WOMEN OF FLORENCE.

By EDGCUMBE STALEY. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The careers and characters of some of the famous ladies of Florence whose stories illustrate the Renaissance period.

THE BIOGRAPHY OF A SILVER

FOX. By ERNEST THOMPSON SETON. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

"A romance of the realist kind, and the fascinating lore of the woods is accompanied by the most delightful picture of foxes great and small. It makes better reading than many novels of human affairs."—Observer.

A LIST OF

GEORGE MEREDITH'S WORKS

in various Editions will be sent Post Free to any address. The books themselves may be seen at any Bookshop.

THE BEST SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

PRISCILLA AND CHARYBDIS

F. FRANKFORT MOORE.

THE PERJURER

W. E. NORRIS.

THE ACTRESS

LOUISE CLOSSER HALE.

THE KING IN YELLOW

R. W. CHAMBERS.

DRAGON'S BLOOD

H. M. RIDEOUT.

10 ORANGE STREET LONDON W.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE DUKE OF THE ABRUZZI ON RUWENZORI ..	749
THE INNER LIFE OF THE NAVY	750
THE MONGOLS IN RUSSIA	750
NEW NOVELS (The Pools of Silence; The House of Intrigue; A Change in the Cabinet; Marcia; The Silent Rancher; The Gay Paradines; Heartbreak Hill)	751-752
EGYPTOLOGICAL BOOKS	752
SCOTCH HISTORY	753
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Notes by the Way; The Reckoning; Le Congo français; The Bretons at Home; Man's Origin, Destiny, and Duty; Barnes's Dorset Poems; Murray's Handbook of Travel-Talk; The Care of Books)	754-755
OXFORD NOTES; SOME BYRON CRUMBS; CAMBRIDGE NOTES	755-757
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	758
LITERARY GOSSIP	759
SCIENCE—SCOTT'S STUDIES IN FOSSIL BOTANY; RE- SEARCH NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	760-763
FINE ARTS—EARTHWORKS; SCULPTURE AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY; OTHER EXHIBITIONS; THE NATIONAL GALLERY; SALES; GOSSIP; EXHIBI- TIONS	763-766
MUSIC — CHARPENTIER'S 'LOUISE'; HANDEL- MENDELSSOHN FESTIVAL; MISS SMYTH'S 'THE WRECKERS'; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	766-767
DRAMA—M. GUITRY IN 'L' ASSOMMOIR'; THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR; IRISH DRAMA; MR. ST. JOHN HANKIN	767-768
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	768

LITERATURE

Ruwenzori: an Account of the Expedition of H.R.H. Prince Luigi Amedeo of Savoy, Duke of the Abruzzi. By Filippo de Filippi. (Constable & Co.)

OPPORTUNITIES for making great discoveries in Africa rivalling those which, a generation ago, won fame for a Livingstone, a Speke, or a Stanley exist no longer. No doubt there are to be found tracts by rapidly crossing which an explorer of the olden type may win some distinction. Greater service to science, however, can be rendered by an explorer, thoroughly equipped for his task, who devotes the time at his disposal to an area of limited size, than by one who rushes through a region of wider extent, of which he can gain but a superficial knowledge.

The former, evidently, was the view taken by the Duke of the Abruzzi when, in 1906, he organized his expedition to the Ruwenzori, the glittering ice-cap of which had been beheld for the first time in 1888 by H. M. Stanley, who somewhat rashly jumped to the conclusion that he saw before him Ptolemy's Mountains of the Moon. Since Stanley's day the Ruwenzori had been assailed by a whole band of explorers, and among them men well qualified for such an undertaking; but, either from lack of time or owing to unfavourable atmospheric conditions, no great successes had been achieved. The glaciers had, indeed, been reached; Capt. T. E. Behrens had trigonometrically joined several of the summits to the Anglo-German boundary survey; but the credit of having first mapped its glaciers, and ascended its highest peaks, is due to the Duke and his companions.

The Duke was well qualified for the task which he undertook. He had already served his apprenticeship as a mountaineer in the European Alps, had gained further experience in the Himalaya, and achieved a triumph by being the first to ascend Mount Elias in North America. He was, moreover, in the fortunate position of being able to associate with himself a staff of ten Europeans, including Commander W. Cagni as surveyor, Dr. A. Roccati as geologist, Dr. A. Cavalli Molinelli as naturalist, Cavaliere Vittorio Sella as photographer, and four Alpine guides. If to this be added the facilities granted by the British authorities to the princely visitor, and especially the favourable weather which he enjoyed, we need not wonder that he achieved successes which were denied to his predecessors.

The account of this important expedition has been compiled from the journals and notes of the travellers, none of whom "had at his disposal the time requisite" for this task. The story as told by Cav. Filippo de Filippi may lack some of the vividness of a personal narrative, but the reader will only rarely be reminded of this. The translation by Signora Caroline de Filippi is excellent. The illustrations, nearly two hundred in number, from photographs by Cav. Vittorio Sella, take rank with the finest work of the kind: they convey to the mind of the beholder a telling image of some of the most romantic and weird mountain scenery in the world.

The Duke and his party left Mombasa on May 4th. Rail and steam enabled him to reach Entebbe in three days—a journey which not long since would have required at least three months. After a delay of only a week he was able to start at the head of a caravan of 300 men. A march of about two hundred miles brought him to the Mobuku valley, and within sight of the glaciers of Mount Baker, off which blew a cold and biting wind all the more trying on account of the great humidity of the atmosphere. By June 7th he had established a camp at a site known as Bujongolo, by the side of a huge boulder, 600 feet above the valley, and 12,460 feet above the sea.

"Thick dark fog enveloped everything. The camp was soon invaded by mud and water, and a continual drip came down upon the tents from the overhanging rock. Under these conditions it became difficult to kindle a fire, and the only resource was to keep it burning day and night, which required no mean amount of work in feeding it and providing sufficient fuel.... Every time that any one stepped out of the camp he would sink into the mud."

Under such conditions the sojourn at the camp was by no means pleasant. The temperature on one occasion rose to 57°, but at night it never exceeded 34°, whilst relative humidity averaged 90 per cent. The Bakonjo porters, in spite of these drawbacks, showed admirable patience and docility, and were content with a mess of dura flour. The daily visit of a leopard, whose den was situated among the heath, and who liked sheep and stole meat, did not contribute to render this sojourn more pleasant, or even safe. It was only after many days of vain hunting that this daring visitor was caught in a trap.

On June 9th the Duke started on his first mountain trip, and between that date and the 16th of the month he climbed thirteen peaks rising in the midst of glaciers. On the 18th he set foot upon the highest peak of all, where he unfurled the little tricolour flag given by Queen Margherita of Savoy. The Duke and his three Alpine guides

"emerged from the mist into splendid clear sunlight. At their feet lay a sea of fog. An impenetrable layer of light, ashy-white cloud-drifts stretching as far as the eye could reach was drifting rapidly northwestward. From the immense moving surface emerged two fixed points, two pure white peaks, sparkling in the sun with their myriad snow crystals. These were the two extreme summits of the highest peaks. The Duke of the Abruzzi named these summits Margherita and Alexandra, 'in order that under the auspices of these two royal ladies the memory of the two nations may be handed down to posterity—of Italy, whose name was the first to resound on these snows in a shout of victory; and of England, which in its marvellous colonial expansion carries civilization to the slopes of these remote mountains.'"

The results of the Duke's explorations are laid down on a map on a scale of 1:40,000, based upon a triangulation carried out by Com. Cagni. If the reader will compare this map with one of our European Alps on the same scale, he cannot fail to be struck with the comparative insignificance of these renowned "Mountains of the Moon." The six snow-clad groups of the Ruwenzori are confined within an area of less than thirty square miles, of which only four square miles are covered with perpetual ice and snow, whilst the Mer de Glace of Chamonix alone covers sixteen square miles. At some former period the glaciers were no doubt of greater extent, for moraine deposits have been discovered several miles below their present terminals; but at no time can they have exercised an appreciable influence upon the annual floods of the Nile.

The map, which has been compiled at the Hydrographic Office of the Italian Admiralty, hardly does justice to the results achieved by the expedition. Neither meridians nor parallels are indicated upon it; several routes described in the volume are not shown; and the delineation of the ground is an absolute failure, for valleys described as being hemmed in by steep cliffs are shown as being bounded by gentle slopes. The Duke has retained the native names of the valleys, but has rejected the remainder, on account of their uncertainty, and substituted for them the names of Europeans, many of whom had never seen these mountains. Since the Duke's visit the whole of the Ruwenzori region, up to the snow-line, has been surveyed under the direction of Major R. G. T. Bright of the Congo-Uganda Boundary Commission.

Among the appendixes are a paper on Ptolemy's Mountains of the Moon by Prof. Luigi Hugues, and a concise sketch of the geology of the region, with a map, from which we learn that gneiss and hornblende occupy the higher regions. A full account of the botanical and zoological collections made in the course of this important exploration fills a second volume of the original Italian edition, and of this the book under review gives only concise abstracts.

The Inner Life of the Navy. By Lionel Yexley. (Pitman & Sons.)

VERY few men who have served on the lower deck of our men-of-war have been competent to write well and convincingly of their daily lives, so that there was undoubtedly room for such a book as this. Apart from his literary ability, which is considerable, Mr. Yexley is manifestly the right man to undertake the task; not merely because he has lived under the conditions which he describes, for many thousands have done that without finding anything remarkable in them, but because he is of a disposition which seeks for causes where others are content to grumble at effects, and because his record of achievement has shown him to be a reformer of ability and courage. Those who would learn for themselves how the lower deck has discovered a safety valve in the Press will find all the information they can wish for in these pages, and will probably see much to admire in the moderation and loyalty with which the new-found power has been used.

Though the book is in form an autobiography, its real substance is a description of naval routine, discipline, and custom, with special reference to recent and existing abuses, and the steps which have been taken for their removal. There is no need here to follow the author into detail; it will be enough to say that he understands clearly that even the most crying abuses are to be ascribed more frequently to routine and custom than original sin. They are often the legacy of obsolete conditions, and have their roots deep in the almost forgotten past, so that there is real difficulty in deciding the direction in which satisfactory or permanent reform should be sought.

Mr. Yexley's service in the Navy was not in itself remarkable, though he describes his experiences in an interesting and entertaining manner. It fell to his lot to stew in a gunboat in the Persian Gulf, and to chase slave-dhows round Pemba; but this somewhat exceptional fortune made less impression on him than did the unprofitable routine of a smart battleship in the Mediterranean, or the fraudulent stagnation of the old floating depôts, or the monotony and hopelessness of the Coast-guard.

Mr. Yexley's own words will show that his appointment to the Coast-guard marked the turning-point of his career:—

"What struck me forcibly in the early stages of my Coast-guard career was the air of hopelessness that characterized every complaint. Grumble they would, day after day....but every man was too intent on his own promotion, and too fearful of offending the powers that be, to dare anything.... Settle down to a go-to-sleep life I could not, so I sought an outlet for my energies by joining a local debating society with a library attached....I was able to gratify my book hunger by entering on a long study of Naval History. From this I became convinced that sitting on the safety valve, by attempting to stifle any expression of opinion, could only, sooner or later, lead to disaster."

Looked at in this light, Mr. Yexley's subsequent campaign for reform was a logical outcome. It might, indeed, seem to have been inevitable, were we to forget that many other men lived their lives at the same time, under the same conditions, yet did not realize that, if they were to do anything towards bettering the lot of the lower deck as a whole, they must qualify themselves for the task by self-education. With Mr. Yexley self-education seems to have come first, and to have been regarded merely as a sane and pleasant way of employing enforced leisure; the reforming zeal would appear to have grown in proportion as the course of study threw light on present discontents. It would not be in place here to do more than refer to the details of Mr. Yexley's work. He is an unsparing but never a bitter critic of abuses; and the trouble which he has taken to reach the root of the matter enables him in most cases to indicate a line along which reform might well proceed. As for the thorny problem of canteens and victualing, for instance—wherein lay an abuse which, as far back as 1891, was spoken of by Mr. Holman, another lower-deck author, in a little book entitled 'Life in the Royal Navy,' as "a thing that needs looking into and requires speedy redress"—reform has actually followed, almost directly, the course indicated by Mr. Yexley.

The code of morality respected on the lower deck is similar to that which prevails in public schools:—

"A man might offend against any clause of the King's regulations; he might spend the greater part of his time in cells or prison for such offences, but no one would think a scrap less of him, provided he was a good seaman and ready to do his work. But let him be guilty of a mean action towards a shipmate, or violate the code of lower-deck honour, and no mercy was his."

The general principle is illustrated by a particular instance in which "cobbing" was served out as a fit punishment for theft. "Cockroach Derbies" might seem brutal to a moralist; but Mr. Yexley says that he is not moralizing, "only writing about the Navy," and describes how the cockroaches were "mounted" with candle-ends and made to race along the mess-tables. "This sport had two virtues: it killed time and reduced the number of cockroaches." Not unnaturally, too, Mr. Yexley has a good deal to say of the debauchery that used to take place as long as the service considered that there was no need for it to pay heed to Jack's welfare ashore. Some of these yarns are merely amusing. One, for example, tells how a ship's company, combining discipline and lawlessness in a curious but effective manner, wrecked a tavern wherein they had been imposed on by the simple device of double-bottomed pots. To have been sold bad beer at an exorbitant rate would have been no offence; but the fraudulent pots transgressed the code.

Open debauchery was, until recently, common at Mutton Cove or Portsmouth Point when a ship's company was "paid off" after foreign service. "Much," says Mr. Yexley,

"has been written of the wild extravagances and foolish excesses of the old-time sailor during his excursions on shore. Nothing has been written of the callous indifference of past Boards of Admiralty to their responsibilities towards the men."

But that, too, is virtually a thing of the past; indeed, at the present day the custom of commanding officers is not to allow their men ashore in large numbers unless they are satisfied that they will find decent accommodation.

When all allowances have been made, however, the author's conclusion is favourable:—

"There are easier ways of spending life than on the sea. I doubt if, in spite of all its hardships and restrictions, there are happier ways. Robbed of some of the petty annoyances which are the outcome of a pseudo-discipline and not of a sea life, I can imagine no happier, healthier, or more interesting life than one spent in the British Navy."

The Mongols in Russia. By Jeremiah Curtin. (Sampson Low & Co.)

THE recent death of Jeremiah Curtin removed an indefatigable worker in somewhat obscure paths of literature. It is not everybody who has the courage to write about Mongolian and early Russian history. Even the national historian Karamzin despaired of making the Russia of the Middle Ages interesting to the outsider. The battles are like those of the kites and crows spoken of by Milton. Perhaps, however great the enthusiasm of Mr. Curtin, he was hardly competent in these days of advanced scholarship to treat of the Mongolians and the old Russian chronicles. Much knowledge of linguistics is necessary for such an undertaking. Nor do we understand what reasons compelled him to go to the East to make acquaintance with the Russian chronicles, as excellent editions have been published by the Russian Academy and in works issued by the Government. It will be remembered that President Roosevelt wrote in the most enthusiastic manner about Mr. Curtin's earlier book on the Mongolians and Russians; but we are afraid that much of the work seemed to scholars amateurish.

We cannot be sure that the present volume, with the corresponding one entitled 'The Mongols: a History,' will attract many readers, although here and there are interesting pages. Mr. Curtin begins ab initio, and takes his story down to the marriage of Zoë Palaeologa with Ivan III., as graphically described in the Chronicle of Pskov, and the destruction of the independence of Novgorod under the last Posadnitsa, Martha Boretskaya. These chronicles afford ample material for writing a history of early Russia, and few countries can show such a fine catena in the vernacular. Perhaps the Mongolian part of the work will not have much attraction. Mr. Curtin is very careful in working up his material, and naturally Novgorod, the fine old Hanse town of Russia, plays an important part.

The Russians seem to have been fond of chronicle-making. Thus a certain Prince Mstislavski showed Sir Jerome Horsey during the reign of Ivan the Terrible a chronicle which he was keeping of the leading events of the time; and these chronicles extended to the days of Alexis, the father of Peter the Great. Their value as historical records is considerable, but we must not look for beauties of style, just as we must not in our own 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle.' The miscellanea which go under the name of Nestor's Chronicle are more picturesque on account of the many sagas which are embedded in them. We shall not find in Mr. Curtin's book these obscure periods treated scientifically and critically, yet the student of history unacquainted with Old Russian will discover much to reward him.

As this volume is especially devoted to the Mongols in Russia, it is worth noting what influence they left upon the country during their two hundred years' occupation. They seem to have been content with tribute being paid, and the yarlik, or patent, which was given by the Grand Duke. Their influence upon the character of the people was not great, but some of their chief men entered into the Russian aristocracy, especially Boris Godunov. In later times, however, many families have put in claims for being of Tatar descent without any reason, as, for example, the celebrated Rostopchin. At the end of the fifth chapter Mr. Curtin gives an account of the extraordinary prose-poem which tells of the expedition of Igor against the Polovtses. There is also the parallel poem describing the field of woodcocks, 'Kulikovo Pole.' To those not familiar with it the 'Pouchenie' of Vladimir Monomakh will possess much interest, especially as he married Gytha, a daughter of Harold killed at Senlac.

Mr. Curtin has not told us enough about the popular governments of Novgorod and Pskov. From the learned researches of Prof. Serguievich we see that there were the rudiments of civil government in many other Russian towns. The citizens were summoned to the veche, or assembly, by a great bell, and there discussed their affairs. Gradually the despotism of the Ivans was concentrated, and what was originally an insignificant part of Russia came to the front. The Principality of Moscow swallowed the others, its power culminating in Ivan III., who represents Tatarism and Byzantinism. Ivan appears to have been a man of remarkable capacity, and was stirred in his ambition by his Byzantine wife. In reality the beginnings of Russian power seemed to point to the region round Kiev, just as Winchester was originally the capital of England, but was eventually lost in London. It was, however, from Kiev and its district that Russian civilization truly came. We have the High School of Kiev under Peter Mogila, and this was in reality the first Russian university. At Wilno, then under Polish rule, Russian books first began to be printed.

Although they treat of a dull period, the pages of Mr. Curtin are not tedious: he occasionally refreshes us with some of the good old sagas, as in the story of Oleg and his horse. Had his life been spared, he would probably have contributed some useful books on early Russian history, and might have told us of the battles between the archer of the steppe and the denizen of the forest. There are many side-lights also from Lithuanian history.

NEW NOVELS.

The Pools of Silence. By H. de Vere Stacpoole. (Fisher Unwin.)

MR. STACPOOLE advances his reputation as a writer of romance by this brilliant and showy narrative, inspired by indignation at the atrocities recently committed under cover of civilization in the Congo by Belgians.

His hero is an American doctor who accompanies a sportsman named Berselius, with a lust for cruelty, on a hunting expedition in that country. While the American's back is turned, Berselius feasts his eyes on the horrible punishments inflicted on some natives by a Belgian Chef de Poste, who meets with terrible retribution. The book abounds with shocks and surprises, ministering to a simple and ordinary curiosity, but conveyed with much literary skill. Berselius, half-hero, half-devil, is a fascinating character. The book, despite frightful scenes, such as those preceding the death of a cannibal guide, is essentially the outcome of a poetic mind, whose deliverances are characterized, we may add, by an oracular manner reminiscent of Victor Hugo.

The House of Intrigue. By Percy White. (Hurst & Blackett.)

MR. WHITE has the courage of his cynicism. Not a single character in his latest novel—not even the fair "lady's companion" who plays the part of the heroine—can be described as sympathetic. Mrs. Dorrien, an immensely rich old lady, brings together all her expectant relatives in her stately country house, so that she may, in accordance with her late husband's wishes, determine to whom the larger share of her wealth ought to be bequeathed. It is a situation which lends itself readily to Mr. White's sense of humour and lightness of touch. The various types in the group of mercenary relatives are portrayed with unflinching neatness, and their endeavours to outwit the widow's "companion"—an astute young lady scarcely less mercenary and much more resourceful than themselves—are described in the author's most cynical vein. Mrs. Dorrien is encouraged to believe that her dyspeptic dreams—in which her spectral husband is supposed to communicate with her about her testamentary inclinations—are psychic manifestations, and her delusions afford Mr. White an ample opportunity of displaying his skill in ridiculing the foibles and superficialities of the pretentious idle. It is a clever and entertaining book.

A Change in the Cabinet. By Hilaire Belloc. (Methuen & Co.)

THE principal characters introduced in this extravaganza are "Sir T. Charles Repton, Bart., M.V.O., O.M., Warden of the Court of Dowry," on whose temporary attack of speaking the truth in and out of season the tale depends; a popular Prime Minister who is seriously inconvenienced by the candour of the first-mentioned gentleman; and George Mulross Demaine, an incapable person whose connexions secure him a post in the Government. One cannot but contrast the present effort with other satirical works, unhappily, to the present author's disadvantage. A recounting of the effects of such a new disease as veracitis (why did not Mr. Belloc make it catching?) ought, one feels, to have provided the world with a fine novel; but Mr. Belloc confines himself to one vulgar victim, instead of giving us a contrast between the greater and lesser hypocrites, shading off to those whose hypocrisy deceives even themselves. We need hardly assure the reader that here and there are clever passages.

Marcia. By Marguerite Curtis. (Blackwood & Sons.)

IN this novel, which professes to be "a transcript from life," Marcia, the heroine, tells her own story—that of one handicapped by mental instability, and liable to automatic actions on the part of her subconscious self abhorrent to her normal will and conscience. The story of her childhood in an environment of Methodism at once refined and narrow is told with a power and insight that leave a poignant impression of a child's joys and sorrows. The history of her life's tragedy is not devoid of crudeness and redundancy, but is vividly and sincerely written; and the renunciation of an ideal marriage, in which it culminates, is touched with a fine reserve. Marcia is a brave and lovable creature, though she annoys us by repeatedly drawing attention to her own "innate courtesy." The somewhat mannered recurrence of certain other words is noticeable, and the author should pay more attention to style and grammar.

The Silent Rancher. By Gertrude Page. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THE scene of this story is Rhodesia, and the characters include a chameleon and a lizard which chat with one another about a woman with wonderful eyes, who finds a dangerous fascination in Victoria Falls. This woman has a ferocious husband, whom she would have murdered if an accident had not saved her the trouble of doing so. A remarried divorcée and the fiancée of a general who is notorious for his "black harem" are among the other characters. The author holds a brief for such of her sex as brave the tyranny and deceit of unscrupulous men in the lonely places of the world. It is a pity that, although she is qualified by residence to write a convincing novel of Rhodesia, she chooses to expend her talent on a compound of sentimentality and melodrama.

The Gay Paradines. By Mrs. Stephen Batson. (Stanley Paul & Co.)

THE chief interest of Mrs. Batson's new story attaches to the picture which it gives of rustic life in the Down country early in the nineteenth century, and of the mischievous workings of the Poor Law as then exercised. Of these Anne Paradine the youngest member of a distinguished county family, is the victim, since, owing to curious circumstances connected with her birth, she is brought up as a pauper, apprenticed to a farmer, and passes through many vicissitudes before her identity is discovered by her lover, who proves also to be her cousin. The abortive love-story of Anne's brother Charles and Miss Jane Farleigh—abortive because Miss Jane exacted from this scion of a gay house the standard of manners and morality which is observed by "females"—is well handled. The whole plot suffers a little from the action moving too slowly.

Heartbreak Hill. By Herman K. Vielé. (Stanley Paul & Co.)

IF the plot of this well-written tale is wanting in originality, the treatment is delightfully easy and fresh. The hill, which does not deserve so sombre a name, is the joint possession of two cousins, in whose love-affairs, both before and after its mineral wealth is discovered, it plays an important part. Mopsie Beatoun, whose vivacity gives a pleasant air of gaiety to an old-fashioned country home, is a charming heroine. All the characters are drawn with a nice touch of humanity, a particularly amusing figure being a loquacious old financier, who schemes to purchase the hill before its joint owners learn how valuable it is. The book has atmosphere as well as humour.

EGYPTOLOGICAL BOOKS.

The Tomb of Siphtah: The Monkey Tomb and the Gold Tomb. Edited by Theodore M. Davis. Illustrated by E. Harold Jones. (Constable.)—Mr. Davis continues to benefit science by the skilful and thorough excavations of the Valley of the Tombs at Thebes which have already recovered for us the burying-places of Thothmes IV., of Queen Hatasu, and of Thyi's father and mother, Juua and Thuaa. The present volume contains an account of the Tomb of Si-Ptah, another tomb devoted to the mummies of animals, and a third containing nothing but a little pottery, some alabaster vases, and so many gold and silver ornaments that it has been called the Gold Tomb. The book is the work of many hands, M. Maspero contributing an essay on King Si-Ptah and his queen Ta-usert, while Mr. Davis himself describes the finding of the three tombs above mentioned, Mr. Ayrton the excavations generally, and M. Daressy the gold ornaments.

Si-Ptah—or, as M. Maspero prefers to call him, Siphtah—was the king of the Nineteenth Dynasty, who succeeded Amenemeses, who in his turn succeeded Mer-en-ptah, the immediate successor of Rameses the Great. He reigned at least six years, and his wife Ta-usert evidently had some claim to the throne on her own account, which she transferred to her next husband Seti II. on the death of Si-Ptah. As M. Maspero points out, this is all we really know about Si-Ptah, and the speculations as to his parentage which have been made by Dr. Breasted and other writers before the discovery of his tomb are pure conjecture and nothing more. Yet his tomb, which Mr. Davis and Mr. Ayrton discovered at the end of 1905, is far from being the least gorgeous in the valley, and the splendid ceiling to the main corridor, with its huge vultures with outstretched wings painted in vivid colours, must live long in the memory of those who have seen it. Its walls are inscribed with what Mr. Davis and Mr. Ayrton call "The Litany of the Sun," and a portrait of the king, which adorns the entrance, shows a young face of the delicate beauty to be found in some of the early portraits of Rameses the Great. Both ceiling and portrait are beautifully reproduced in colours in the present volume from paintings made on the spot by Mr. Harold Jones, and are therefore preserved for posterity; but the stucco on which the inscriptions are cut is cracking and flaking off under the effect of the water which has already proved fatal to the Book of Amtuat (or That Which is in Hades), which forms the subject of the decoration of the inner chambers. It is therefore of great importance that the part of the walls containing the Litany which is still legible should be copied before it is too late. Mr. Davis has given too many proofs of his disinterested zeal for scholarship to neglect such a work, and we trust to hear shortly that this is being done.

The other tombs here described comprise one containing mummies of a dog, several monkeys, and some ducks, and the tomb of Rameses Mentu-her-khepshef, which has been known for some time, but was finally cleared out by Mr. Ayrton, who here fully describes it. The prince was evidently the son of one of the later Ramessides—probably Rameses IX.—and no doubt died in his father's lifetime. The last tomb to be explored was the Gold Tomb mentioned above, and discovered in January of last year. It was probably used as a hiding-place by the plunderers who looted, in ancient times, all the tombs in the valley that they could discover, and, as nearly all the jewellery that it contained bears the names of Queen Ta-usert or of her husband Seti II., there can be little doubt that it originally formed part of her tomb-furniture. Among it are some beautifully made silver bracelets, gloves, and sandals, and gold rings, ear-rings, necklaces, and diadems, together with some very exquisite objects said to be wig-ornaments. All these are most carefully depicted by Mr. Harold Jones in the present volume, which thereby is made a fitting record of a find which for artistic beauty is only surpassed by the "Treasure" of Dachshur.

The Rock Tombs of El Amarna.—Part VI. Tombs of Parennefer, Tutu, and Ay. By N. de G. Davies. (Egypt Exploration Fund.)—This, the eighteenth memoir of the Archaeological Survey, continues the long and, it is to be hoped, exhaustive record of the rock tombs near Khuenaten's heretic capital on which Mr. Davies has been engaged for so many years. The tombs here dealt with are those of Par-en-nefer, a humble official of the heretic king's Court, of Khuenaten's "Chief Servitor" or chamberlain Tutu, and of Ay his father-in-law and successor. The decorations of all these are mainly taken up with the well-known scene in which the King and Queen are portrayed in the act of showering rewards on the person for whom the tomb was built, such rewards being expressly stated to be given to him for his adherence to "the Doctrine" or new teaching. There is, however, some peculiar feature in each, that of Par-en-nefer being distinguished by the hands with which the Sun-disk's rays terminate, grasping in some cases a uraeus instead of an ankh, while in others they actually support the Pharaoh by holding him under the arms and behind the neck, so as to make one wonder whether the artist did not mean us to understand that the deformity (here much accentuated) of the lower part of the king's body made him walk with difficulty. In like manner, the paintings in the tomb of Tutu show both the earlier and the later forms of the cartouches of the Aten or Sun-disk, and give much colour to Mr. Davies's theory that the elimination of the name of Horus only took place during the later phases of the heresy and, more specifically, after the birth of Khuenaten's third daughter. That Tutu was the Dudu of the Tel el-Amarna letters and the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Davies gives many excellent reasons for thinking. The last tomb here given is that of Ay who, however, never occupied it, preferring, after his accession to the throne, to have made for him in the Valley of the Kings a still more splendid one, in which he is shown to turn again to the worship of the old gods of Egypt. Mr. Davies's reproductions of the tomb on the Tel el-Amarna site leave no doubt that the king and the royal family were really represented by the Court artists as nude, Prof. Petrie's theory that their clothing may have been put on in colour here receiving its coup de grâce. The forty-two plates which complete the volume give as usual accurate copies in line of all the inscriptions together with photographic reproductions of the principal scenes. These last bear sad witness to the wanton destruction to which these tombs have been subject of late years, some of the worst part of it having been perpetrated during the last decade. All Egyptologists owe a debt of gratitude to the author for thus putting within their reach an accurate record of what has escaped.

British Museum: A Guide to the Egyptian Galleries (Sculpture). Illustrated. (Published by order of the Trustees.)—This handbook deals in detail with the monuments on the ground floor of the Museum, most of which are of larger size than those contained in the upper rooms, and include such monsters as the giant scarab brought from Constantinople by Lord Elgin, and the colossal statue of Rameses the Great, from the Ramesseum at Thebes. The arrangement of the Guide is chronological, so that the visitor may have before him a complete set of Egyptian monuments beginning with the stela of King Sa-nekht of the Third Dynasty down to the Coptic gravestones of the Christian period singularly resembling this last in appearance. Most of the monuments, such as the Rosetta Stone and its neighbour, the Decree of Canopus, have been in the Museum for some time, and are therefore well known; but attention may be drawn to some of the later additions, including the statues of Usertsen III. and the other monuments from the Eleventh Dynasty temple at Deir el-Bahari, the relief from the funerary temple of "Candace, Queen of Ethiopia," and a limestone door-jamb of King Merenptah from Memphis. The Guide contains, besides all needful illustrations and a complete index, a list of benefactors to this department of the Museum, in which it is pleasant to notice how often the name of the Egypt Exploration Fund occurs, being answerable for nearly fifty objects, and thus proving itself the most generous of donors, not excluding crowned heads. Had it done nothing else to deserve it, this institution would seem to merit public support from the efforts it has made to enrich our national collections, and in any other country than ours would receive aid from the State. With this volume Dr. Budge completes the series of manuals to the Egyptian collections under his charge, which he began with the Guides to the First and Second, and the Third and Fourth Egyptian Rooms respectively (see The Athenæum, No. 4013). Henceforth the British Museum, though not so large as the Museum at Cairo, nor so well lighted as the Ashmolean at Oxford, may fairly lay claim to be the best catalogued Museum in the world, and it would be a slow-witted tourist who, with these guides in his hand, could not at once find his way to any monument he might wish to study. When we consider the backwardness in this respect of most Continental and many provincial museums, this is no light praise.

The Exploration of Egypt and the Old Testament. By J. Garrow Duncan. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)—This book contains a pleasantly written account of the excavations in which the author has acted as assistant to Prof. Petrie. As the author describes himself on his title-page as "joint author with Dr. Flinders Petrie, of 'Hyksos and Israelite Cities,'" it might have been conjectured that in that volume he had already said all that he had to say about the Israelites in Egypt, while with regard to other matters, the most that he has to tell us about the Old Testament is that the description of Syria and Palestine given in it is correct, although until we were able to read "these monuments of the Pharaohs" we were unable to prove it. For the rest, the book, which is frankly conversational in tone, gives an agreeable enough picture of the excavator's life in Egypt, and might be read with advantage by a tourist in that country who was not particular as to the accuracy of his information. It is not the case that Thothmes III., the greatest conqueror whom Egypt ever produced, who has been called with reason the Napoleon of Egypt, "merely maintained the prestige of his predecessors"; nor was Sequenen-Ra III. "the last but one of the Hyksos kings," but on the contrary, the Theban king who was mainly instrumental in throwing off the Hyksos yoke. In praising the "bakshish" system of excavation, Mr. Duncan does not consider how hurtful this system, by informing the native diggers of the relative value of their finds, has proved to Egyptology. He states "that it was from the cemetery near Negada" that "Dr. Petrie was able to build up the life of the prehistoric Egyptians," but, as a fact, the result of his excavations there was to convince him that he had come across what he called the "New Race," whom he declared to be unconnected with the Egyptians, and to have entered Egypt between the Old and Middle Kingdom. So, too, he speaks of "the identification of Daphnæ with the Talpanhes of Jer. xliii. by Dr. Flinders Petrie in 1886" in apparent ignorance of the fact that this identification had already been made by Wilkinson many years earlier. There are other mistakes which we are afraid must be attributed to the author himself, such as "Syncelles," which he takes to be a proper name, instead of the Syncellus, "Onaias" for Onias, "the rho asperate," and the extraordinary statement that "durra" is (not millet, but) wheat. Hence the book, although by no means unreadable, can hardly be depended on from the Egyptological standpoint.

SCOTCH HISTORY.

THE value of having a hobby has perhaps never been more clearly demonstrated than in Mr. W. J. Couper's The Edinburgh Periodical Press, 2 vols. (Stirling, Mackay). Mr. Couper is a clergyman of the United Free Church of Scotland. Many years ago he conceived the idea of furnishing a complete record of all the diurnals that issued from the hands of Edinburgh printers up to the beginning of the nineteenth century. It was a task obviously calling for patient and laborious research, and it has been performed with rare skill and ability.

The first volume, which covers the period between 1642 and 1711, is naturally the more interesting, as dealing with the beginnings and early history of the press in Edinburgh. The first Edinburgh newspapers were merely reprints of London ones, but the capital soon began to provide for itself; and, according to Mr. Couper, no journalistic enterprise was shown elsewhere in Scotland until the appearance of The Glasgow Courant in 1715. It is just possible that Dumfries anticipated Glasgow, though Mr. Couper does not give it the priority. Evidently The Dumfries Mercury has escaped his attention. An Edinburgh gentleman has a fragment of the twelfth issue of this print, which, though undated, is proved by its contents to have been published between 1714 and 1718. At any rate, after the Glasgow paper of 1715, "Edinburgh was again without a rival until The Glasgow Journal was started, probably about 1741, and The Aberdeen Journal in 1748—which latter is the oldest existing Scottish newspaper." At the close of the eighteenth century Edinburgh had two newspapers that were each eighty years old, another that was approaching forty, and a monthly magazine that had survived sixty years, besides several journals that had respectable histories behind them.

Here it is interesting to note the references to Burns's connexion with the Edinburgh press. It has been asserted that Burns was seen in periodical print before the first edition of his poems appeared in 1786; but contemporary periodicals do not show anything known to be his before the publication in The Caledonian Mercury, December 19th, 1786, of the 'Address to a Haggis.' Mr. Couper is wrong in his surmise that 'Tam o' Shanter' first appeared in The Edinburgh Herald of March 18th, 1791. Burns's letter of February 28th, 1791, to Dr. John Moore, should have kept him right on that point: "I do not know, Sir, whether you are a subscriber to Grose's 'Antiquities of Scotland.' If you are, the inclosed poem ['Tam o' Shanter'] will not be altogether new to you." Another detail may be noted. Mr. Couper is unable to account for the break between Donaldson, the publisher of The Edinburgh Gazette, and its famous printer James Watson. A year or two ago a writer in The Glasgow

Herald showed that Watson had been banished from Edinburgh for a year for the publication of libels on the Government concerning the Darien scheme. This would sufficiently account for the temporary severance. It is interesting to note that, of the Edinburgh periodicals that began publication before 1800, only three survive; while of these The Edinburgh Gazette of 1792 has alone retained its original name. Several, like The Caledonian Mercury and The Courant, reached a good old age: the former may still be said to live in The Scotsman. One magazine succeeded in bridging the nineteenth century—The Christian Magazine of 1797—only to perish, after many changes, in The Union Magazine in 1904.

We heartily join with the rest of the reviewers who have called upon the author to bring the history of the Edinburgh press down to date. Nay, why should he not undertake the history of the entire Scottish press? It is a work for which he has here shown a peculiar fitness.

When the Old Edinburgh Club was founded in January, 1908, it was felt by many that an institution had come into being which, with enthusiasm and prudent guiding, might do much to preserve Scott's "romantic town" from the "dull destroyer's" hand. A year having passed, the first volume of papers which the Council of the Club decided to publish is before us. The Book of the Old Edinburgh Club (Edinburgh, T. & A. Constable) is of the nature of a miscellany, but its contents, in some instances historically valuable, cannot fail to appeal to all Edinburgh people who cherish the traditions of their ancient city. The opening sentence is of sinister significance: "It may be safely affirmed that, since 1860, two-thirds of the ancient buildings in the Old Town of Edinburgh have been demolished." And when one, going over the 'List of Old Houses Remaining,' as here printed, finds himself so often directed to foot-notes "recently demolished," "utterly cleared away," "in process of removal," he realizes what a splendid field of work there is for the Old Edinburgh Club. No doubt absolute necessity sometimes warrants the sacrifice of antiquity, but the necessity is not always proved. Necessity is one thing; utilitarianism is another. Mr. John Geddie in his careful and scholarly paper on the sculptured stones of Old Edinburgh, chiefly those of the village of Dean, expresses reluctance to have the stones removed, and placed for permanent preservation in the municipal museum. We do not agree with him. If these stones are left where they are, utilitarianism, in the form of the speculative builder, will almost certainly lead to their total disappearance. Mr. John A. Fairley gives an interesting account of the Pantheon, an old Edinburgh Debating Society; while Mr. William Cowan prints correctly, for the first time, the conditions upon which the earliest houses in Princes Street were erected. But most valuable of all, from an historical point of view, is Mr. Cameron Robbie's paper on the embalming of the great Montrose. Many of Mr. Robbie's facts, taken from documents in the Register House, Edinburgh, are of the nature of a discovery, having hitherto escaped the vigilance of the biographers of Montrose. Especially is this the case with regard to the fate of Montrose's heart, which Mr. Robbie shows good ground for believing to have been at last placed for sepulture with the collected remains of the body. A belief exists that the right hand and forearm of Montrose were in the possession of a Yorkshire gentleman as lately as 1896. A drawing of this gruesome relic is given in Murdoch and Simpson's edition of Bishop Wishart's 'Montrose'; but Mr. Robbie is right in saying that the story lacks confirmation.

The Scots Peerage, founded on Wood's Edition of Sir Robert Douglas's Peerage of Scotland.—Vol. VI. Marchmont-Oxfuird. Edited by Sir James Balfour Paul. Illustrated. (Edinburgh, David Douglas.)—We have here again an important addition to Peerage literature, and we are pleased to see the strides this useful work makes towards completion. The uniformity of the articles in this volume is a great improvement on those in any of its predecessors, yet we cannot see why even now biographies of such disproportionate extent are given—twelve pages being allowed to the Great Montrose, and not four to the Regent Moray—while many cadet branches are still omitted. It would surely be better to curtail the historical portion, and allow, even in the later volumes, more pedigrees and junior members. For instance, under 'Nairn, Lord Nairn,' the younger daughters of the Countess de Flahault are not even mentioned by name; and under 'Napier, Lord Napier of Merchiston,' Emily Napier, Lady Bunbury, and her sisters are omitted altogether, while there is an inadequate notice of their brothers "the heroic Napiers." Now this, in a work professedly genealogical, should not be. The importance of the family causes the article on Keith, Earl Marischal, to seem rather meagre. No mention is made of Bishop Keith and his "claims," and the cadets are dismissed with scant notice. Sir William Fraser's monographs fall under scrutiny as the basis of more than one article. The writer of 'The Ancient Earls of Menteith' differs from Sir William Fraser about the dual names of the second and third Earls, and regards them as one person. In 'Melville, Earls of Leven,' we again find a correction, and under this heading we have the following strange remark on a cadet: "He entered the Church of England, but died... unmarried"! In 'Graham, Earl of Menteith,' we are glad to see more pedigrees of cadet branches than we have generally met with, and here again Fraser is commented on and put right. The article on Lord Methven does not solve the problem of the alleged marriage of the master carver to "Lady Leslie" before he attracted the eye of Queen Margaret Tudor. Under 'Middleton, Earl of Middleton,' we get some new genealogical information and notes of some interest in regard to certain of the exiles of St. Germain; and under Cheyne, Viscount Newhaven, an account of one of those holders of Scottish peerages of entirely English descent. We again are forced to notice how strange it is, the Scottish love of a "lang pedigree" being borne in mind, that the information on the earlier Scottish families still remains extremely vague. The long and able article on the Dukes of Montrose does not venture to trace their descent definitely further back than William de Graham, circa 1200, though many earlier members of the family are named. The early descent of the Douglasses of Lochleven is yet doubtful, and (as we take it; see pp. 365-6) is apparently confused by the writers of the monograph on the Earls of Morton themselves. The parentage of the first Lord Avandale is left dubious also. Unquestionably the best-compiled articles are those on Makgill, Viscount of Oxfuird, a plain account which gives many new facts; a very readable one on Hume, Earl of Marchmont, which is pleasantly put together; and 'Oliphant, Lord Oliphant.' The last—which traces the descent from Walter Oliphant, circa 1337, when the family of whom many names are recorded before, had become firmly established in Perthshire—is enriched with a wealth of notes which testify to the zeal and care of the writer, and add a monograph of real value to the genealogical history of Scotland.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

IN his Notes by the Way (Fisher Unwin), which resembles in form and appearance the current series of Notes and Queries, Mr. John Collins Francis has reprinted a host of his contributions to that paper, adding memoirs of two intimate friends, Joseph Knight and the Rev. Joseph Woodfall Ebsworth. Mr. Francis, it will be recalled, wrote in former years a record of 'John Francis and The Athenæum,' and he gives abundant evidence here of his exceptional knowledge of the earlier days of the Press in various aspects—a knowledge not the less valuable for being informed with geniality and wide sympathy for different causes. Many odd and interesting items of information are scattered throughout these pages, often concerning matters which the present incurious age has forgotten, or never knew. Thus we light on the demolition of Tavistock House, the home of Dickens for nine years; the title "Kaisar-i-Hind"; an early London water company which had reservoirs opposite the houses occupied by Palmerston and Beaconsfield; the right pronunciation of Cowper; the invention of Bradshaw and "Jingo" as a political catchword; and Brougham's arrangement for the news of his own death in order to read the obituary notices. Special articles are devoted to The Globe, The Saturday Review, The City Press, and other papers. The chapter on 'The History of Notes and Queries' will be novel to many readers, and pays a just tribute to W. J. Thoms, its first editor, a man of unassuming erudition who invented perhaps the most apt of modern words, "folk-lore."

Concerning Joseph Knight anything that can be procured is of deep interest to the countless friends whom he cheered and enlivened by his unceasing radiance and delight in all the arts that make life more humane. Mr. Francis has reproduced three striking portraits of him at the ages of 17, 60, and 67, and one of his book-plates which figures him happily at his desk. Knight's first printed poem of 1848 is also reproduced, and shows his natural talent for verse. His memory at school, we are told, won him a prize of 5*l.*, for he recited the first book of 'Paradise Lost,' and was beginning the second, when it was obvious that he was far beyond any competitor. His humorous lines on "Tammy Ellis" and the Radical defeat in 1895 show him in a vein in which he was admirably easy and pointed. All that Mr. Francis has written in praise of our old friend will be eagerly read and endorsed by those who knew him.

Ebsworth had a zeal for letters which was unabated throughout his long life, and he was a remarkably keen and fluent letter-writer, as several extracts printed here show. He is best known for his services to the literature of ballads. Mr. Francis calls him "Editor of the Ballad Society's Publications." "One of the editors" would be more accurate, for Ebsworth had predecessors in the work, which was begun under Dr. Furnivall's care.

The Athenæum has alluded on several occasions to contributions on the Russo-Japanese War by Capt. Semenoff, who played a part in the operations of the Port Arthur fleet and afterwards at Tsushima. A French translation of portions of the Russian officer's diaries appeared a year or two ago; and his account of the last battle has been published in the United States and elsewhere. The translation by L. A. B. of the whole, or at least of a larger part of the diaries than had previously appeared, now published in a volume by Mr. Murray under the title Rasplata (The Reckoning), has been running through many numbers of the Journal of the Royal United Service Institution, and is still appearing in that monthly magazine. We strongly recommend the account of the naval operations by Capt. Semenoff, as we did that of the land warfare by General Kuropatkin. The two books together present a complete picture of a memorable series of campaigns.

M. FÉLICIEN CHALLAYE publishes, in the "Bibliothèque d'Histoire contemporaine," through M. Félix Alean of Paris, a work of which the first title is Le Congo français, while the second prepares us for a wider handling of the problems presented by Belgian as well as French administration in Central Africa. The author was attached to the staff of De Brazza in the mission sent to inquire into the crimes of certain French officials, during which the explorer died. The book is dedicated to the Comtesse Savorgnan de Brazza. We commend its perusal to all who are interested in the Congo question, or in the future of natives in Africa and their relations to European owners of concessions. The Athenæum has often pointed out that French colonial administration, on the whole, is less open to blame in relation to native rights than is the case with that of most other nations, but that the French Congo is a terrible exception, and has been affected beyond recovery by the vices of Congolese administration during King Leopold's rule of the greater portion of the valley. The Antwerp companies have been imitated in the French Congo, and, though less warmly supported by their Government, have continued to exhibit the baneful effects of a bad system up to the present time. The despotism of the "sentry," the taking of hostages, the torture of prisoners, and all the other horrors practised by Belgian administrators, have in the French Congo been proved against the ill-recruited staff both of the companies and of the French Republic. If the charges in one case went beyond the facts, and the testimony collected from natives by a shocked official was shown to have confused the actual preparation of skulls for museums with the alleged manufacture of human soup for cannibal troops, yet the atrocious treatment which led to the death of a large band of hostages was established beyond doubt. Two French administrators were sentenced to five years' imprisonment. The writer records the expressions of violent animosity against the judges (who did their duty in most moderate fashion) heard by himself from the white population among whom he temporarily lived. From the letters of De Brazza to his family we already knew that the explorer was heart-broken at the discovery of the depravity which had succeeded native rule in the countries which he believed himself to have opened to civilization. There is no exaggeration in M. Challaye's judgment, given in such words as these:—

"The civilization brought from Europe to the natives oppresses them, crushes them, kills them. The words of Dante come to the mind. Here there is no more hope:—streams of blood, deepest depth of suffering, regions of eternal wailing. 'I see in the valley new torments, new torturers.' Throughout my life I shall retain the sadness of having seen with my own eyes real hell."

The whole policy of M. Étienne, when, as Under-Secretary of State in the French

Colonial Office, he granted the concessions, is described at length, and called

"a scandalous proposal, resolutely sacrificing the most essential of rights, the best-founded interest of the State itself, to the selfish greed of a few financiers.....In the French Congo, as in the Congo State, the blacks have been the victims of a gigantic expropriation, and it is their property which the State has styled vacant land in order to give it to companies."

The result is the certain ruin of the greater portion of a magnificent territory. Some curious criticism, by the present French Minister of Finance, of the working of the system founded by a fallen predecessor, will remind readers of Mr. Lloyd George's speeches about his liquor taxes: "From the native taxpayer is drawn as tax a quantity of rubber which is five times the amount of the tax."

The author is right in saying of De Brazza's death: "His illness would perhaps not have caused his death had he not been crushed by his grief at the sight presented by the Congo as it is."

The Bretons at Home, by Frances M. Gostling, with an Introduction by Anatole le Braz (Methuen), deserves a much more detailed notice than we have space for. It is an excellent work of its kind, and the kind is almost unique. Although it is simply a description of a long tour in Brittany, it is the product of many years' study of the land, its people, its aspect, its monuments, its legends, and it is one of the rare books on travel in France published in recent years which show signs of expenditure of time, talent, and hard work. Complete justice is not done to it by calling it a first-rate guide-book of the region traversed by the author; yet this it undoubtedly is. If a second edition is called for, the publishers would double the value of the volume by adding to it a really good road map of the departments of Ille et Vilaine, Côtes du Nord, Finistère, and Morbihan. Summer travellers then might follow with great advantage the itinerary traced by the author, and in so doing would not only visit a number of interesting places still happily remote from the tourist track, but would also gain a curious stock of knowledge about the sites thus visited. Many of them, owing to the extension of the railways and the invention of the automobile, are losing their primitive character. One little town, Le Faouet, due north of Quimperlé which we knew years ago, when it was unknown to tourists, is thus described in its transformation:—

"Before it was discovered by the English and Americans, Le Faouet was certainly one of the most lovely and interesting places in Brittany. Lovely it is still, and interesting from a historical point of view; but its picturesqueness is fast disappearing, and the charming simplicity that once characterized its inhabitants is already a thing of the past....Four years ago the Clef d'Or was a dear little old-fashioned inn, where one sat before the great hearth in the evening, warming oneself, listening to the stories of the peasants who came in for a gossip with the handsome landlady....But the inn of Le Faouet is no more. Where stood the low quaint building, now rises a modern hotel. In place of the cavernous hearth is a closed-in kitchen range," &c.

There are other places visited by the author, especially some in the Morbihan and the Côtes du Nord, which are still so inaccessible, even to a motor-car, that they retain their ancient air. Such is the valley of the Blavet, "the most beautiful country in all Brittany," between Guéméné and Baud, where the "Groac'h Houard," the Venus of Quinipili, is still the object of worship in this most Catholic region. Such is Ploumilliau, in the arrondissement of Lannion where Renan was born, of which the village church contains L'Ankou, a mysterious statue of Death,

If the volume were reproduced as a guide-book, its bulk might be reduced by the suppression of certain long legends, which are manifestly translations, and are much less attractive to read than the author's own observations or her accounts of her conversations with Breton peasants. When she gets to Josselin she refers to the owners of the castle as "the De Rohans" instead of "the Rohans"—a solecism generally committed by English writers, though French journalists, too, are sometimes guilty of it. It sounds very un-French when placed in the author's version of the legendary device of the family, "Je suis ni roi, ni prince, je suis de Rohan"—the traditional version being "Roi ne puis, prince ne daigne, Rohan suis." But there is no historical authority for the motto (in good French or in bad), as the late Duc de Rohan used often to assure his friends. No mention is made of the fact that the family name of the owners of Josselin ever since Louis XIV. gave them their dukedom in 1648 has been (as it was long before) not "Rohan," but "Rohan-Chabot." If there is a "Pardon" at Josselin, as the author suggests, it must be of modern origin, as that part of the Morbihan lies beyond "le Pays des Pardons." Ploërmel is close to Josselin, and was made the scene of the most famous of Breton Pardons—on the stage—in the opera of 'Dinorah,' which in France is always called 'Le Pardon de Ploërmel.' Yet there never was a Pardon at Ploërmel, out of the opera.

The numerous photographs, taken by the author and her husband, which illustrate this volume, are excellent, as are the twelve pictures in colour by Gaston Fanty Lescure. The book has a very agreeable Introduction by M. Anatole le Braz, the accomplished author of 'Au pays des Pardons,' which Mrs. Gostling translated into English some time ago.

Man's Origin, Destiny, and Duty. By Hugh MacColl. (Williams & Norgate.)—The reader of this book, large and ultimate though its subject be, is left at no time in any doubt as to its thesis. This is stated in the Preface in a series of propositions to the effect that soul and body are distinct; that the soul will survive the body, and by successive transformations will continue to develop upwards; that there are numberless orders of intelligent beings above the human; and that there exists one infinitely powerful and intelligent Being, of whose will the "laws of nature" are an expression. These conclusions, so far as they go, reflect the opinions of so many persons of conservative instincts that one may almost regard this book as an essay in apologetics; but if the conclusions have little of novelty, the reasoning by which they are developed is far removed from the commonplace. It is not possible here to follow Mr. MacColl critically through all the problems of the ages: we must be content to say that he shows much acuteness, and also no little shallowness in his argumentation, and that the book seems to us of an antiquated character, though in accidental matters its author is very much up to date.

Select Poems of Rural Life in the Dorset Dialect, by William Barnes (Kegan Paul), is a charming booklet, both in contents and appearance. The selection is made by the poet's son, who has had the assistance of some excellent judges of poetry and Dorset.

Murray's Handbook of Travel-Talk (Stanford) has reached a twentieth edition. It supplies French, German, and Italian equivalents of words and phrases that the tourist will find very useful, and, being compact and easily slipped into the pocket, deserves the popularity it has already attained.

We are pleased to see a new edition of Mr. J. W. Clark's learned, but nowise pedantic volume The Care of Books (Cambridge, University Press), which is now issued at a cheaper price, and, in view of the excellence alike of the text and illustrations, is sure of a largely increased circulation.

OXFORD NOTES.

THE political situation at Oxford can be summed up in a sentence: we are all going to support the Chancellor. That is the attitude of Council. Normally a hard-working body, it has been labouring throughout this term, as it never laboured before, to draft a series of measures that shall embody the gist of what Lord Curzon has either positively recommended or at least suggested. That is likewise the attitude of the Common Rooms. Truly might the Chancellor say to the representatives of the Imperial Press that "we are all reformers here." Doubtless a certain number of irreconcilables still lurk in dark corners. Such gentry are wont to "lie low" until there is actual voting to be done. There can be little doubt, however, that a surprising and wholly unforeseen unanimity prevails within the University with regard to the essential portions of the new scheme. One had supposed a bottomless abyss to sunder the Academic Liberal from the Academic Conservative, but recent events make it probable that the practical men of both parties have very much the same notion of how to get better running out of the machine. After all, it is a good machine, and is running very well as things at present are. If here and there a certain amount of creaking and jarring makes itself felt, it is mostly because the latest improvements have been introduced in a piecemeal way, and there is consequently need of a general overhauling in the interests of system. If one examines the Chancellor's proposals at all carefully, one cannot but notice how little of old is taken away, or of new added. The scheme is no bomb; neither is it, on the other hand, a wet squib. There is room for plenty of change in the direction of the reorganization and readjustment of existing activities; and, by patiently sounding the opinions of all concerned the Chancellor has seen his way to expedite the manifold processes of natural development with a minimum of disturbance to the old order. No Commission would be likely to evince so statesmanlike a respect for the principle of continuity.

Perhaps the most remarkable testimony to the considerate conservatism animating Lord Curzon's programme is that no one appears to consider his vested interests to be threatened by the projected reforms. The very contrary is the case. Of all controversies that loom ahead, the fiercest is likely to relate to the redistribution of functions between the College Tutors and the University Professors. The gist of the Professors' complaint is that, under present conditions, they do not earn their pay. Time was (if the purveyor of after-dinner anecdotes is to be trusted) when a Professor could exclaim, "Pensions for Professors? Why, a Professorship is a pension." Now all is changed. These learned men specially selected to trim and tend the lamp of Truth, these vestals of Research, find that a contemplative seclusion does not allow due scope for their energies. Writing for their intellectual peers, or imparting the higher mysteries to the post-graduate student, restricts their utterance to too low a key.

With Cicero they say, "Eduenda denique dictio est ex hac domestica exercitatione et umbratili medium in agmen, in pulverem, in clamorem, in castra atque in aciem forensem." In short, they would add to their duties that of lecturing for the Schools. This, of course, they can do now, but only on terms of free competition with the College Tutor. Free competition, however, as they point out, is a wasteful process. So they would take the burden of lecturing for the Schools upon their own shoulders, associating with themselves certain University Lecturers, to be chosen by Boards of Faculties which they are to control. They would, in fact, abolish natural selection in favour of rational selection as exercised by Boards of Faculties, and ultimately by the Boards that elect Professors.

There does not seem to be much chance that the Professors will obtain this monopoly. In the world of ideas, at least, Free Trade is better than Protection. In the smaller Schools and Faculties a few teachers have it all their own way as it is. But, where there are many learners, it is well that many teachers should continue to set their views and methods one against the other. The Schools have a high standard. The tradition has long been to reserve the highest class for men who show independence of mind—who have resisted cram, and taken a line of their own. Such a quality of mind, which neither the theorist nor the practical man can afford to be without, is acquired only in the open market, in a free forum of debate and inquiry. Some of the smaller departments in the University have been known to go well-nigh dead for a time because the Professor was incompetent, or lazy, or too old for his work. There is no possibility of such a catastrophe in any of the leading Schools, because, when the University fails, the Colleges are able and ready to fill the gap. In these circumstances bureaucracy would be a counsel, not of perfection, but of despair. It would mean that the Schools are so thoroughly permeated with cram that they had better go altogether, and a new system of encouraging industry and awarding merit be devised—the much-lauded "Continental system," in short. But the Schools are working very well. They keep the men hard at it, and they put a premium on originality. On the other hand, there actually exist the Research Degrees, embodying what is virtually the Continental system, if the Professoriate wishes to devote its superfluous energies to developing a counter-irritant to the Schools. In this direction, however, it has shown itself suprisingly inactive, not to say slack.

Whilst nearly everything that can be said about Oxford politics relates to the pregnant, but highly uncertain future, one modest piece of legislation has during this term been quietly carried through which may turn out to have somewhat far-reaching consequences. Henceforth it will be possible to take a Degree on a Diploma, supplemented by Responsions, Pass Moderations, and a Language Group. This means that, after a year, or at most two years, of preliminaries, a man with a soul above a Pass can go straight on to an advanced course of a specialized kind, in Anthropology, Archaeology, Economics, Education, Forestry, Geography, or Rural Economy—to which list Commerce might one day be added, as the Chancellor has happily suggested. Here, again, is a great opportunity for the Professoriate, if it really means business. In the case of the old-established Schools the College Tutor may compete with the Professor at a certain advantage, inasmuch as he has some say, as a rule, in the selection of suitable lectures for his pupils. In the case of the Diplomas, however, the initial advantage is on the other side, as the teaching is in theory centralized. It remains to be seen, however, whether the professorial seminar is capable of holding its own against College supervision, when once the Diploma courses shall have fairly won their way into popular favour. Natural evolution, unhampered by premature legislation, can alone decide the question.

Fresh needs are being met by fresh endowments. The generosity of All Souls is providing us with a Professor of Military History, and his appointment will doubtless go far to create a scientific school of military history in Oxford. To the Chancellor's Endowment Fund we owe two important lectureships: the one in Japanese, to be held by Mr. John Harington Gubbins, C.M.G., whose record shows him to be eminently suitable for the post; and the other in Political Theory and Institutions, that is, political science as it more immediately bears on administrative problems—a subject, by the way, that calls for the establishment of yet another Diploma course. The Reader in Egyptology, Mr. F. Ll. Griffith, who so recently bestowed Egyptian treasures on the Museum, has presented to the University a sum of 8,000*l.*, the interest of which is to be spent either on actual research-work in Egypt and North Africa, or on the publication of results.

Of functions, which in these days are endless, at least three are deserving of special mention. Early in the term the handsome new buildings provided for Forestry and Rural Economy by the munificence of St. John's were formally opened by the Vice-Chancellor. More recently there have been held the Brasenose celebrations in connexion with the four-hundredth birthday of the College, including the well-deserved conferment of the D.C.L. degree on the Principal, Mr. Heberden, the laying of the foundation stone of the new High Street buildings, and the publication of some very interesting contributions to the history of Brasenose by some of its leading members. Lastly, Jesus College has set up a memorial tablet in honour of John Richard Green, the historian, and the ceremony was the occasion of some interesting speeches.

Prof. Dicey is resigning the Vinerian Chair of English Law, to the infinite loss and regret of the University at large. He retires, however, with all his powers and interests as vigorous as ever; and so brilliant a writer might well excuse himself from teaching after twenty-six years' occupation of his Chair, lest it be said of him that he "to Oxford gave up what was meant for mankind."

The effusions of Bodley's Librarian ever go straight to the heart of the member of Congregation. Hence, when the former threw himself into the fray, it was a foregone conclusion that the scheme to bury a million books somewhere under the pavement of Radcliffe Square would gain the approval of the House. Mr. Wells might dangle before our eyes the alternative plan of a book-repository in the depths of the country, with a motor-car plying backwards and forwards for the benefit of those who wished to study the 'Bradshaws' of the last half-century or the works of certain novelists who shall be nameless. But his appeal came too late. The born pamphleteer had done his insidious work. And now every one is speculating as to what precisely we are in for. Asphyxiated book-boys, a recrudescence of the plague, a general disarrangement of water-pipes, a cracked and tottering Camera—such vaticinations greet one on every side. Meanwhile, a new terror is added to authorship. To see one's magnum opus marked down to half-price on a railway bookstall is bad enough; but to be consigned to the Radcliffe cellar would drive any man to desperation. If the person of Bodley's Librarian is to remain inviolate in the dark days that are coming, the University is in honour bound to afford him the protection of a Bulldog. M.

SOME BYRON CRUMBS: 'THE IRISH AVATAR' AGAIN.

46, Marlborough Hill, N.W., 7 June, 1909.

BYRON'S scathing poem 'The Irish Avatar,' having been written on the 16th of September, 1821, was sent to Paris the following day in a letter to Thomas Moore, then residing in that city. The letter, though brief, afforded space for a chaffing attribution of its enclosure to the Rev. Thomas Lisle Bowles, and a sober inquiry whether the Irish poet could forgive the real author for his attitude on the reception of "that unredeemed" George IV. in the green isle. Two days later Byron consulted Moore on the last line in the quatrain about Castlereagh (22) which now stands thus:—

A wretch never named but with curses and jeers!
He quotes it as standing in the MS. as follows:—

A name never spoke but with curses or jeers and says it must run thus:—

A name only uttered with curses or jeers or else:—

A wretch never named but with curses or jeers
"Because as how," says he, "spoke" is not grammar, except in the House of Commons; and I doubt whether we can say 'a name spoken,' for mentioned. I have some doubts too, about 'repay,'—

And for murder repay with a shout and a smile
Should it not be

And for murder repay him with shouts and a smile or 'reward him with shouts and a smile'?
So pray put your poetical pen through the MS. and take the least bad of the emendations."

Moore seems to have done as he was bidden, save that he put "curses and jeers" and "repays." On the 20th of September, when sending to Paris the magnificent additional lines about Grattan, Byron requested his friend to get twenty copies of the poem "carefully and privately printed off"—six to be sent to the author at Pisa, and the rest distributed according to Moore's pleasure. I have often wondered what became of the fourteen, and whether my copy, the only one I ever saw, was one of them, or one of the six. As regards the original readings, which are from Mr. Prothero's edition of the 'Letters' (v. 366), I suppose one ought not to be greedy; but in matters textual I plead guilty to some degree of gluttony; and I would fain see these variants in Mr. Coleridge's edition of the 'Poetry' also, at the foot of p. 560, vol. iv.

But it was not for this confession that I took up my pen and took down my esteemed and constantly consulted Byron volumes: it was in truth to give vent to a feeling of contrition in the matter of Mr. Coleridge's seventh volume. On learning that I was the proud possessor of the only copy of 'The Irish Avatar' (Paris 1821), which he could trace, he asked whether I would be too proud to send him a description of it for his bibliography. The only possible answer was, "Delighted, I'm sure"—or words to that effect; and the description of the four-leaf pamphlet duly appeared at p. 260—though I am sorry to observe that the half title is (through a printer's error—not mine) mentioned as being "with blank verse" instead of verso, which error must have puzzled the curious in such matters. What now afflicts me is this, however: Mr. Coleridge added to my note a few words to the effect that twenty stanzas of the poem were published by Medwin in the first two editions of his 'Conversations of Lord Byron,' but that it was in another edition printed the same year that the entire poem, numbering thirty-two stanzas, was published for the first time in England—a statement as to which The Athenæum for July 27th, 1901, is cited. On referring to the Museum copy of The Athenæum, I find the editor had been too wary to state that the 1824 version was the first published in England. For myself, had I been enough at leisure in 1904 to make such researches as a sweeping statement about the first appearance of a poem demands, I could have saved Mr. Coleridge's very serviceable edition from this small blemish; but at that time my copy of the book in which 'The Irish Avatar' had been printed before 1824 was buried "full fathom five" in a heap of periodical literature and allusion books most of which have now gone to Rome to form the nucleus of a library in the Shelley and Keats Memorial House on the steps of the Trinità. That book, to-day dug out of the remnant of that collection, to be consulted on another matter, is the 1822 volume of The Examiner. My notes in it show that I got it in January, 1878, as an important Shelley allusion book, and noted in it en passant two appearances of 'The Irish Avatar.' These I have now examined: the first is in the number for April 21st, and is headed

ORIGINAL POETRY.

IRELAND.

[WRITTEN SOME MONTHS SINCE, BUT NOW FIRST PRINTED.]

and not a word is said about its authorship. Nor does it purport to be only a part of a poem, though it opens with the seventeenth quatrain and consists of fifteen quatrains and four lines of asterisks in place of the twentieth—

Spread—spread for Vitellius, &c.

The second appearance is in the number for July 28th, again under the heading of 'Original Poetry,' and with the proper title, 'The Irish Avatar,' and the following explanatory head-note: "The latter half of the following poem was put into our hands some months since, and then graced our columns; but as we have now been favoured with nearly a perfect copy, we give the whole as complete as we can." The whole thirty-two quatrains are there, with a word here and there left out and represented by asterisks—one suspects for safety, though how the publisher escaped prosecution for what he did not leave out is a marvel. The authorship is again unmentioned; the date is given at the foot as "Sept. 16th, 1821"; and there are two facetious foot-notes to the sixteenth quatrain. The first is to line 1, which is printed thus:—

Each thing hath its nature, a King's is to reign—and it is glossed thus:—

"The original here has a word which some of my brethren suppose to begin with a B [it was "brute"]; but in our doubt and perplexity, it was determined the present reading would be at least comprehensive.—Printer's Devil."

The second foot-note is to line 4, which reads " * * * the * * * " for "George the despised"; and it explains as follows:—

"At this part, a corner of the manuscript was torn off,—I fear invidiously.—P.D."

In view of several trifling variations of the earlier version from the later I am inclined to suppose that it reached the newspaper office in manuscript, and that the poem was not there known to have been privately printed already. The later version, on the other hand, has every appearance of having been set up from a copy of the Paris print duly marked with asterisks in substitution of the names which it was deemed expedient to omit.

H. BUXTON FORMAN.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

IN 'Bleak House' there is a Mr. Vholes. I do not know how it is that I remember him, but he is of service to me, as I have learnt why University reform will never come. No legal reform could come when Dickens wrote an account of Mr. Vholes and the class of solicitors he represented. To ruin such a man in the interests of the mere public was preposterous, especially as he had three daughters and supported an aged father in the Vale of Taunton, besides suffering from a weak digestion. All parliamentary and other inquiries therefore were silenced by the reply to the question, "Is Mr. Vholes a respectable man?" "Mr. Vholes is a most respectable man." University reform drastically applied would work havoc with that numerous and respectable family: dear old Dr. Vholes, the Master; Prof. Vholes, who has filled the Chair of — so long and worthily; Mr. Vholes, the admirable College Tutor; Vholes, B.D., the popular Dean; Vholes, F.R.S., so indispensable on the Council; and young Vholes, B.A., who has just been elected to a Fellowship. Think of the ruthless destruction of respectable men if our Universities were reformed. "Nature red in tooth and claw," which we are thinking of during the Darwin celebrations, is a stern mother; but ours is an Alma Mater, and is not going in for the pranks of old Dame Nature, who strives to eliminate the unfit. Therefore there will be no reform. Thank God, say I, for, for aught I know, I too am of the family of Mr. Vholes.

However, reform is in the air, and the self-constituted association called by its enemies "the new Jerusalem Caucus" has circulated a number of proposals which I frankly confess I only glanced at. As a witty old lady of my acquaintance once remarked of "stiff" books, "They don't amuse me, and they won't help me to heaven," so these precious productions, having been unfortunately criticized before they were allowed to see the light of semi-publicity, are not amusing, edifying, or likely to come to anything.

Now the Council have taken up the work of reform, and have begun by nominating Mr. Scott, Master of St. John's, as Vice-Chancellor out of his turn. In this I think they are right, as he is one of the most experienced "men of business" in Cambridge, and universally popular. Had he to wait his turn, he would be an elderly man before he assumed the office, and the University needs him in his prime. I fancy the Council had an idea that they could repeat an experiment the old Caput made, without much success, in the eighteenth century, and pick and choose instead of adhering to the regular order; but a few timely hints seem to have warned them that the Senate was not likely to approve of an attempt to arrogate to themselves new powers; and, so far as I am able to judge, they have the wisdom to accept the situation. Few indeed of us really understand the art of jobbing, and it is happily not always these that the University selects to manage its affairs. As a poet who will not publish sings:—

Job for yourselves, more things are wrought by jobbing
Than this world dreams of....
For what is man better than sheep or women
If, knowing how to job, he does not job?....
For so the University is bound
By golden chains....

We sincerely trust that the Master of Magdalene's nomination as Vice-Chancellor is only deferred, as he will fill the office with courtesy and dignity. Most Masters who have the credit of making colleges have done so by being removed from the Tutorship, where the potentiality for mischief is less than in the higher office; but Mr. Donaldson came from outside, and his appointment has been marked by a distinct rise in the numbers and efficiency of the College, besides a strengthening of an already efficient society of Fellows.

The recent Tripos lists reveal the merits and demerits of the different colleges; and Trinity is proud indeed that it has about 64 "firsts," a large number even after taking into account the size of the College. One of these firsts falls to Mr. James Ramsay Montagu Butler, who continues a career of exceptional brilliance by taking the highest honours in the first part of the Classical Tripos. Every one will congratulate the Master of Trinity and another Senior Classic on this denial of the Horatian sentiment "nos nequiores." Emmanuel has also done remarkably well, which I attribute to the admirable system of methodical teaching inaugurated by the Master. Mr. Chawner is a most able man of affairs, and, when he took a brilliant classical degree in the early seventies, he was considered one of the most promising young scholars of the day, though few suspected how wide was his reading at that time. Like many fastidious Cambridge scholars, he has, I believe, refrained from committing himself in print till recently; but a pamphlet by him "privately printed" has caused no little excitement in certain circles. Many things are combining to make this an annus mirabilis in Cambridge, and the Master's literary effort is not the least remarkable. I think it is Livy who records, "Eo anno bos locutus est in Apulia." I fancy some one has made the remark before me in Cambridge.

In the May Races Jesus went head of the river. Trinity Hall, who went down two places, are to be condoled with, for their collapse was not due so much to bad oarsmanship as to ill-luck. Several of the crew fell ill, and Mr. Stuart was not in form. Still, the success of Jesus marks an epoch in Cambridge rowing, being due to Mr. Steve Fairbairn's persistent attempts to restore what he considers to be the style of Cambridge in the eighties and Oxford in the nineties. The surprising failure of our eight to do itself justice against Oxford last spring has tended to demoralize Cambridge rowing; and it is not a bad sign to see a crew like Jesus, which was not largely represented in the University boat or in the Trials, come to the front. Mr. Williams, the new President, and a former Captain of the Boats at Eton, is likely to have some good material for next year's crew at Putney.

The Officers' Training Corps seems to be more popular than the old C.U.R.V., and as I hear that Cambridge will lie on the line of march of the invaders on their way to London, I am glad to know this. The appearance of the corps at the inspection in May was really very creditable, with its troop of mounted infantry, sappers, artillery, ambulance, &c. One waggon seemed to me like a protest against temperance till I was told that it was laden with "empties" to be used in making bridges.

As I write the Darwin celebrations are beginning, and all Cambridge is preparing to receive the delegates. When one enters a friend's room he slips a book into a drawer or under a cushion, and one suspects it may be nothing worse than a grammar or a phrase-book. One of the most interesting features of the whole is the garden party at the close of the proceedings given by the Darwin family in Trinity. The Public Orator has doubtless many passages from the classics, familiar to most students of grammar, admirably descriptive of the distinguished recipients of honorary degrees. The reception of the delegates in the Fitzwilliam Museum was a distinctly imposing function, the gardens of Peterhouse being thrown open to the guests. The proceedings in the Senate House on Wednesday, when the delegates presented the addresses, were admirably conducted, but the attendance was smaller than might have been desired. The raiment of the delegates gave a good idea of academic splendour, and not the least among these splendid butterflies of learning were our old friends Sir Donald McAlister of Glasgow and Dr. Dale of Liverpool, in their official robes as heads of their respective Universities.

The recent presentation to Mr. J. W. Clark of a Festgabe, the work of many scholars of distinction inside and outside Cambridge, is a well-deserved tribute to one who has been a Cambridge institution for many years. The book will, I think, possess a permanent value, and illustrates the catholic breadth of Mr. Clark's studies and sympathies. The writers discuss the progress of natural science, the A.D.C. from its inception to its present vigour as a permanent institution, quaint customs of Cambridge, old monasteries, libraries—but why particularize? Mr. Clark has lived his long and laborious life among us, and nothing that we do is above or beneath his kindly notice.

J.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Balleine (G. R.), A History of the Evangelical Party in the Church of England, 2/6 net.
 Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. V., 27/6 net. An international work of reference on the constitution, doctrine, discipline, and history of the Catholic Church, with over 2,000 illustrations and 75 maps.
 Drysdale (A. H.), Christ Invisible our Gain, 3/6.
 Hollmann (Dr. G.), The Jewish Religion in the Time of Jesus, 2/ net. Translated by E. W. Lummis.
 Martin (Rev. G. Currie), The Books of the New Testament. One of the Century Bible Handbooks.
 Our Church's Work in India, 2/6 net. The story of the missions of the United Free Church of Scotland in Bengal, Santalia, Bombay, &c. Illustrated.
 Sprott (T. H.), Modern Study of the Old Testament and Inspiration, 3/ net.
 Typical English Churchmen: Series II. From Wyclif to Gardiner, 4/. Published under the direction of the Tract Committee of the S.P.C.K.
 Woods (C. E.), The Gospel of Rightness, 5/ net. A study in Pauline philosophy.

Law.

- Emerson (R. L.), Legal Medicine and Toxicology, 21/ net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Birmingham and Midland Institute, Birmingham Archaeological Society, Transactions, Excursions, and Report for 1908.
 Catalogue of the Collection of Antique Gems formed by James, ninth Earl of Southesk: Vol. I. Egyptian, Assyrian, Syrian, Phœnician, Greek, Etruscan, Roman. Edited by his daughter, Lady Helena Carnegie.
 Clifford (E. C.), Trees and Tree Drawing, 1/. With numerous illustrations.
 Crowe (J. A.) and Cavalaselle (G. B.), A New History of Painting in Italy, Vol. II., 20/ net. With 300 illustrations. Edited by Edward Hutton.
 Konody (P. G.), Brockwell (M. W.), and Lippmann (F. W.), The National Gallery, Part 13, 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.
 Sherrill (C. H.), Stained-Glass Tours in England, 7/6 net. With 16 illustrations.
 Spurrier (Steven), Black and White, 1/. A manual of illustration.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Charm of Womanhood, 2/6 net. An anthology.
 Dante, La Divina Commedia. Vol. I. Inferno, 5/ net. Edited by C. H. Grandgent.
 Darling (Hon. Mr. Justice), On the Oxford Circuit, and other Verses, 5/ net. With illustrations by A. O. Spare.

- Robins (Gertrude), Makeshifts, a Lower Middle-Class Comedy, and other Short Plays, 2/6 net.
 Salt (H. S.), Tennyson as a Thinker, 6d. net.
 Shakespeare (W.), The Tragical Historie of Hamlet Prince of Denmark, 42/. A specimen of the fine work of the Doves Press, printed in black and red from the Second Quarto and the First Folio.

Music.

- Corder (F.), Modern Musical Composition. A manual for students.
 Finck (H. T.), Grieg and his Music, 7/6 net. Illustrated.

Bibliography.

- Cambridge University Library, Report of the Library Syndicate for the Year ending December 31, 1908.

Philosophy.

- Kingsland (W.), Scientific Idealism; or, Matter and Force and their Relation to Life and Consciousness, 7/6 net.
 Masson (J.), Lucretius, Epicurean and Poet, 6/ net. Complementary volume to that published last year.

Political Economy.

- St. Ledger (A.), Australian Socialism, 4/6 net. An historical sketch of its origin and developments.
 Skinner (T.), The London Banks and Kindred Companies and Firms, 1909-10, 10/ net.

History and Biography.

- Buchanan (James), Works: Vol. VII., 1846-8. Comprising his speeches, State papers, and private correspondence, collected and edited by J. B. Moore.
 Fyvie (J.), Wits, Beaux, and Beauties of the Georgian Era, 12/6 net. With a frontispiece in photogravure, and numerous illustrations from contemporary portraits and prints.
 Greenwood (Alice D.), Lives of the Hanoverian Queens of England: Vol. I. Sophia Dorothea of Celle, Wife of George I., and Caroline of Ansbach, Queen of George II., 10/6 net.
 Hammerton (J. A.), George Meredith in Anecdote and Criticism, 12/6 net. Illustrated with reproductions from photographs and from drawings by famous artists.
 Hanotiaux (Gabriel), Contemporary France: Vol. IV., 1877-82, 15/ net. Translated by E. Sparvel-Bayly, with portraits. For review of Vol. III. see Athen., March 23, 1907, p. 345, and June 22, p. 759.
 Jackson (E. S.), The Inniskilling Dragoons: the Records of an Old Heavy Cavalry Regiment, 35/ net.
 Jones (J. Ernest), A History of the Hospitals and other Charities of Birmingham, 2/6 net.
 Laurie (G. B.), The French Conquest of Algeria, 6/ net.
 Meany (E. S.), History of the State of Washington, 10/ net. With maps and illustrations.
 Morse (Hosea B.), The Gilds of China, 3/6 net. With an account of the Gild Merchant or Co-Hong of Canton, and 2 illustrations.
 Nova Scotia Archives: III. Original Minutes of His Majesty's Council at Annapolis Royal, 1720-39. Edited by A. M. Macmechan.
 Order of the Proceedings at the Darwin Celebration held at Cambridge June 22-24, 1909, with a Sketch of Darwin's Life, 2/6 net.
 Perceval (P. J. S.), London's Forest: its History, Traditions, and Romance, 3/6 net. An account of Epping Forest, with illustrations by the author.
 Price (A. C.), Leeds and its Neighbourhood, 3/6. An illustration of English history.
 Semenov (Commander Vladimir), Rasplata (The Reckoning), 10/6 net. Translated by L. A. B. See ante, p. 754. Subsidy collected in the Diocese of Lincoln in 1526, 12/6 net. Edited by the Rev. H. Salter.
 'Times' History of the War in South Africa, 1899-1902, Vol. VI., 21/ net. Edited by L. S. Amery, with maps, plans, and photogravure portraits.
 Townsend (Lewis W.), Oliver Wendell Holmes, 2/6 net. Centenary biography.

Geography and Travel.

- Benham (W. G.), Guide to Colchester and its Environs, Special Pageant Edition, 1909, 6d.
 Bristol, 1909, Official Guide, by John Latimer and others, 6d. net.
 'Car' Road-Book and Guide, 1909-10, 12/6 net. Edited by Lord Montagu.
 Cox (J. Charles), Essex, 2/6 net. With 32 illustrations and 2 maps. One of the Little Guides.
 Darlington's Devon and Cornwall, 5/.
 Gibbs (J. Arthur), A Cotswold Village; or, Country Life and Pursuits in Gloucestershire, 2/6 net. Illustrated. Third Edition.
 Hudson (W. H.), Afoot in England, 10/6. About half the matter in the volume has appeared in various papers and periodicals.
 Mulhall (Marion McMurrugh), Explorers in the New World before and after Columbus, 6/6 net. Contains also the story of the Jesuit missions of Paraguay, with pre-Columbian maps.
 Panoramic Guide of the London and South-Western Railway, 6d.
 Travel and Exploration, Vol. I., January to June, 1909, 7/6 net. A monthly illustrated magazine, edited by S. Carter Gilmore.
 Vrooman (F. B.), Theodore Roosevelt, Dynamic Geographer, 3/ net. Based on a lecture delivered to the School of Geography, Oxford University, March 8, 1909.

Sports and Pastimes.

- Miles (E. H.), Lessons in Lawn Tennis, 1/ net. A new method of study and practice for acquiring a good style of play, with exercises. Third Edition, revised.
 Mottelay (Paul F.), The Bridge Blue Book, 6/. A compilation of opinions on leads, declarations, inferences, and the general play of the game.

Education.

- English Association Bulletin, June.

Philology.

- Brenkmann (C.), Hossfeld's New Practical Method for learning the German Language, 3/. New and revised edition, with a vocabulary, by L. A. Happé.
 Euripides: The Phœnisce, 4/. Edited by A. C. Pearson. In the Pitt Press Series.

- Harrison (H.), Surnames of the United Kingdom, Part 10, 1/ net. A concise etymological dictionary.
 Hellenica Oxyrhynchia cum Theopompi et Cratippi Fragmentis, 4/. Edited by B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt.
 Marchant (E. C.), Thucydides, Book III., 3/6. A school edition.
 Rothwell (F.), French Idiomatic Expressions, with English Equivalents, 2/6 net.

School-Books.

- Bede's Ecclesiastical History of England, Book III., English translation by A. M. Sellar, 1/6 net; Latin translation, edited by the Rev. C. S. Wallis and the Rev. C. H. Gill, 2/ net.
 Cairns (W. B.), Selections from Early American Writers, 1607-1800, 5/ net. Selections from the works of representative American writers before Washington Irving, intended for use in the classroom by students who are making a fairly detailed study of American literature.
 Hollings (Mary A.), Europe in Renaissance and Reformation, 1453-1659, 2/6.
 Thirion (A.), The French Irregular Verbs, 6d. Arranged without abbreviation for schools and private students. Eighteenth Edition.

Science.

- Birchley (Sumner W.), British Birds for Cages, Aviaries, and Exhibition, 2 vols, 25/ net.
 Cambridge Natural History, Vol. IV., 17/ net. A series of essays on Crustacea and Arachnids, completing a work begun 16 years ago.
 Christ's College Magazine, Easter Term, 1909. Darwin Centenary number.
 Collins (A. F.), The Design and Construction of Induction Coils, 12/6 net.
 Crile (G. W.), Hemorrhage and Transfusion, 21/ net.
 Dewar (D.) and Finn (F.), The Making of Species, 7/6 net. With 15 illustrations.
 Eiloart (A.), No Rheumatism, 1/ net. Aims at curing rheumatism, gout, lumbago, &c., and preventing their recurrence.
 Finn (F.), Wild Beasts of the World, Part XVII., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour by L. Sargent, C. E. Swan, and W. Austen.
 Harker (A.), The Natural History of Igneous Rocks, 12/6 net. With 112 diagrams and 2 plates.
 Jones (R. Llewellyn), Arthritis Deformans, comprising Rheumatoid Arthritis, Osteo-Arthritis, and Spondylitis Deformans, 9/6 net.
 Knott (J.), Spontaneous Combustion. Reprinted from The New York Medical Journal for April 17 and 24, 1909.
 Lock (R. H.), Recent Progress in the Study of Variation, Heredity, and Evolution, 5/ net.
 Morton (F. A.), Winning a Living on Four Acres, 1/ net. The further experiences of a small holder. The Cottage Farm Series, No. 6.
 Nelson (E. Milles), The Cult of the Circle-Builders, 2/6 net. Relates to the old stone circles.
 Newell (L. C.), A Course in Inorganic Chemistry, 6/.
 Proceedings of the United States National Museum, Vol. XXXIV. Illustrated.
 Scott (A. C.), Notes on Meteorology and Weather Forecasting, 5/ net. For junior navigators, with charts.
 Taylor (H. L.), Orthopedic Surgery, 21/ net.
 Wright (H. J. and W. P.), Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them, Part XVI., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.

Juvenile Books.

- Blaikie (A. H.) and Henderson (J. A.), Nests and Eggs, 2/6 net. With 48 coloured pictures. In Shown to the Children Series.
 Kelman (Janet H.) and Wood (Rev. T.), Butterflies and Moths, 2/6 net. With 48 coloured pictures. Also in Shown to the Children Series.

Fiction.

- Calthrop (Dion C.), Everybody's Secret, 6/. A modern story of English social life.
 Castleton (R.), A Study in Sepia, 6/. Deals with a love entanglement.
 Croker (Mrs. B. M.), Her Own People, 7d. net. New Edition.
 Diver (Maud), The Great Amulet, 1/ net. New Edition.
 Hale (Louise C.), The Actress, 6/. A story of theatrical life told by the actress herself.
 Harrod (Frances), The Wanton, 6/. A love-tale placed in the days of Frederick II. of Germany.
 Hart (Christian), The Play and the Players, 6/. A highly exciting tale, including attempted murders and much disguising of personalities.
 James (Ada and Dudley), Stolen Honey, 6/. A dramatic tale of which a stage version has already been prepared.
 Kennard (Mrs. E.), A Professional Rider, 1/ net. A sporting story.
 Kernahan (Mrs. Coulson), Ashes of Passion, 6/. A tale of passion and nemesis.
 Kock (Paul de), A Good-Natured Fellow, 1/6 net. Translated by Henry Blanchamp. One of the Lotus Library.
 Lynch (L. L.), Man and Master, 6/. Deals with the mystery surrounding a death, and is illustrated.
 Moore (G.), Sister Teresa, 3/6. New Edition. For notice of former issue see Athen., August 3, 1901, p. 150.
 Oldmeadow (E.), Antonio, 6/. The scenes are laid partly in Early Victorian England, and partly in Portugal during the troubled reign of Queen Maria da Gloria.
 Ramsey (Olivia), Sylvia and the Secretary, 6/.
 Reynolds (Mrs. F.), The Lady in Grey, 6/. A story of Welsh life.
 Warden (Florence), Lady Rodway's Ordeal, 6/. A story with a claimant to a title as hero.
 Williamson (Mrs. C. N.), The Turnstile of Night, 7d. net. A story of adventure. New Edition.
 Wood (Mrs. Henry), Roland Yorke, 6d. New Edition.
 Wood (Walter), The Secret Paper, 6/. A sensational story, with frontispiece by N. Tenison.
 World's Story-Tellers: Stories by Cervantes, and Stories by the Essayists, 1/ net each.

General Literature.

- Annual Charities Register and Digest, 1909, 5/ net.
 Becke (A. F.), An Introduction to the History of Tactics, 1740-1905, 3/6 net.

Birmingham, Financial Statement of the City for the Year ended 31st March, 1909.

Furness (Annette), A Summer Garden, 3/6

Lee (Vernon), Laurus Nobilis, 3/6 net. Chapters on art and life.

Trades for London Girls, and How to Enter Them, 9d. net. A companion book to 'Trades for London Boys.'

Woods (Mary A.), A Study of Opposites, 3/6 net. Deals with such themes as 'Success and Failure,' 'Riches and Poverty,' 'Age and Youth.'

Pamphlets.

Batty (R. B.), The Future Policy of Licensing Justices, 3d. A reply to Mr. E. A. Pratt's pamphlet.

Budget, 1909: Towards Socialism and the Extinction of all Property Rights.

Mitra (S. M.), Moslem-Hindu Entente Cordiale. Has special reference to Lord Morley's Indian reforms.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Chauvet (P.), La Religion de Milton. A thesis presented to the Faculty of Letters of the University of Paris.

Cumont (M. F.), La Théologie solaire du Paganisme romain, 1fr. 70. Reprinted from the Mémoires of the Académie des Inscriptions.

Études sur l'Histoire des Religions: Vol. II. Bouddhisme: Opinions sur l'Histoire de la Dogmatique, by L. de la Vallée Poussin; Vol. III. La Doctrine de l'Islam, by Baron Carra de Vaux, 4fr. each.

Klein (G.), Der älteste christliche Katechismus u. die jüdische Propaganda-Literatur, 6m.

Loesche (G.), Luther, Melanchthon u. Calvin in Oesterreich-Ungarn, 4m.

Olschewski (W.), Die Wurzeln der paulinischen Christologie, 3m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Eger (O.), Zum ägyptischen Grundbuchwesen in römischer Zeit, 7m. A study founded on Greek papyri.

Hallays (A.), Avignon et le Comtat-Venaissin, 4fr. One of Les Villes d'Art Célèbres.

Drama.

Creizenach (W.), Geschichte des neueren Dramas: Vol. IV. Das engl. Drama im Zeitalter Shakespeares, Part I., 16m.

Philosophy.

Amberg (R.), Die Steuer in der Rechtsphilosophie der Scholastiker, 6m.

Bazardjian (R.), Schopenhauer, der Philosoph des Optimismus, 3m. 50.

Kastil (A.), Studien zur neueren Erkenntnistheorie: Part I. Descartes, 5m.

Meyer (H.), Der Entwicklungsgedanke bei Aristoteles, 3m.

Simon (J. A.), Die Wissenschaft der Philosophie, als das System der Panaisthesis, Vol. I., 9m.

History and Biography.

Lafestre (G.), Molière, 2fr. In the Collection des Grands Écrivains français.

Maurras (C.), Enquête sur la Monarchie, 1900-9, 7fr. 50.

Strylenski (C.), Le dix-huitième Siècle, 5fr.

Geography and Travel.

Montfort (Eugène), La Chanson de Naples, 1fr. 50 net. With many illustrations by Valère Bernard.

Education.

Belele (L.), 'Ο Καποδίστριας ὡς θεμελιωτὴς τῆς Δημοτικῆς Ἐκπαιδευσεως ἐν Ἑλλάδι.

Chauvet (P.), J. Milton's Treatise on Education, with a Preface and Notes. Another thesis presented to the University of Paris.

Gurnaud (D.), La Crise de l'École laïque: L'École et la Famille, 3fr. 50.

Folk-lore.

Andrews (A. Le R.), Halfs Saga ok Halfsrekka, hrsg., 4m. Part of the Altnordische Saga-Bibliothek.

Dähnhardt (O.), Eine Sammlung naturdeutender Sagen, Märchen, Fabeln, u. Legenden, hrsg.: Vol. II. Sagen zum Neuen Testament, 8m.

Philology.

Brause (J.), Lautlehre der kretischen Dialekte, 5m.

Wechsler (E.), Das Kulturproblem des Minnesangs: Vol. I. Minnesang u. Christentum, 15m.

Fiction.

Delzons (L.), Les Maseran, 3fr. 50.

Lechartier (G.), Le Vaisseau de Plomb, 3fr. 50.

Vacaresco (H.), Amor Vincit, 3fr. 50.

 All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

ADMIRAL MAHAN is to give the world the sum of his experiences as to the meaning of life. The volume, which is entitled 'The Harvest Within: being Thoughts on the Life of a Christian,' and will be published in England by Messrs. Longman, is a study not so much of religious theory as of the writer's own experience. He dwells on the power of Jesus Christ in the individual and the Church, Christian responsibility, and Christian hope.

A LIFE OF GENERAL WOLFE, by Mr. Edward Salmon, will be added, next week to the "Makers of National History" Series, which the Rev. W. H. Hutton is editing for Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons. Readers will thus have the chance to learn something of the man whose death at the capture of Quebec is to be commemorated in September next.

IN the early autumn will appear the Autobiography of Sir Henry M. Stanley, edited by his wife, and published by Messrs. Sampson Low.

MR. UNWIN will publish soon a novel entitled 'The Waking Hour,' by Mr. Harold Wintle, author of 'The Cleansing of the Lords' and 'The Mirror of Folly.' It is a story of society life in the country.

Blackwood's Magazine for July opens with an article entitled 'The Cockney,' by "An Outlander." 'Democracy in the Lords,' by "A Gunner," discusses the Bill for National Service (Training and Home Defence) to be brought forward in the House of Lords in July by Lord Roberts. 'Stray Stories from India' is by Sir Arthur Fanshawe. Mr. David Hannay discourses on 'The Pirate'; and Mr. Alfred Noyes contributes a poem entitled 'A Friend of Carlyle.'

TO Messrs. Harper's "Library of Living Thought" will shortly be added 'Jesus or Paul?' a study of the founding of Christianity, by Prof. Arnold Meyer; and 'The Transmigration of Souls,' by Prof. D. A. Berthelot, a concise account of the belief in the doctrine of metempsychosis.

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & SONS have purchased the publishing department of Messrs. Bemrose & Sons. In order to cope with this increase of business, Messrs. Allen are about to move to premises at Ruskin House, 44 and 45, Rathbone Place, Oxford Street.

MESSRS. W. & A. K. JOHNSTON will publish early in the autumn a 'History of the Johnstones, 1191-1909,' with descriptions of Border life, by Mr. C. L. Johnstone, author of 'Historical Families of Dumfriesshire.' The book will be issued in a limited edition of 150 copies.

LAST week, by a mischance, we omitted to notice the death, at Roxbury, Mass., of Dr. Edward Everett Hale, one of the veterans of United States letters. Born at Boston in 1822, the son of Nathan Hale of The Boston Daily Advertiser, he wrote much for his father's newspaper, and became an authority on Spanish American affairs. From 1856 to 1899 he was widely known as minister of South Congregational (Unitarian) Church, Boston, and was lately chaplain of the United States Senate. Some of his tales—such as 'The Man without a Country,' 'In His Name,' and 'Ten Times One is Ten'—had an enormous circulation, the last two stimulating the foundation of Lend-a-Hand Clubs. Besides he promoted the Chautauqua movement and edited the Lend-a-Hand Record. He also edited a volume of documents from the Public Record Office and British Museum illustrating the history of Raleigh's first colony (1860). Other books were 'Franklin in France' (1886), 'J. Russell Lowell and his Friends' (1899), 'Ralph Waldo Emerson,' and 'Memories of a Hundred Years' (1902). The last book exhibits pleasantly his qualities as a writer and a sturdy philanthropist.

MR. WILLIAM SINCLAIR has written a memoir of Alexander Smith as an introduction to a new and complete edition of his poems for an Edinburgh publisher.

AT the annual banquet of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland Mr. Heinemann made some excellent remarks on the decline of the six-shilling novel. He mentioned among the causes of this decline the differences of discount given on the published price, over-production, the production of worthless books, and the "bumping out" of books sold at six shillings, which did not contain the average amount of text given for that sum, and thus led to public distrust. It is refreshing to hear these home truths from a publisher, and we hope they will receive due attention from all who are concerned in the making of novels. Not much can be expected from an indolent public, but authors ought to show more aptitude for business than they do.

M. MARQUSET, whose life of Madame Hamelin we lately reviewed, is engaged on research into that of the famous actress of the First Republic, Mlle. Langes. A glance at the biography in 'Michaud' shows the many mysteries which surround that lady and her descendants. The name of Agassiz, borne by distinguished men of science in the United States, but originally from Neuchâtel, is connected with the story of the actress and her daughter. Comte Marquiset is seeking for information as to Mr. Robert Agassiz, who is said to have been a London banker in recent times, but is not to be found in ordinary works of reference.

THE death of M. Ludovic Baschet in his seventy-fourth year removes a long established and enterprising publisher in Paris. Three of his sons are distinguished in their several ways: M. René Baschet is the director of L'Illustration, M. Marcel Baschet is well known as an artist, and M. Jacques Baschet is the secretary of the École des Beaux-Arts.

AN anonymous book of dramatic verse, published last year by Mr. John Lane under the title of 'King Alfred's Jewel,' is in the second edition credited to an American lady, Mrs. Katrina Spencer Trask, who was the inventor of the closing scene in the Bath Pageant, entitled 'Homage from the Western World.'

MR. MURRAY will publish in the early autumn a translation by Lieut. K. B. Ferguson of General von Horsetzky's work 'A Short History of the Chief Campaigns in Europe since 1792.'

RECENT Parliamentary Papers of general interest to our readers are: Report of the Advisory Board of the London School of Economics on the Third Course at that School for the Training of Officers for the Army, &c. (2d.); Progress of Education in India, 1902-7: Vol. I., Quinquennial Review (2s. 10d.), and Vol. II. Maps and Tables (4s. 7d.).

SCIENCE

Studies in Fossil Botany. By D. H. Scott. —Vol. II. Spermophyta. Second Edition, with Illustrations. (A. & C. Black.)

THIS volume will receive a warm welcome all over the botanical world. Since the appearance of the first edition, the book has been indispensable to professors of plant anatomy and phylogeny and every advanced student; but since that time there has been such a rapid advance in the subject that many of the chapters had become entirely out of date, and for the last two years we have looked for a new edition with eagerness. Since the pregnant discovery of the seed-bearing habit of the genus Lyginodendron by Prof. Oliver and Dr. Scott in 1903, there has been a constant succession of important discoveries, which bear, in many cases, on questions relating to the evolution of the principal groups of plants.

The recent discoveries in fossil botany are not only of interest to specialists, but also lie at the very roots of botanical morphology and phylogeny, on which they have thrown a flood of light. The literature on the subject is almost entirely in the form of highly technical monographs, however, and the compilation of a readable and trustworthy textbook is a task which only a master could attempt. Dr. Scott may be ranked as the foremost of living fossil botanists, so that the value and importance of his book can be hardly over-estimated.

The second volume deals with the families above the ferns. It therefore begins with the Pteridospermeæ, a group known only as Palæozoic fossils. This group, founded by Prof. Oliver and Dr. Scott in 1903, now includes a large proportion of what were previously classed as ferns. Their vegetative parts were known and described fully many years ago, and figure in the first edition of the present book. Their external appearance was virtually identical with that of ferns, and one of the modern revelations in botany has been the discovery that on their fern-foilage these plants bore Gymnosperm seeds. In his treatment of this group Dr. Scott gives us only one disappointment, and that is in his illustration of the restoration of the whole plant. In the first volume of the second edition the frontispiece was the same as that in the first edition, namely, the main trunk, with its roots and foliage, of Lyginodendron oldhamium. This was bad enough, but in the second volume of the second edition the same frontispiece appears for the third time. In consideration of the great importance and interest attaching to this plant, we had hoped to see a new restoration, embodying the results of all the recent work that has been done in connexion with it.

In the section on the Lyginodendree a new type has been introduced in Sutcliffia insignis, a very primitive member which has affinity with the Medullosas. There is also mention of several seeds, which, though they have not been found in organic connexion with any of the structurally preserved Medullosas, are yet suspected of belonging to them. Among the new illustrations is a photograph of a Neuropteris leaf with its seed attached. This specimen is particularly important, being one of the earlier links in the chain of evidence that established the existence of the Pteridospermeæ. We are glad to see several diagrammatic figures of the seeds; they are a particularly useful form of illustration in dealing with fossils, where photographs of the actual specimens are often difficult for any but a specialist to understand.

Many details about the forms between the Pteridosperms proper and the Cordaites are introduced, bringing this section of the book up to date. About the Cordaites themselves there is less new to say, as our knowledge of them has not been much enlarged in recent years. We note with pleasure in this chapter that a figure is introduced for comparison with Cordaites seeds which is taken from the original work of Griffith (1852), who was the first to discover the pollen chamber, a noteworthy feature of seeds of this type.

The chapter on the Mesozoic Cycadophyta is much enlarged, and includes a description of the American fossils which have thrown such a brilliant light on the structure of the group, and have also been a great stimulus to theoretical work on the evolution of the flower. The importance of these plants is comparable with that of the Pteridospermeæ, and full details of their organization have only been ascertained by recent work.

The fossil structures are so often of an intermediate nature that the use of technical terms which have been created for the living plants often leads to a re-definition of the terms, or their use in an extended sense. We think that at the present juncture it would have been useful if Dr. Scott had given a clear definition of the terms "flower" and "seed." We notice that he uses the word "flower" in dealing with both the Cordaites and the Bennettitales, where its use might have been diplomatically avoided.

The concluding chapter on general results is naturally the one to which we turn for a statement of Dr. Scott's own views. Here we note that his position is materially different from what it was in the first edition as regards the relationship of the lower Pteridophytes. His new classification is perhaps a little startling. In the whole vegetable kingdom (excluding mosses and the Thallophyta) he makes three divisions. The first, the Sphenopsida, includes four classes: the Equisetales, Pseudoborniales, Sphenophyllales, and Psilotales. The second division includes only the Lycopodiales; and the third the ferns and all seed-bearing plants. This isolation of the Lycopodiales, while the Psilotales are included in the Sphenopsida, is a method of classification which will not immediately appeal to all botanists, nor, it seems to us, will the inclusion of the Angiosperms in the Pteridopsida. Botanical phylogeny is, however, in such a state of flux at present that the pronouncements of an authority can only be listened to with silent respect: it is too early to attempt to prove or disprove them, though we may hope that a few more years will see the discovery of facts which will tend to definite results.

The question of the origin of the Angiosperms is now to the fore in botanical inquiry. The discovery of the bisexual cones of the American Cycadeoidea gave the subject an added interest, and led several people to believe that the clue to their ancestry had been discovered. Dr. Scott says:—

"There may be a difference of opinion as to the nearness of the relation between Bennettitaceæ (including the American Cycadeoidea) and the higher Flowering Plants, but the points of agreement are so striking that we can hardly fail to recognise that a real relation exists, and that the ancestry of the Angiosperms... is to be sought among the great plexus of Cycadophytes, which overspread the world during the Mesozoic Period."

The importance of such a view in botanical phylogeny is evident.

In conclusion, we must congratulate Dr. Scott on the successful completion of the immense labour represented by the compilation of these volumes.

RESEARCH NOTES.

IN the current number of The New Quarterly Review Mr. Norman Campbell makes an attack on "the Physics of M. Gustave Le Bon," not more to the point than that to which he gave vent some years ago in these columns. With one exception to be presently noticed, his charges, when dissociated from the rhetoric in which they are clothed, resolve themselves into the complaint that M. Le Bon nowhere defines the sense in which he uses the words "matter" and "energy," thereby putting Mr. Campbell to the trouble of inventing for him several varying definitions, which he sets up to show that they are inconsistent with M. Le Bon's conclusions. As controversy on these lines seems likely to be endless, I do not propose to join issue with him as to what M. Le Bon does or does not define, and would only ask any one who feels impressed by Mr. Campbell's strictures to read M. Le Bon's books 'L'Évolution de la Matière' and 'L'Évolution des Forces,' and then to judge for himself. I also note that Mr. Campbell now holds it proved that radio-activity is a property, not of matter in general, but only of one or two specific substances, and that, according to him, Sir Joseph Thomson and Prof. Wien have now recanted their former opinion that atomic disintegration extends to the atoms of several, if not all of the elements, and that there is a great store of energy in the atom, which, if at the service of mankind, might completely revolutionize all our present conditions. I should not have gathered this from their published work.

The one point above mentioned to which Mr. Campbell specifically commits himself regards what he calls "the Grand Experiment" of the aluminium arrow suspended in air, to which, he affects to consider, all the others recorded in M. Le Bon's two books lead up. In answer to M. Le Bon's contention that such a body may be made a continuous source of electricity for a very extended, but not infinite period, Mr.

Campbell says that, if M. Le Bon will include a couple of galvanometers in the circuit, he will find that as much electricity leaves the ball for the point as the point for the ball. If Mr. Campbell will kindly say how he proposes to make this experiment, I will undertake, if possible, to repeat it, and then to give in these columns my interpretation of it. Before doing so, it may be as well to say that M. Le Bon in his original experiment used, as I am informed, an influence machine of twelve plates as his source of electricity.

In the current number of the Royal Society's Proceedings appears an article by Sir Oliver Lodge and Dr. Alexander Muirhead in which they explain with great generosity the rationale of their method of syntonizing or tuning the instrument used in their system of wireless telegraphy. Beginning with the assertion that a skilled operator learns to distinguish the message intended for him by the same process of "selective attention" as that which enables a man to follow a conversation at a crowded dinner-table, Sir Oliver Lodge goes on to say that the first step towards attaining a really trustworthy syntonic system is to eliminate the earth from the circuit. The two "capacity-areas" that he uses, consisting of wire systems in the shape of a Maltese cross, are carefully insulated and raised as high above the earth as possible, and both the transmitting and the receiving instrument must be capable of "fairly free and undamped vibration, so as to preserve and store the impulses as they arrive, till their combined effect attains the needful climax"; while the receiver must respond to a train of impulses, but not be sensitive enough to be affected by a single one. With this and a specially wound Ruhmkorff coil of very moderate spark-length—Sir Oliver apparently dispenses with the enormous instruments used in other systems—he claims that "several neighbouring sending stations can be made to send to several neighbouring receiving stations without interference," and that therefore all the units of a fleet scattered over (say) a distance of three hundred miles could communicate with each other in absolute secrecy, without being in any degree annoyed by the enemy's most violent efforts to intercept, or simply to make unintelligible their messages. If this be so—and there seems every reason to think it is—one of the main difficulties affecting wireless telegraphy in a practical shape is solved, and it may be noticed that the inventors do not contend that their system would be equally successful over a distance of thousands of miles. Those interested in the connexion between laboratory or lecture experiments and the commercial form of an invention will be pleased to notice that in his perfected system Sir Oliver Lodge makes use of the "syntonic jars" which he used to show in lectures before wireless telegraphy was thought of, and that he remains faithful to the "wheel coherer," consisting of a steel disk revolving in a mercury trough covered with a slight film of oil, as also to the valve tube for producing a "pertinacious" current, first exhibited by him, if one remembers rightly, at lectures at the Royal Institution.

The controversy about the existence of positive electrons goes on with varying fortune to either side. At a recent meeting of the Société Française de Physique a pitched battle took place between M. Jean Becquerel and his opponents, M. A. Dufour, who formerly accepted his experiments as confirming his view that such electrons exist, now siding against him. As, however, M. Dufour's main contention seems to have been that the tube described in The Athe- naum (see No. 4213), at the time of its invention by M. Becquerel, does not absolutely prove the existence of the electrons in question, and this was admitted by the inventor, no decisive result was attained. Later, M. Cotton, who with M. Moulin has throughout doubted M. Becquerel's interpretation of his experiments, returned to the charge in a paper on some points of the Zeeman phenomenon, wherein he declared his adhesion to the theory put forward two years ago by Ritz, who supposed that the magnetic field determined the rotatory and oscillatory movements of the atom or parts of the atom to which he attributed the origin of the series of lines in the spectrum. This is not far removed, as M. Cotton pointed out, from the old idea of Lord Kelvin as to the existence of vortex movements in the magnetic field. Finally, M. Cotton examined the cases of circular vibrations investigated by M. Becquerel and M. Dufour, which have their frequency diminished by the nature of the field, and pointed out that while the hypothesis of the existence of positive electrons would explain this, it might equally be accounted for by supposing that the field which really acts is opposed in direction to that of the electromagnet. In other words, it is possible to suppose, on Ritz's theory, that different parts of the same atom may revolve in a magnetic field in different directions. As he claims experimental support for this view, it will be as well to wait until the experiment is published, but it may be noted meanwhile that M. Jean Becquerel still contends that his conclusions are derived from all the phenomena engaged, and do not depend solely on experimental proof.

M. William Duane sends to the Comptes Rendus of the Académie des Sciences of the 1st of this month the description of a most ingenious apparatus for determining in a few minutes, and without tedious calculations, the amount of heat disengaged by a given quantity of any radio-active substance. This is based on the principle of the rapid increase of the vapour-tension of a very volatile liquid (in this case sulphuric ether) when subjected to a rise of temperature, and shows that the heat disengaged by a sample of radio-thorium was equal to 0.039 calories per hour for 0.324 of a milligramme. M. Duane therefore thinks that the quantity of heat disengaged by radio-thorium, which has thus for the first time been measured, is of the same order as that produced by radium. He is about to extend his experiments to other highly radio-active bodies, and has already detected an appreciable amount of heat coming from a sample of polonium "exempt de radium et de radio-thorium." If we accept, as most do, Prof. Rutherford's identification of polonium with Radium F, it would seem as if the latter were not the last of the transformations of radium, and that its final change into bismuth, lead, or some other familiar metal may yet be observed.

M. A. Laborde, the former collaborator of the late Pierre Curie, communicates to the same Comptes Rendus for the 14th of this month the result of some experiments made by him into the rate of absorption of the radium emanation by different substances, and finds that it is not only absorbed, but retained with great ease at ordinary temperatures, by certain porous bodies such as wood charcoal, "écume de mer"—he seems to mean what we call meerschaum—and platinum black; and, further, that at a lower temperature the same phenomenon occurs with all metals, and at a still lower one, with glass silvered or otherwise. From this, he asks whether all substances may not be thought to absorb radium emanation at some temperature or another, a point which he hopes to solve by further experiment. In the meantime it may be noted that the retention of the emanation by so many substances would in itself account for the radio-activity noticed in caverns and mines, without the hypothesis of the "penetrating radiation" generally invoked to explain it.

The interesting question of snake-poison and its possible antidotes is discussed with great clearness in the Revue Scientifique of June 5th by Dr. Calmette, Director of the Institut Pasteur at Lille. He divides all snake-poisons into two classes, in one of which, the highly neurotoxic, he puts those of the cobra, the bungarus, and other serpents usually to be found in the East; and in the other, where the effects are, according to him, more strictly localized, the poisons of the Viperidæ, among which he includes the cerastes, the rattlesnake, and the adders. He sweeps away the ancient theory that snake-poison is only fatal when injected into the veins, and shows that it produces dire effects when taken internally in sufficient doses, and that, therefore, the old remedy of sucking the poison from the wound is not without danger to the operator. Another tradition that he destroys is that the snake is naturally immune to the effects of the venom of other snakes, as he shows that rattlesnake poison will kill cobras, and that it is only the poison of their own species that they can bear without injury. Of the chemical remedies for snake-bite, he mentions permanganate of potassium, chloride of gold, chloride of lime, and chromic acid as producing more or less modification in the virulence of the poison if immediately injected; but the only effective remedy that he has discovered in the course of his experiments is a serum produced by successive inoculations on rabbits and guinea-pigs. Horses, however, form the best field for the culture of the serum, although the stories that he tells of their sufferings in the process of its manufacture will not please the anti-vivisectionists. The skin of the abdomen or a spot behind the shoulder is the place that he chooses for the injection of his serum, and he guarantees its efficiency if administered within two hours after the bite. Of prophylactic vaccination he says nothing, and in view of his remarks in the case of horses, there would probably be very few who would care to undergo it.

F. L.

SOCIETIES.

BRITISH ACADEMY.—May 28.—The Dean of Westminster, Fellow of the Academy, in the chair.—Prof. Kennett delivered the first of three Schweich Lectures on 'The Composition of the Book of Isaiah in the Light of Archaeology and History.' The words of Isaiah were originally preserved orally by his disciples in the same way as the Apostles preserved the recollection of the words of Christ, and from the absence of any verbal agreement between Jeremiah and Isaiah it is probable that in a literary form the nucleus of the book of Isaiah did not see the light till a considerable time after the reforms of Josiah had crystallized into law. This earliest nucleus has not come down to us in its original form, for, apart from its combination with prophecies of a later date, it has undergone the same sort of revision which is seen in the book of Hosea. A frequent cause of the dislocation of prophecies is the introduction of consolatory passages into denunciations and predictions of woe.

The modern student starts his study of the Old Testament with canons of interpretation which were formerly ignored, and which frequently necessitate the abandonment of theories once held. Thus the modern literary equipment shows that each of the great divisions of the book of Isaiah consists of documents or fragments of different provenance and date, for the elucidation of which we need more than one class of criteria. Literary criticism must be supplemented by historical criticism and archaeology: we must inquire with reference to each section or fragment which literary criticism declares to be homogeneous at what period every one of its phrases would have a clear meaning. A study of the history of Isaiah's ministry makes it evident that there was no time when a cry of victory would have been suitable in the mouth of the prophet, and passages which strike such a note belong to a later date. The element in Isaiah's teaching which fixed itself upon the minds of later generations was his conviction that the Assyrian, though he was the rod of Jehovah's anger to chastise His rebellious people, was himself actuated by sordid motives which must bring about his ruin. At a later time, when it was only necessary to substitute Chaldean for Assyrian in order to apply Isaiah's lesson to the circumstances of the Jewish nation, Isaiah, the stern preacher of righteousness and of the holiness of Jehovah, came to be regarded as the prophet of national consolation. It was this conception of the prophet's mission which determined the subsequent additions to the book.

June 4.—Lecture II.—The period from the death of Hezekiah to the Captivity was a time of gloom from a political and, but for the reformation in the time of Josiah, from a religious point of view. It has left no trace in the book of Isaiah. During the first twenty years of the sixth century B.C. there were three transportations of Jews to Babylon, and apparently during the greater part of that century Jews were continually migrating to Egypt; so that the Jewish nation was divided into three separate communities, each of which was subsequently to exercise an influence on the Jewish Church. The book of Deuteronomy had not been published at the time of the Captivity. The Jews who took refuge in Egypt built at least one temple where they offered sacrifices to Jehovah. The Babylonian Jews, under the influence of Ezekiel, who looked for a return to Palestine, abstained from sacrifice.

In the middle of the sixth century B.C. Cyrus united Elam and Media, and after subduing Lydia in 539 B.C. he set about the subjugation of Babylonia. Sippur and Babylon opened their gates to him without resistance. These events are referred to in each of the two great divisions of the book of Isaiah, and in the latter Cyrus is hailed as the deliverer who will restore the Jews to their homes. The evidence of the Bible, however (with the exception of Ezra i., which is probably an inference drawn from the mention of Cyrus in the book of Isaiah), as well as of the cylinder inscription of Cyrus, is opposed to the supposition that there was any return of the Jews in the first years of his reign.

In the reign of Darius, who succeeded in 522, Zerubbabel was appointed governor of Judah, the Temple was rebuilt, and a scheme was mooted for fortifying Jerusalem—a scheme which aroused the suspicion of the Samaritans, who had for some time acknowledged Jerusalem as the legitimate sanctuary. The project was dropped for a while, but another attempt to rebuild the wall towards the middle of the following century brought upon Jerusalem an attack by Samaritans, Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites, in which the new wall was to a great extent demolished. Nemesis shortly overtook the Edomites and Moabites, whose country was harried by Arab invaders from the desert. This invasion is referred to in the book of Isaiah.

In 445 B.C. Nehemiah was appointed governor of Judah, and rebuilt the wall; and in 433 the Law, which had been edited by the Babylonian scribe Ezra, was formally published in Jerusalem, by which the Babylonian and Palestinian sections of the Jewish Church were united. Within a short time, however, the Samaritans seceded from Jerusalem, and built a temple for themselves on Mount Gerizim. The Egyptian Jews had not yet received the Law, and continued to offer sacrifices to Jehovah in Egypt.

During the last seventy years of Persian rule Judah, which was in a state of great poverty, appears to have been isolated from the surrounding nations. There is insufficient evidence to prove the theory that the Jews took part in the revolts against Artaxerxes Ochus.

In 332 Alexander the Great conquered Palestine and the isolation of the Jews was at an end. Under Alexander and the Ptolemies (under whose rule Judah passed at the end of the fourth century B.C.) the condition of the Jews was greatly improved. The Ptolemaic rule, however, was very distasteful to them, and in 193 they hailed Antiochus the Great as a deliverer. A prophecy belonging to the time of Alexander is that on Tyre in chap. xxiii., which has received later additions. The "seventy years" during which Tyre was forgotten may perhaps refer to the period of Ptolemaic rule in Tyre, as shown by the coins, viz., from 275 to 202 B.C.,

The first combination of the nucleus of the book of Isaiah (i.e., Isaiah's genuine prophecies) with prophecies of a later date probably took place during the generation following the publication of the Law in 433. At this time we may suppose the Babylonian elements to have been combined with the Palestinian.

June 11.—Lecture III.—Dr. S. H. Butcher in the chair.—The publication of the Law in the days of Nehemiah made it necessary to provide the people with regular instruction in that code. It was probably this need which led to the development of synagogues out of the informal meetings originally held at the prophets' houses. After the canonization of the written lōrā, the scribe, the litrālus, took the place of the prophet. The order of prophets survived till the second century B.C., but those who "wore the hairy mantle" were a degraded set, scorned by the better class of Jews. In consequence of the passing away of the old order there was a change in the religious literature of the Jews. Those who had a message to deliver now put it into the mouth of one of the saints of old—Job, Daniel, Enoch, &c.

The Egyptian Jews had not yet received the Law at the time of Alexander's conquest of Palestine and Egypt; but when, under the Ptolemies, the Jews of Palestine were brought into closer touch with their Egyptian brethren, they would try to bring them into line in matters of religion. Since the Egyptian Jews did not understand Hebrew, the Pentateuch was translated into Greek, and this translation, the so-called Septuagint, became the recognized version of the Law.

During the third century B.C. the condition of the Jewish Church improved greatly. In the following century, however, the gradual spread of Hellenism was producing an ever-widening rift in Judaism between those who welcomed Hellenic civilization and those who were opposed to it. The former represented for the most part the inhabitants of Jerusalem; the latter, who were known as Hasidim, the country districts of Judah. After the accession of Antiochus Epiphanes a Benjamite, Menelaus, got himself appointed High Priest in place of Jason, who had himself supplanted the rightful High Priest Orisali. Jason having attacked Menelaus, the nominee of Antiochus Epiphanes, and having put to death many of his supporters, was regarded by Antiochus as a rebel against his authority. Jason had been supported probably against Menelaus by the Hasidians, and it was upon these that the wrath of Antiochus fell. The religion of Jehovah was forbidden, an image of Olympian Zeus set up in the Temple, and the Jews were bidden to partake of sacrifices of swine's flesh. To the heathen practices introduced by the Hellenists there are several references in the book of Isaiah. The Hasidians, however, refused to comply with the king's command, and neither torture nor death could turn them from their purpose. At first they suffered unresistingly, but finally threw in their lot with the sons of Matthias (the Maccabees), who had raised the signal of revolt. After a struggle of three years the Maccabees were allowed to take possession of the Temple, and the Jews were left free in the exercise of their religion.

The Maccabees, however, continued the struggle, and by siding now with one, now with another of the rival kings of Syria, they obtained concession after concession. In 145 Simon was made strategos "from the Ladder of Tyre to the Border of Egypt"; in 148 the King of Syria renounced all claim to taxes or tribute; and in May, 161, the Syrian garrison surrendered.

It is to this period that we may assign the great outbursts of victory in Isaiah ix. as well as in other portions of the book. But this period is also remarkable for the realization among the Jews of the meaning of the trials through which they had passed. The Jewish Church had learnt the meaning of martyrdom. It was felt now that the Hasidim, who had been scorned as fools, might justly claim to be the true Israel. The nation, as it contemplated the sufferings of this true Israel, recognized that all the nation had been benefited by those sufferings: "He was wounded for our iniquities....and with his stripes we are healed."

The Chairman announced that Prof. George Adam Smith had been appointed Schweich Lecturer for 1910.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.—June 17.—Annual Meeting.—Sir Henry H. Howorth, President, in the chair.—The Council and the Hon. Treasurer submitted their reports as to the numerical and financial status of the Society, both being of a satisfactory nature.—The President presented to Mr. Herbert A. Grueber, Keeper of Coins and Medals, British Museum, the Silver Medal of the Society, which had been awarded to him for his services to numismatic science, more especially in connexion with the Roman, Mediæval, and British coins and medals, and as a token of the gratitude of the Fellows for the services he had rendered to the Society during his long tenure of office as one of its Secretaries.

The President then delivered his annual address, in which he gave a general sketch of the work of the Society, calling attention to many of the contributions published in The Numismatic Chronicle, most of which had been read and discussed at the meetings; he also commented on the principal numismatic publications of the past twelve months. In addition, mention was made of those Fellows whom the Society had lost by death during the past year.

A ballot having been taken for the Council and officers of the Society for the ensuing year, the following were elected: President, Sir Henry H. Howorth; Vice-Presidents, Mr. Herbert A. Grueber and Mr. Horace W. Monckton; Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Percy H. Webb; Librarian, Dr. Oliver Codrington; Hon. Secretaries, Mr. J. Allan and Mr. F. A. Walters.

LINNEAN.—June 17.—Sir Frank Crisp, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. W. B. Waterfall, Mrs. M. J. Longstaff, Mr. R. W. H. Row, and Mr. W. R. Price were admitted Fellows.—Mr. W. Dennis and Mr. E. J. Woodhouse were elected Fellows.—A letter congratulating Sir Joseph Hooker on his approaching ninety-second birthday was read from the chair, and signed by the Fellows present.—The first paper was by Mr. J. G. Otto Tepper, 'On the Growth of a Species of Battarea,' and was, in the absence of the author, read in title.—A paper by Sir John Murray, 'The Deposits in the Indian Ocean,' was epitomized by Mr. J. Stanley Gardiner, and spoken to by Mr. H. W. Monckton, Dr. Longstaff (visitor), and Prof. Dendy.—Mr. L. A. Borradaile read his paper 'The Sealark Penæidea, Stenopidea, and Reptantia,' upon which Mr. Stanley Gardiner added some remarks. The third paper on the same expedition was by Mr. T. Bainbridge Fletcher, 'The Sealark Lepidoptera,' a discussion followed, in which the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing, Prof. Dendy, and Dr. Longstaff engaged.—Mr. R. W. Harold Row explained the chief points of his paper entitled 'Report on the Porifera collected by Mr. C. Crossland in the Red Sea: Part I. Calcarea,' Prof. Dendy adding some remarks.—Mr. T. A. Sprague and Mr. J. Hutchinson contributed a paper on 'The African Species of Triumfetta, Linn.,' with lantern-slides. Mr. E. G. Baker expressed his satisfaction at this much-needed revision.—The remaining papers were taken as read, in the absence of the authors: 'New Species of Malesian and Philippine Ferns,' by Dr. H. Christ; and 'The Acaulescent Species of Malvastrum, A. Gray,' by Mr. A. W. Hill. The next meeting of the Society will be held on Thursday, November 4th.

METEOROLOGICAL.—June 16.—Mr. H. Mellish, President, in the chair.—A paper by Mr. R. C. Mossman, on 'The Interdiurnal Variability of Temperature in Antarctic and Sub-Antarctic Regions,' was read by the Secretary.—Mr. Ernest Gold described some experiments which he and Dr. W. Schmidt had made with a view of ascertaining if appreciable errors could enter into the temperatures recorded in balloon ascents, owing to errors in the alcohol-carbonic acid method of testing the apparatus.—Mr. L. C. W. Bonacina read a brief paper advocating the use of freely exposed thermometers in addition to sheltered ones.—This was the last meeting of the session.

HISTORICAL.—June 17.—Archdeacon Cunningham, President, in the chair.—The Alexander Medal was presented to Miss Neild, who read the successful essay on 'The Social and Economic Position of the Unfree Classes in England in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries.' The President spoke upon the subject of the paper, pointing out how local and particular economic conditions may have affected the villani upon different manors. Mr. Hall, Mr. Malden, and Mr. Boyd also spoke briefly.

Mr. Rangaswami-Aiyangar was elected a Fellow.—The auditors for the Fellows, Mr. Cato Worsfold and Dr. Foster Palmer, were re-elected.—The Secretary announced that the Society had recently bought several volumes of historical bibliography for the library, a complete list of which would be issued later.

PHYSICAL.—June 11.—Dr. C. Chree, President, in the chair.—A paper by Dr. Russell and Mr. A. Wright on 'The Arthur Wright Electrical Device for evaluating Formulæ and solving Equations' was read by Dr. Russell.—A paper on 'The Echelon Spectroscope: its Secondary Action and the Structure of the Green Mercury Line,' was read by Mr. H. Stansfield.—A paper entitled 'The Proposed International Unit of Candle Power' was read by Mr. C. C. Paterson.—A paper on 'Inductance and Resistance in Telephone and other Circuits' was read by Dr. J. W. Nicholson.—A 'Note on Terrestrial Magnetism,' by Mr. G. W. Walker, and a paper by Mr. A. Eagle, 'On the Form of the Pulses constituting Full Radiation or White Light,' were taken as read.

FARADAY.—June 15.—Dr. N. T. M. Wilmore in the chair.—Mr. E. R. Taylor, Chairman of the Conversation Committee of the American Electrochemical Society, delivered an address, which was profusely illustrated with lantern-slides, on 'The National and International Conservation of Water for Power.'—Mr. W. Fielding contributed a paper entitled 'The Formation of Silicon Sulphide in the Desulphurization of Iron.'—A Contribution to the Study of Electric Furnaces as applied to the Manufacture of Iron and Steel' was communicated by M. C. A. Keller.—M. Gustave Gin communicated a paper entitled 'Automatically Circulating Furnaces of the Gin Type for the Electrical Production of Steel.'

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

Mon. Geographical, 8.45.—'Exploration in the South Polar Region,' Lieut. E. H. Shackleton.
Tues. Anthropological Institute, 8.15.—'The Social Organization of the Andamanese,' Mr. A. R. Brown.
—Faraday, 7.45.—Annual Meeting; 'Researches on the Relative Rates of Migration of Ions in Aqueous Solution,' Mr. R. Beckett Denison; 'Apparatus for the Rapid Electro-analytical Separation of Metals,' Dr. H. J. S. Sand; 'The Conditions which Determine the Composition of Electro-deposited Alloys,' Mr. S. Field.

Science Gossip.

MR. GEORGE F. CHAMBERS, the author of 'A Handbook of Astronomy,' has told simply for general readers 'The Story of the Comets,' which the Oxford University Press will publish shortly.

THE SAME PRESS also announces a brief study entitled 'The Last Days of Charles II.' The chief object of the author, Dr. Raymond Crawford, has been to establish the true cause of the monarch's death, which historians have stated to be apoplexy.

NEXT WEDNESDAY is the latest date for receiving papers in the competition for the Status Prize of the Society of Engineers.

LAST week we alluded to the serious illness of Prof. Daniel John Cunningham, which terminated fatally on Wednesday morning, the 23rd inst. The son of Dr. John Cunningham, Principal of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, he was born at Crieff in 1850, educated there and at Edinburgh University, and graduated with first-class honours in 1874, taking the degree of M.D. in 1876. He was made Professor of Anatomy in the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, in 1882, and held the same position in Dublin University from 1883 till 1903, when he took the Edinburgh chair of the same subject. Among his publications are 'Manual of Practical Anatomy,' 'Monograph on the Marsupials' (Challenger Reports), and 'The Anatomy of Hernia' (with Prof. E. H. Bennett); while he was acting editor of The Journal of Anatomy and Physiology.

THERE is to be a special meeting of the Geographical Society at the Albert Hall on Monday next, when Lieut. Shackleton will discourse on 'Exploration in the South Polar Region.'

A COMET was discovered by M. Borrelly at Marseilles on the morning of the 15th inst., and independently by Mr. Daniel at Princeton, New Jersey, on the following morning. It was situated in the constellation Triangulum, and moving rapidly in a north-easterly direction, so that it is probably now in the eastern part of Andromeda, near its boundary with Perseus. Borrelly states that the brightness was about equal to that of a star of $10\frac{1}{2}$ magnitude. This will reckon as comet α , 1909, as the report of one said to have been found by Prof. Brooks at the end of last month seems to have been an error.

THE total eclipse of the moon on the morning of the 4th inst. was well observed in the South of France, and M. Montangerand of Toulouse (who made experiments on the photographic effects) states that the reddish colour during totality was very sensible to the naked eye.

M. EGINTIS, Director of the Observatory at Athens, has made a new determination of its latitude, the mean result of which is $37^{\circ} 58' 19.5''$, about a second less than that of M. Hartl, quoted in 'The Nautical Almanac.'

FINE ARTS

EARTHWORKS.

Earthwork of England. By A. Hadrian Allcroft. (Macmillan & Co.)

Ancient Earthworks. By J. Charles Wall. (Talbot.)

THE considerable attention that has been given to ancient earthworks during the last few years is reflected in the two books before us. The one is a substantial volume of upwards of 700 pages, the other a much smaller handbook. Both of them, however, in their respective degrees are of considerable merit.

Mr. Allcroft's volume is most thorough, and is the work of a careful scholar who has given long and painstaking attention to the subject. One of the good results of the establishment of an annual Congress of Archaeological Societies has been the formation of a special committee to deal with ancient earthworks and fortified enclosures. This committee has done excellent work during the last decade in drawing up schemes for the rough classification of earthworks, and in promoting their treatment by the various provincial associations. Further steps in the right direction have been also taken through the enterprise of the general editor and publishers of the Victoria County Histories, for they have included the earthworks of each county within their syllabus. To these facts Mr. Allcroft gratefully alludes in his Preface, and we are entirely with him in thinking that the intentions of the committee will be materially furthered by the putting forth of such a work as this, which the author, far too modestly, designates "an elementary textbook."

It is true, however, that the scientific investigation of earthworks is still in its infancy, and the writer has done wisely in trying to confine himself to a simple statement of facts, "with no more of theory than is needed to array these facts in orderly and readable sequence." Hitherto there has been much vague guesswork. Even the Ordnance Survey maps have not got much further than calling a circular earthwork "British" and a rectangular one "Roman." Not infrequently ramparts and trenches which have now been proved, through excavation, to be of mediæval date, have been credited with prehistoric significance. But occasionally excavations have reversed matters, and proved the far greater antiquity of entrenchments to which generally accepted traditions had assigned later dates. Thus General Pitt-Rivers was able to show that the great Danes Dyke, enclosing an area of five square miles by Flamborough Head, was of a far earlier origin than is denoted by the popular name.

Mr. Allcroft, in his most useful work, follows, for the most part, the order adopted by the Committee of the Archaeological Societies. Promontory forts form the first class, but the mistake must not be made of imagining that such forts as occupy the extremities of headlands, spurs, or peninsulas, relying for defence chiefly upon the natural features of their position, are all of the same type or probable date. It is here pointed out how greatly such forts differ in their nature and plan, for they are found on examination to display the almost endless variety and individuality which are "amongst the first charms of the study of earthwork." This type of fort, however, is bound to have certain common features; the part, for instance, of them which is artificial, whether large or small, is always subsidiary to that which is natural. The artificial additions may be only a score or two of yards in extent, or they may form upwards of half the circuit of the fortress. Again, the artificial defence may vary from a single slight vallum to as many as half a dozen of most formidable proportions. A considerable number of these promontory forts are cliff-castles on the seaboard. The Cornish coast supplies many such examples of the greatest variety. Tintagel, rising abruptly some 300 ft. out of the Atlantic, was doubtless held as a fort many centuries before the date of the ruins of the Norman keep now extant. Treryn Castle, a headland which reaches a height of some 250 ft., is cut off from the mainland to the north by a triple line of entrenchments which still rise, in places, to a height of 15 ft. On the other hand, the beautiful promontory of Rame Head, which juts out on the west side of Plymouth Sound, has but a single line of now shallow entrenchment across the narrowest part of the isthmus. Strange to say, Rame Head was omitted in the account of these Cornish cliff-castles given in the Victoria County History. Its mention by Mr. Allcroft is one of many proofs that he is never content to be a mere copyist. Another remarkable Cornish example is that of Trevalgey Head, two miles east of Newquay; it is in reality an island, separated from the mainland by a chasm 20 ft. in width; but the approach to this chasm is covered by four successive lines of banks and ditches, whilst beyond the chasm, and on the island itself, are three other lines of defence.

There are also a large number of inland forts of this description, which depended mainly for their safety upon their more or less precipitous situation, or upon the impassable character of their surroundings, although at the present day there may remain but little trace of water or swampy ground. Under this head, Mr. Allcroft discusses the fortress known as Carl's Wark, near Hathersage, Derbyshire, which is eminently defensible, being protected on three sides, not merely by the declivity of the ground, but also by the extent of boggy soil at the foot of the slopes. At the western end, where the fall of the ground is slight, the entrance is barred by a ditch and earthen rampart 18 ft. thick and 150 ft. in length; this rampart was originally faced throughout with unmortared stone. In connexion with Derbyshire forts of this stamp, we regret that Mr. Allcroft does not discuss the still more interesting promontory fort known as Markland Grips Camp, in the parish of Elinton, which is one of the most remarkable and peculiar examples of this class in the whole kingdom. Its very existence had been almost forgotten until Dr.

Cox recently drew attention to it at some length in the Victoria County History. In this place two "grips," or sudden depressions in the ground, flanked on both sides by low limestone cliffs, each occupied by a stream, unite at a point where there is now a considerable mill-dam. The triangular, or tongue-shaped piece of tableland enclosed between these diverging grips was seized upon by early man as a place marked out by nature for defensive purposes, and he flung three great ramparts, with corresponding fosses, across the open western base of the triangle. We can only suppose that Mr. Alleroft has not found time to visit Markland Grips, but we venture to hope that he will do this before a second edition is required. On the whole, he is to be distinctly commended for restricting himself to the discussion of earthworks with which he is himself familiar. He might, however, have given lists of those which have not been visited. It is stated with much truth in the Preface that "there are few more fertile sources of error than a tacit acceptance of the descriptions of others. No matter how excellent and accurate those descriptions may be, to attempt to make use of them at second hand is to do injustice to them and to betray one's own lack of thoroughness."

Equally particular attention is given in the subsequent chapters to the following subjects: Contour Forts, Plateau Forts and Simple Enclosures, Some Principles of Prehistoric Fortification, The Primitive Homestead, Dewponds, Roman Camps, Roman Stations, Saxon and Danish Earthworks, Norman Castles, The Moated Homestead, Dykes and Ditches, and Miscellaneous Earthworks. The last two sections deal with Earthwork Archaeology as applied in detail respectively to the South Downs and to Dolebury upon the Mendips. The plans and illustrations of this most practical volume amount to 224. The whole book marks a momentous departure in scientific archaeology.

It must not, however, be supposed that the volume is flawless. There are some curious blunders, but they are not sufficiently frequent to detract materially from the high opinion we have formed of the work as a whole. These blemishes ought to be removed in the probable event of a second edition. Mr. Alleroft states that he only describes after personal investigation, but Silchester, strange to say, must be the exception to this rule. He assures us that "though the last stone of Calleva (Silchester) disappeared from view long years ago, the great British earthworks which ringed the town still remain almost intact." This is not so, as the visitor to Silchester is well aware. It is also incorrect to write of Wimbledon camp as destroyed by the modern builder. Again, "sandstone" should surely be substituted for "chalk" in Mr. Alleroft's remarks about Hastings.

We have only space for a few words about Mr. J. C. Wall's much smaller book upon the same subject. Mr. Wall is well qualified to write upon this topic, for he was in many ways an assistant and helpmate to the late Mr. Chalkley Gould, the leading expert on this branch of archaeology. Mr. Wall, too, has been chosen by the general editor of the Victoria County Histories to write the earthwork essays of various counties. This little book is one of a new cheap series called "The Antiquary's Primers," which are intended to give elementary, but accurate information. This example of the series can be recommended. It is written throughout in a singularly clear style, and its value is materially increased by the inclusion of no fewer than sixty-nine illustrations and plans.

SCULPTURE AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

THIS year's output of sculpture, as shown at Burlington House, is distinctly inferior to the rather interesting display of twelve months ago. The essays in monumental work are mainly by artists of a generation peculiarly lacking in monumental qualities, and appear often to be inspired by the ideals of the Tottenham Court Road statuette; while the smaller work has the slightness which is perhaps to be expected from artists working in sad lack of patronage.

Our living artists are handicapped by the few chances they have to dispose of their work. It is strange that painters in this country have no commissions except from the private buyer—sculptors none except of a public character; and while the latter are doubtless in the more enviable position, yet the neglect of the statuette cannot be counted as a healthy sign, and as anything contributing to the maintenance of this state of things is important, we may be permitted to deplore the misunderstanding which has cut off the sculptor from exhibiting at one of the largest exhibitions outside London, which, in the natural order of things, should prove one of his likeliest markets for work of this sort.

Sir George Frampton's small figure La Belle Dame sans Merci (1833) reminds us of the considerable talent for the making of statuettes which is lying dormant for want of encouragement, and we congratulate the artist on emerging at last from a course of posthumous portraiture. The latter class of work does not stimulate the inventive powers, and this statuette is a little wanting in physiognomy; but it is an accomplished piece of modelling with a pleasant, if slightly mannered grace. Mr. Mackennal's small group Tragedy enveloping Comedy (1779) shows a similar talent, not quite so highly developed and with a rather more obvious prettiness. Mr. Henry Poole's Rhodope (1713) displays rather more vitality and more complete utilization of every detail to enforce the unity of the pose. See, for example, the value of the left foot in this figure, which for all its naturalism has qualities of design. In these works, as well as in Mr. Mackennal's obviously attractive Lady Diana Manners (1827), a rather more than adequate importance is attached to suave and fluent handling. Mr. David McGill's Peace (1755) and Mr. Havard Thomas's Terpsis (1792) are more scholarly in aim. The former is one of the best figures in the Academy, the work of a genuine primitive, akin to Mr. Cayley Robinson in painting by his austere avoidance of attractive accident and his patient, precise execution, which has a sensuous charm of its own. Mr. Thomas's statuette is better in plan than in touch—very definitely designed, but cloying and soapy in surface, as though worked and reworked to a deadly smoothness which misses the quiet life-likeness of Mr. McGill's finely wrought "stipple" of minute touches.

Turning from these to the works of larger scale, we must confess that Mr. Hodge's Prosperity (1655) is rather a disappointment. There is some feeling for the lounging gait of the beast, but the figure is wooden, and the fears which we expressed last year lest this young artist should stultify his powers of design by insufficient study of nature appear to be well founded. Between the careful and often learned modelling of Armstead and the vigorous design of Mr. Hodge's best works there was an insipid interval, and it is a little unfortunate that it is this interval which is represented by Mr.

Brock in the most important monumental work of the time. Within the limits implied by such an adjective we can see how respectable is Mr. Brock's work if we compare his group Justice (1641), or the reliefs (already unveiled) on the base of the same Victoria memorial of which this is part, with such an extraordinary performance as Mr. Drury's Fine Arts (1634) for Vauxhall Bridge. It is one of the ironies of fate that his popularity as a designer of portrait busts of pretty children should have foisted upon this sculptor work for which he is fundamentally unfitted. Mr. Brock's models are at all events more compact and have a certain unity of scale.

The other important works are of the nature of Exhibition pieces, which, if of less public interest than the work destined for use in an architectural scheme, have yet a certain validity so long as we regard art galleries as temples for momentary indulgence in an æstheticism which we find unwelcome in our daily life. Adapted to the rarefied air we breathe in these our better moments, they tend to a somewhat negative decorum. Mr. Derwent Wood's Atalanta (1828) being a superior example, Mr. Pomeroy's Feronia (1824) a rougher. Atalanta's contours are all clean and carefully finished, but this insistence on contour is purchased at the price of continuity between contour lines and certain inner lines of the figure, which would offer a more powerful and more plastic rhythm. The brilliance of these inner lines is sacrificed to smoothness. The artist prefers the many forms which make for elaborate finish to the fewer which make for emphasis. The articulation of plane with plane wants crispness, being blurred in that desire to moderate rather than intensify nature which is natural to the artist who works for a public on its good behaviour. This dulling of form is more noticeable in Mr. Pomeroy's statue because of its less refined mood, and thus it reminds us of the living statues which are clothed in "fleshings." Mr. Henry Poole's Nymph (1832) shows more vitality than these in the modelling of the head and the upper part of the figure, but again the form clogs at the hips and knees—the points precisely at which, as the centres of the poise of the figure, the rhythm should be strongest. The eye thus cannot whip round the figure, and the head strikes one as characteristic, but not part of a strong dynamic scheme. Mr. Harold Parker's Prometheus Chained (1825) makes pretence at such dynamic quality; but while the planes of the figure are boldly set in space, the problem of distributing the muscular strain is not dealt with. We are offered a paroxysm of mechanical rigidity in which every muscle starts out. It may be argued that this is possible from a naturalistic point of view, but we submit that with no grouping of strain we get no statue but a diagram. As a juvenile performance this would be promising enough, but the artist last year showed maturer powers.

Two respectable memorial works are Mr. Goscombe John's Late Bishop Lewis (1742) and Mr. Pomeroy's recumbent effigy to the Late Bishop Lloyd of Newcastle-on-Tyne (1823). In the latter the hands seem to have escaped the attention of the artist, but the miniature angels nursing the bishop's feet are prettily conceived. Among the better busts are Mrs. H. Percy Adams (1692), by Mr. Charles Pibworth; Robert Fowler, Esq. (1701), by Mr. Derwent Wood; The Hon. Blanche Tollemache (1717), by Mr. Arthur G. Walker; and The late Dr. Mandell Creighton, Bishop of London (1778), by Mr. Hamo Thornycroft.

OTHER EXHIBITIONS.

IN the Pastel Society's show at the Institute Galleries in Piccadilly the most refined and acceptable work is not always that which is best conceived in the spirit of the medium. We might be tempted to propose, for example, Signor Leonetto Capiello's Pastels pour Affiches (66, 67, 68) as examples of the proper use of pastel, but that they are tasteless and extravagant, and in only one instance (66) show the most rudimentary capacity for design. On the other hand, Mr. J. R. K. Duff is imitative, over-conscientious — everything that seems unsuitable in the pastellist, yet wins us by his sincerity and thoroughness, and is, indeed, more successful in the almost Ruskinian actuality of Under the Trees (78) than in other works conceived more in the spirit of Impressionism. Seriousness of intention and tact in matters technical meet, however, in Mr. John Swan's superb Jaguars (243), a masterly example of this Degas among animal painters. We should be wise, perhaps, to accept such work as this as the summit of his achievement in painting rather than seek for it in his work in oil. Mr. Cayley Robinson is at once serious and stylish, and another source of strength to the Society. His work, however, we have previously noticed, as well as the landscape notes of Mr. Simon Bussy and Mr. Livens's powerful little study The Storm (7). Both the latter artists have some affinity with the late Mr. Brabazon, who is represented here, but hardly at his best. To exhibit such a poor thing as No. 49 marks surely the limit of futility. Le Livre d'Images (181), by M. Castaing, and the work of Mr. Muhrman are among the more artistic exhibits.

A livelier note, and one not unwelcome, is struck by M. Minartz in his four drawings (80-83) devoted to the charms of modern fashionable Parisiennes. He fills here the rôle Helleu used to play in the exhibitions of the Society of Painter-Etchers. Miss Anna Airy in The Palace of Indolence shows that her imagination is as yet in that rudimentary stage which consists in putting things together on paper which are apart in life.

At the Baillie Gallery the drawings of Mr. T. L. Shoosmith exhibit some sense of structure in the methodical marshalling of tones. The sense of natural structure which should show itself in draughtsmanship is not, however, proportionately developed, so that the artist threatens to fall into the empty trickiness of the less satisfactory painters of the modern Dutch School. Miss Mima Nixon has found Dutch gardens too gaudy for her powers of harmonizing. The exceptions are two drawings of the gardens at Het Loo, wherein a lavish use of black brings welcome relief.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

THE first purchase made out of the sum of 99,909*l.* bequeathed by Col. Temple West about two years ago to the National Gallery is 'A Scene from the Beggar's Opera' (No. 2437) by Hogarth. The picture has been bought from Mr. John Murray, and was painted about 1728 or 1730. It is thus one of Hogarth's earliest paintings, and belongs to the same period as the 'Wanstead Assembly.' In the centre of the composition are Walker as Macbeath, Hall as Lockitt, and Hippisley as Peachum, the female characters being Mrs. Eggleton as Lucy, and Lavinia Fenton as Polly Peachum. The scene depicted is from Act III of the play, which was first performed at Lincoln's Inn Fields in 1727. Prominent among the audience to the right are the Duke of Bolton (who afterwards married Miss Fenton) Major Paunceford, Sir Robert Fagg, Rich the manager, Cock the auctioneer, and Gay the author. Lady Jane Cook, Anthony Henley, Lord Gage, Sir Conyers D'Arcy, and Sir Thomas Robins are seen on the left. The scene is laid in Newgate, and Capt. Macbeath is singing.

Which way shall I turn me? How shall I decide?

The picture, which was exhibited at the Whitechapel Art Gallery in 1906 (No. 60) and at the Old Masters last year (No. 85), was painted for Sir Archibald Grant of Monymusk. It was afterwards in the possession of Dr. Monkhouse of Queen's College, Oxford, from the heirs of whose family it was, as we learn from Mr. Dobson's 'William Hogarth,' purchased in 1834 by Mr. John Murray, the grandfather of its recent owner. Another version belonging to the Duke of Leeds is at Hornby Castle.

A 'River Scene' (No. 2439) by Théodore Rousseau has been presented by Mr. Hans Velten. It was formerly in the collection of M. Pecarère, and afterwards belonged to the late Sir John C. Day, at the sale of whose pictures last month (No. 110) it was purchased by Mr. Velten. The picture was exhibited at Wolverhampton in 1902. It is temporarily hung on one of the screens which have in the last few days been placed in the Umbrian Room. Those of the French pictures which will for the next few months be exhibited now hang on screens in this room.

Owing to building operations the water-colours and sketches by Turner have been removed from the Eastern Ground Floor Rooms, and placed among the Arundel Society's reproductions on the other side of the Gallery.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 18th inst. the modern pictures and drawings belonging to the late Mr. John Hick. Pictures: W. P. Frith, Claude Duval, 110*l.* P. Nasmyth, Landscape, with a pool in the foreground, three figures on a winding road beyond, 225*l.* B. West, Cupid and Psyche, 110*l.* Drawings: C. Fielding, Naworth Castle, 54*l.* S. Prout, The Market-Place, Prague, 73*l.* The Doge's Palace, Venice, 68*l.* F. Tayler, Hunting in the Olden Time, 54*l.*

The following were from another collection. Drawings: Birket Foster, In the Market-Place, Verona, 504*l.*; A Highland Scene, near Dalmally, 577*l.*; Watering Horses and Cattle, 189*l.*; A Mercer's Shop at Dol, Brittany, 136*l.*; Frimley Green, near Farnborough, 162*l.*; Hollin Lane Cottage, near Egham Road, 157*l.*; The Hayfield, 210*l.*; A Lane in Surrey, 304*l.*; The Pigsty, 89*l.*; At the Spring, 173*l.*; Coming down the Hill, 147*l.*; Washing-Day, 78*l.*; A Donkey Ride, 115*l.*; Gibraltar, 84*l.*; Naples, 120*l.*; Lago Lugano, 68*l.*; Florence, 57*l.*; The Capitol, Rome, 63*l.*; Wasserburg, Lake Constance, 60*l.* Sir J. Gilbert, The Fiddler, 50*l.* E. J. Gregory, The Doom of the Ditch-Flowers, 89*l.*

Pictures: T. S. Cooper, Cattle and Sheep, in a pasture near a thatched shed, 105*l.*; Cows, Sheep, and Milkmaids, on a hillside, 105*l.* E. Crofts, Prince Rupert and his Staff at Marston Moor, 231*l.* J. W. Godward, On the Terrace, 110*l.* E. Blair Leighton, Where there's a Will there's a Way, 126*l.* Sir L. Alma Tadema, After the Drive, 115*l.*

Messrs. Christie sold on the 21st inst. engravings of the Early English School, the property of Messrs. C. Feldwicke & Sons of Brighton: Outside of a Country Ale-house, after J. Ward, by W. Ward, 42*l.* Lady Rushout and Daughter, after A. Kauffman, by Burke, 25*l.* Mrs. Benwell, after Engleheart, by W. Ward, 39*l.* Alinda, by and after W. Ward, 39*l.* Compassionate Children, after J. Ward, by W. Ward, 39*l.* The Citizen's Retreat, by and after the same, 36*l.* A Christmas Gambol, and A Christmas Holiday, after J. R. Smith (a pair), 65*l.* The Months, after W. Hamilton, by Bartolozzi and Gardiner, the set of twelve ovals, in bistre (six open-letter proofs), 63*l.*; the same, printed in colours, 325*l.* The Cries of London, after Wheatley, the set of thirteen, 546*l.* After Morland: Children Fishing, and Gathering Blackberries, by P. Dawe, 56*l.*; Childish Amusement, and Youth diverting Age, by Grozer and Dickinson, 58*l.*; Inside of a Country Ale-house, by W. Ward, 116*l.*; Juvenile Navigators, by the same, 30*l.*; Guinea-Pigs, and Dancing Dogs, by T. Gauguin (a pair), 118*l.*; Travellers, and Cottagers, by W. Ward (a pair), 86*l.*

The following were from other properties: Lady Hamilton as Nature, after Romney, by J. R. Smith, 65*l.* Miss Farren, after Lawrence, stipple by F. Bartolozzi, 44*l.* Almeria, after Opie, by J. R. Smith, 84*l.* After Morland: Rural Amusement, and Rustic Employment, by J. R. Smith (a pair), 241*l.*; Guinea Pigs, and Dancing Dogs, by T. Gauguin (a pair), 77*l.*; Selling Fish, and The Fisherman's Hut, by J. R. Smith (a pair), 54*l.* Lady Hamilton as a Bacchante, after Romney, by Appleton, 31*l.* Countess Gower and Child, after Lawrence, by S. Cousins, 37*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

ONE of the fundamental problems of the early history of oil painting, the identity of the so-called Maître de Flémalle, is solved by Prof. G. Hulin de Loo in The Burlington Magazine for July. The key to the mystery is a picture belonging to Messrs. Duveen, and painted in 1434 by Jaques Daret. In the same number M. Peraté concludes his description of the Portrait Exhibition in Paris; Mr. E. Alfred Jones has a finely illustrated paper on 'Drinking Horns and Silver Plate in Denmark'; while an unsigned article criticizes the prominent members of the New English Art Club and the International Society. Mr. Herbert F. Cook publishes some remarkable works of the Early Portuguese School; and Dr. Frederick Sarre discusses the portrait of a Turkish prince, attributed to Gentile Bellini. A chronological study of Jan Steen's works at Messrs. Dowdeswell's is illustrated by a photogravure plate of the Duke of Rutland's 'Grace before Meat.' Rembrandt, two works attributed to the youthful Vermeer of Delft, pictures recently sold by the King of the Belgians, and Oriental faience are the subjects of shorter papers. The editorial article advocates the immediate formation of a reserve fund, on the lines recently suggested by the King, to control the exodus of English art treasures.

THE PHOTOGRAPHIC SALON holds its annual show at the rooms of the Royal Water-Colour Society from September 10th to October 23rd. Monday, August 30th, is the receiving day.

BURNE-JONES'S 'Love's Wayfaring,' or 'The Car of Love,' has lately been presented to the Victoria and Albert Museum by Lady Burne-Jones. The picture, which is very large and unfinished, has been hung on the South-West Staircase.

THE purchase of Leighton's picture 'The Death of Brunelleschi' has been concluded, and the work is now added to the permanent collection in Leighton House.

THE representatives of the National Art-Collections Fund moved on the 24th inst. from 47, Victoria Street to Nos. 98 and 99, Queen Anne's Chambers, Broadway, Westminster.

WE are sorry to notice the death on Tuesday last of Mr. E. J. Gregory, R.A., President of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours. Originally in an engineer's office at Southampton, he joined the local art school, and was aided by the advice of Sir Hubert Herkomer. Mr. Gregory went on to the South Kensington Art School, and did black and white for The Graphic. He first made a reputation in water colour, but later won success as a painter of portraits and typical scenes of modern life such as 'Boulter's Lock.'

THE MUNICIPAL COUNCIL OF PARIS has issued its list of annual purchases at the various Salons. From the Salon des Artistes Français it has acquired 'Les Modistes,' by M. Bédorez; 'La Roche de Loguivy,' by M. Brugairolles; 'Bonheur d'Humble,' by Mlle. Elisabeth Gay; 'Villeneuve-lès-Avignon,' by M. Joubert; and others. At the Salon of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts it has purchased 'Un Berger dans la Crau,' by M. Montenard, and 'Béguinage à Terremonde,' by M. Villaerté. M. Dujardin-Beaumetz, on the part of the Government, appalled apparently by the number of annual purchases which now encumber various local museums, has adopted the commendable system of awarding "récompenses" in money, varying from 500 to 1,000 francs, to artists whose work seems to call for encouragement; and thirty-nine artists, sculptors, engravers, and architects, this year receive this official patronage.

THE Bollettino d'Arte (Fasc. I-II., 1909) contains an article by Signor Umberto Gnoli on the date of Lo Spagna's death. Giovanni di Pietro, called Lo Spagna, is known to have executed frescoes in the apse of the small church of S. Giovanni Battista, near Eggi, the castle built by Cardinal Alborno, not far from Spoleto. They were mentioned by Crowe and Cavalcaselle as long ago as 1866, and ascribed to the master, but the date of their production was unknown. Signor Gnoli has now discovered beneath the principal composition a dated inscription which, though much injured, he has been able to decipher as follows: (Questa) OPERA LA FATTA FARE LI HEREDI DE ANTONIO DE RVFINO ADI X DE IVLIV A.D. MD XXXII. The painter's death has hitherto been variously placed by art-historians in 1528, or before 1530. From this newly discovered inscription we learn that it could not have taken place until after July 10th, 1532. By October 28th, 1533, he was certainly dead, as mention is then made of his widow.

SIGNOR GNOLI also shows that Bernardino Campilius could not have been a pupil of Lo Spagna, as stated by Crowe and Cavalcaselle. His signed work in the Gallery at Spoleto proves him to have been an imitator of Pinturicchio, and the date 1502, which it bears, excludes the possibility of Campilius having been taught by Lo Spagna, who at that date was probably still in the workshop of Perugino.

EXHIBITIONS.

- SAT. (June 26).—The late H. B. Brabazon's Water-Colours, Goupil Gallery.
 — Ford Madox Brown's Collected Works, Leicester Galleries.
 — Esperanto Vagabond Club's Exhibition of Arts and Crafts, Messrs. Marchant's Gallery.
 — Sir Francis Carruthers Gould's Westminster Cartoons and Drawings of 'Froissart's Modern Chronicles,' Walker's Gallery.
 — Pictures, Miniatures, &c., by Modern Artists and Craft-Workers, St. George's Gallery.
 — Miss E. M. Rope's Bas-Reliefs, &c., Private View, St. George's Gallery.
 — Water-Colours of Maderia and Algiers by Lady Victoria Manners, and Portrait Miniatures by Miss W. Hope Thomson, Messrs. Graves's Galleries.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN.—Production of Charpentier's 'Louise.'

It is more than nine years since M. Gustave Charpentier's 'Louise' was produced at the Paris Opéra Comique. The work has been performed in Germany, Italy, and America, but it was given for the first time at Covent Garden on Friday, the 18th inst. It is described as a "Musical Romance," and the libretto was written by the composer. The title seems not altogether suitable. It is a drama rather than a romance, while in the first and last acts music plays but a secondary part.

The story is simple. Louise, a working-girl at a dressmaker's establishment, is in love with the artist Julien. Her parents, homely, practical folk, do not think the match suitable, and refuse his request for the hand of their daughter; the latter, however, leaves home and lives with Julien. The mother induces her to return and cheer her father, who is dangerously ill. The latter pleads with her to abandon her lover, but in vain; she defies him, so that at last, wild with anger, he bids her begone. She rushes out of the door; then his passion gives way to pity. He calls "Louise, Louise!" but there comes no answer. The book is in many respects powerful, and one can feel in it a thoroughly modern spirit of freedom. Louise decides to live her own life.

The scene is laid at Montmartre, and M. Charpentier depicts in vivid, realistic manner the characters of Bohemian life. There is a strange mixture of the real and the ideal in the opera. The second act, with its rag-picker, coal-gatherer, street-sweeper, milkwomen, and rowdy philosophers, the "Cortège du Plaisir," gives strong pictures of life on the Butte Montmartre; and the contrast between them and the humble home, with its menial work and lack of excitement, is striking, and helps the audience to feel the forces moulding the girl's character and conduct. Her father loved her, but his well-meant advice to be prudent was powerless against the freedom and pleasure of which she had had a foretaste.

A struggle had been going on between love and obedience to her parents, and the desires of her own heart; but the stern attitude of the former, who wished to bend the girl's will to their own, caused the flame of revolt to burst out with sudden violence.

We speak first of the book. It is a problem-play, and though the music is interesting, and at times extremely clever, the play is the thing that attracts chief attention, as in the recently discussed 'Pelléas et Mélisande'; moreover, even in scenes such as that in the dressmaker's room, in which the skill both of the writing and orchestration is remarkable, the music per se would have no meaning; in actual character, however, it is more allied to Bizet and Puccini than to the ultra-modern French school.

An excellent performance was given of the work under the direction of M. Frigara. M. Dalmores, the Julien, was very good; so also was Madame Edvina, except that once or twice her voice was not quite equal to the demands made on it; Mlle. Bérat impersonated the mother satisfactorily. The great figure in the first and last acts was the father, and in that rôle M. Gilibert, both as singer and actor, was most impressive.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Handel - Mendelssohn Festival.

THE HANDEL-MENDELSSOHN FESTIVAL opened on Tuesday with 'Elijah.' That oratorio certainly represents Mendelssohn at his strongest, but 'The Messiah' is greater; hence it was perhaps wise to postpone the latter until to-day. Both oratorios are so familiar that conductors are often inclined to dispose of them very quickly at rehearsals. Dr. F. H. Cowen, however, was determined that the rendering of 'Elijah' should, on this anniversary year of the composer's birth, be a memorable one, and he succeeded in his aim. He had at his disposal an exceptionally fine choir, and the choral singing was intelligent, dignified, and expressive. Of the principal soloists it will be sufficient to give the names: Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Ben Davies, and Sir Charles Santley. The last-named, owing to his long connexion with the Palace Festivals, received a special welcome.

HIS MAJESTY'S (Afternoon Performances).
 —Miss Smyth's 'The Wreckers.'

MISS ETHEL SMYTH's opera 'Der Wald,' produced at Dresden in 1901, and at Covent Garden in the following year, was a work of considerable promise. She composed her own libretto, which, together with the music, showed both imagination and skill. In 1906 another opera from her pen, 'Strandrecht,' was produced at Leipsic, and on Tuesday afternoon a first hearing of it in England was given at His Majesty's Theatre in English, under the title 'The Wreckers.' The Leipsic performance was noticed in these columns; moreover, much of the music was heard at a concert under the direction of Herr Nikisch, given in Queen's Hall a year ago. To judge the work fairly, it was, however, necessary to witness a stage performance.

The libretto by Mr. H. B. Brewster offers excellent opportunities for music, and of these Miss Smyth has taken some, if not full, advantage. Among the good features of her work may be mentioned the earnestness of the music, and the boldness with which what may be called Wagnerian lines are followed; also the effective contrast between the revivalist music and that assigned to preacher Pascoe, and the love-scenes and dramatic moments of the story. Miss Smyth, on the other hand, does not work steadily up to a great climax. Now and again there are excellent pages, but there are others in which the hand rather than the heart was engaged; so that interest, when excited, is not steadily maintained. If judicious cuts were made by the composer, the work would gain; and, though probably Miss Smyth will not agree with us, these could easily be effected.

Tuesday's performance was on the whole good. The principal artists were Madame de Vere Sapio (Thirza), Miss Elizabeth Amsden (Avis), Mr. John Coates (Mark), Mr. Arthur Winckworth (Pascoe), and Mr. Lewys James (Lawrence), all more or less successful. Mr. Beecham conducted his orchestra with marked ability and tact.

Musical Gossip.

WE are sorry to note the death, in Edinburgh, on Saturday last, of Mr. Learmont Drysdale, whose name has for some years been prominently identified with the younger school of Scottish composers. Mr. Drysdale was a brilliant student of the Royal Academy of Music, where he won the Charles Lucas Medal for Composition. Later, he carried off the Glasgow Society of Musicians' prize of thirty guineas for the best overture with his 'Tam o'Shanter,' which was performed under Manns's direction both at Glasgow and at the Crystal Palace. Among other orchestral works of Mr. Drysdale were the fine 'Herondeau' Overture and 'A Border Ballad,' written for Mr. Henry J. Wood's orchestra. At the time of his death Mr. Drysdale had virtually completed the score of a grand opera to a libretto by the Duke of Argyll.

THE sudden death is announced of Giuseppe Martucci, a talented composer, pianist, and conductor, who was appointed director of the Liceo Musicale, Bologna, in 1886, and of the R. Conservatorio, Naples, in 1902. He was born at Capua in 1856, and studied at Naples. Of his two symphonies, No. 1 in D minor was performed at the Royal College of Music in 1898. He also wrote two pianoforte concertos and much chamber music. At Bologna his eclectic programmes included works by British composers. He was the first to give 'Tristan und Isolde' in Italy; this was in 1888. In 1875 he paid a visit to England.

'LES HUGUENOTS' was given at Covent Garden on Monday evening, and with an excellent cast. Madame Tétrazini, Fräulein Destinn, and Signor Zenatello, as Margarita, Valentina and Raoul respectively—who, by the way, appeared in the same parts in last year's performance—were all successful. The voice of the last named was somewhat rough in the duet "Beltà divina," but this soon passed off. In addition M. Journet was San Bris; Signor Scotti, De Nevers; and Miss Alice O'Brien a pleasing Page. Signor Campanini conducted. It would be interesting to hear, if only for once, the complete opera, i.e., with the fifth act, and the cuts in the previous acts restored.

THE VIENNA PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY has elected Herr Felix Weingartner as conductor during the forthcoming season.

THE BEECHAM ORCHESTRA has been engaged for a tour in the United States, and this will be the first English orchestra to cross the Atlantic.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

MON.-SAT.	Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
—	Drury Lane Opera.
MON.	Mr. Vernon Warner's Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
—	Mlle. Germaine Cornelis's Harp Recital, 5, Steinway Hall.
—	Mlle. Bessie Mark's Orchestral Concert, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
TUES.	Mr. Gordon Cleather's Vocal Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
—	Mr. Macmillen's Violin Recital, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
—	Mr. Arthur Newstead's Pianoforte Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
WED.	Mr. Édouard Gorceaux's Recital, 3.15, Salle Erard.
—	Miss Philosophoff and M. Barjansky's Vocal and 'Cello Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Miss Ruby Helder's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Queen's Hall (Small).
—	Miss E. Lewis's Concert, 8.30, Steinway Hall.
—	M. Léon de Sousa's Soirée, 8.45, Bechstein Hall.
THURS.	Mr. Theodore Byard's Concert, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. A. Fransella's Flute Recital, 8.15, Queen's Hall (Small).
FRI.	Mr. Louis Bachner's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
—	Miss Elsie Playfair's Violin Recital, 3, St. James's Hall.
SAT.	Mr. Mark Hambourg's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

ADELPHI.—M. Guitry in 'L'Assommoir.'

AMONG the compensations with which the theatre provides its devotees for the occasional and inevitable hours of dullness it inflicts there is none which the playgoer by temperament snatches at more eagerly than the chances afforded of comparing and contrasting the methods of different actors as applied to the same material. Londoners have been granted such an opportunity during the past week at the Adelphi, where M. Guitry—to be considered, surely, now that Coquelin is dead, the leader of his profession in France—has been appearing in a part which English audiences associate with Charles Warner.

Death unfortunately has robbed us of the pleasure of renewing our impressions of the English actor's Coupeau, but his performance in 'Drink' was repeated so recently that it must still be fresh in the memory of our public. Accepting the piece frankly as melodrama—though in strict truth 'L'Assommoir' is not a play, but a series of highly coloured pictures which illustrate a study in degeneration—Mr. Warner rendered all Coupeau's scenes—alike those exhibiting his devotion to his child and her faithless mother, and those which show him succumbing to the consolations and torments of alcohol—with a reliance on broad emotional effects. He extracted from each episode every ounce of feeling it contained; his acting was nervous, and an attack on the nerves. But he did not trouble himself about individualizing details; for him the man Coupeau was a type of humanity at large, or rather of that class which finds a horrible fascination in intemperance.

M. Guitry's art is more self-conscious and restrained; it depends more on subtleties, and has not so immediate an appeal. He is anxious to make his Coupeau a representative French workman, and to add touches which give him individuality; so he emphasizes the stolidity and the lazy good-nature of the ouvrier. At the same time M. Guitry never "lets himself go" through the first half of the play, but seems constantly holding his forces in reserve for the big scenes of temptation and delirium which furnish the story with its culmination. The consequence was on Monday night that while this Coupeau was very affecting in particular episodes—the passage with the little child Nana was handled with beautiful tenderness—the drama dragged at times in a way it should not have done. M. Guitry's colleagues took their cue from him, and underplayed now and then, so that, for instance, the encounter between the two laundresses proved curiously tame, while the dance scene was not a very lively affair. M. Guitry's example, in fact, was responsible for a certain listlessness here and there in the interpretation. It seemed on the one hand as if he were devoting too much refinement and delicacy to a character that called for simplicity of treatment; on the other, as if he expected that a deliberate economy of his energies would make the climax, into which he did throw all his powers, more telling by contrast.

It is true that his representation of the insanity of alcoholism was well worth waiting for; here there was no longer any trace of self-suppression; here was realism illuminated by a sort of tragic grandeur. There is a suggestion of helplessness, of mournful acceptance of a destiny against which it is useless to struggle, about this Coupeau's surrender to his vice, that M. Guitry's massive features and strong physique serve to accentuate. We feel in the presence of a great nature which even in its overthrow preserves a certain majesty. That effect Charles Warner, with his more hysterical manner, never produced.

HIS MAJESTY'S.—Annual Shakespearean Festival: The Merry Wives of Windsor.

MR. TREE'S "Shakespearean festival" at His Majesty's, for the sake of which the run of 'The School for Scandal' has been broken, is the fifth of the series, and Mr. Tree (who this year announces not only revivals of his own productions, but also a performance of 'Richard III.' for which Mr. F. R. Benson is responsible, and another of 'Macbeth,' for which Mr. Bouchier will provide the company) promises no fewer than seven plays. Very wisely he has inaugurated his fortnight's season by trying again the most successful of all his Shakespearean revivals. No one who was present at the first night of 'The Merry Wives' revival is likely to forget the occasion on which Ellen Terry and Mrs. Kendal, as Mistress Page and Mistress Ford, acted for the first time together in Shakespeare, and the former carried everything before her in a whirlwind of high spirits. Mrs. Kendal's engagement it has not been possible for Mr. Tree to renew for this reproduction, but Miss Constance Collier makes a lively and handsome substitute, and happily Ellen Terry is still at hand to repeat her impersonation. Mr. Tree once more demonstrates his versatility and sense of character in the part of Falstaff. To-night he will give fresh proof of the extent of his range by figuring as Mark Antony.

IRISH DRAMA.

COURT (IRISH NATIONAL THEATRE SOCIETY).—Deirdre, by W. B. Yeats, and The Workhouse Ward, by Lady Gregory.—So successful has the season of Irish plays proved at the Court that it has been extended, and this week Mrs. Patrick Campbell has joined the National Theatre Society's company to repeat her impersonation of the heroine of Mr. Yeats's miniature tragedy 'Deirdre.' Of her performance and of the "legendary verse play" itself due notice has already been taken in these columns, and a rehearsing of the drama scarcely makes for modification of first impressions. Judged merely as literature, this is one of the most beautiful pieces of Mr. Yeats's work. Read away from the theatre, the story of the innocent young wife who is plunged suddenly into an atmosphere of treachery and violence appears extraordinarily affecting. But somehow or other its pathos does not reach over the footlights. We ought to be thrilled by the situation of the two lovers who have rashly placed themselves in the hands of their enemy, and discover too late their mistake. But in the playhouse their very helplessness seems to paralyze our sympathies, and we await the approach of doom with as little genuine concern as though we were watching a puppet-show tragedy.

Nor is the dramatic appeal of the legend strengthened by Mrs. Campbell's deliberate intoning of Deirdre's speeches. It certainly brings out the music of Mr. Yeats's poetry, but a sharper, more staccato delivery would do more to produce a sense of illusion. And there is missing about the actress's interpretation the note of ingenuousness which she has shown in similar characters, such as Melisande and Undine. In all her postures, however, and movements this Deirdre is delightfully picturesque, and her dumb-show is full of eloquence.

A piquant contrast to Mr. Yeats's drama is the farce in which Lady Gregory treats of the amenities of workhouse life in a spirit of half-cynical geniality. Here we have modernity with a vengeance, old age treated with none too much reverence; yet the humour is so fresh and true, the knowledge of human foibles so obvious, that we laugh, even though conscious all the time of a certain grimness in the playwright's picture. She sketches an elderly inmate of the workhouse ward who is for ever quarrelling with a companion, and, when he is offered a home outside by his sister, cannot tear himself away from the society of his dear enemy. With him it has come to this—that his altercations with the other inmate represent the one bright spot in his life. Freedom is not worth the loss of that. As the curtain goes down, the feud between the old men breaks out once more, and they are seen pelting each other with missiles.

MR. ST. JOHN HANKIN.

THE body of Mr. St. John Emile Clavering Hankin was discovered in the river Ithon, near Llandrindod Wells, on Friday morning last week. He had been much depressed of late, owing to bad health and the death of his mother. He was only thirty-nine, and his death is a great loss to English drama, for he had already made a position for himself by his witty plays of modern life. Five in all stand to his credit, and it is stated that Mr. Herbert French had accepted another for production at his promised repertory theatre. Mr. Hankin's earliest piece, 'The Two Mr. Wetherbys,' dates back to 1902, but it was 'The Return of the Prodigal' (one of the "finds" of the Vedrenne-Barker management) which first brought him success and reputation. This and two succeeding works, 'The Cassilis Engagement' and 'The Charity that Began at Home,' which met with less favour and had less incisiveness, he published a couple of years ago with a provocative preface, styling them, not a little cynically, 'Three Plays with Happy Endings.' The list is completed with 'The Last of the De Mullins,' presented by the Stage Society some six months ago.

Mr. Hankin belonged to that modern school of playwrights which makes war on the conventions, and so must be classed with Mr. Bernard Shaw and Mr. Galsworthy. But while in spirit he sympathized with their attitude—allowing, indeed, his friend Mr. Shaw to exercise too much influence over him—as far as form went he was by no means a revolutionary. His technique was as finished as that of any writer of the well-made play, and his plots were carefully, sometimes elaborately, worked out. His unconventionality consisted in his being thoroughly free from romantic illusions. No dramatist of our time has satirized more tellingly the unconscious hypocrisy which often pervades our middle-class life. Types of that class, respectable people unaware of the sins their respectability cloaks, and wildly indignant if for a moment they are given a glimpse of their true selves, were the characters he drew best. But light comedy was his vein. He took too little account of the importance of sentiment in life, and neglected to allow sufficiently for the softer, more emotional side of humanity over to dive deep below the surface of things or to come to grips with the bigger problems of society. Hence his small success with 'The Cassilis Engagement' and 'The Last of the De Mullins.' His treatment was too crude. Where, however, he could touch lightly on human foibles—where, as in 'The Return of the Prodigal,' he could show the nice equipoise of a British middle-class home threatened by an intruder who does not "play the game," insists on telling home truths, and cannot be prevented by conventional terms of opprobrium from blackmailing his family—there Mr. Hankin's gifts of irony and humour carried all before them; there his insight into character seemed almost uncanny. With that touch of perversity which marked him as an author, he always betrayed a certain sympathy with the scamp. His comedies—which, of course, as plays proper should, represent clashes of will—nearly always end in the victory of the stronger character—that is to say, of the character less hampered by scruples, more sure of its wants, and therefore better equipped for the accomplishment of its ambitions.

CORRIGENDA.—Athen., June 5, p. 677, col. 1, line 28 from foot, for 60 read 57.—June 19, p. 723, col. 2, l. 26 from foot, for "certainly" read certainly not.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—R. R. M.—A. M.—A. S.—R. H. M.—A. G. B.—Received.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

We cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

We do not undertake to give the value of books, china, pictures, &c.

THE ATHENÆUM.

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS

5 Lines of Pearl..	0	3	6
75 " " " (Half-Column)	1	16	0
A Column	3	3	0
A Page	9	9	0

Auctions and Public Institutions, Five Lines 4s., and 8d. per line of Pearl type beyond.

IN THE MEASUREMENT OF ADVERTISEMENTS, CARE SHOULD BE TAKEN TO MEASURE FROM RULE TO RULE.

Advertisements across Two Columns, one-third extra beyond the space occupied, the first charge being 30s.

JOHN C. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
The Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENTS ..	746
BELL & SONS ..	768
BISHOP'S VARALETTES ..	770
CATALOGUES ..	770
CONSTABLE & CO. ..	748
DOVES PRESS ..	771
EDUCATIONAL ..	745
EXHIBITIONS ..	745
HARPER & BROS. ..	747
HEINEMANN ..	747
INSURANCE COMPANIES ..	770
LONGMANS & CO. ..	748
MACMILLAN & CO. ..	748
MAGAZINES, &c. ..	771
MISCELLANEOUS ..	746
PRINTERS ..	746
REBMAN ..	771
RICHARDS ..	769
RIVERS ..	771
SALES BY AUCTION ..	746
SHIPPING ..	770
SITUATIONS VACANT ..	745
SITUATIONS WANTED ..	746
SMITH, ELDER & CO. ..	771
STANFORD ..	747
TYPE-WRITERS, &c. ..	770
UNWIN ..	772

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

NOW READY, 8vo, illustrated, 8s. net.

FIFTY YEARS OF DARWINISM; or, Modern Aspects of Evolution.

Being Eleven Centennial Addresses in Honour of Charles Darwin, given before the American Association for the Advancement of Science. With an Introduction by T. C. CHAMBERLAIN, University of Chicago.

VOL. I. NOW READY, 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE HANOVERIAN QUEENS OF ENGLAND.

By ALICE GREENWOOD.

With 2 Photogravure Plates and a Map.

This work is a continuation of Strickland's 'Queens,' which ends with Queen Anne. The first volume deals with Sophia Dorothea (wife of George I.) and Caroline of Anspach (Queen of George II.). The second volume will treat of Charlotte (Queen of George III.), Caroline of Brunswick (Queen of George IV.) and Adelaide (Queen of William IV.), and is in active preparation.

MISS KAYE-SMITH'S NEW SUSSEX STORY.

Cloth, 6s.

STARBRACE.

By SHEILA KAYE-SMITH.

"A novel which ranks among the best books of the season, and assures for the author a place among the few novelists who now make the dead past live." Westminster Gazette.

"A very strong and arresting study in human cross-strains, ... in every way worthy of the author of 'The Tramping Methodist.'" Glasgow Herald.

"One of the most vivid and imaginative stories which we have come across for many months." Country Life.

JUST PUBLISHED, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON'S LURE.

An Anthology of Prose and Verse Passages bearing on London.

By HELEN and LEWIS MELVILLE.

With Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers designed by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

"Altogether this is a delightful book; in its pages you see London with the eyes of those who have felt its enduring fascination, and have sought to give expression to its inexhaustible variety." Daily Telegraph.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Newly Translated, with Introduction and Notes.

By F. E. C. GONME, B.A.

An entirely new and literal translation, chiefly from the Parker MS., but extracts have been made from the other MSS. wherever the difference of phraseology or fact justified their insertion.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, 6s.

A HISTORY OF COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION.

An Outline Sketch.

By LEWIS F. ANDERSON, Ph.D.

Although the work of an American educationist, the interest of this work is not by any means confined to the United States, as it deals very largely with English and European Educational History.

EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

BELL'S ENGLISH TEXTS FOR SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

General Editor: A. GUTHKELCH, M.A.

NEW VOLUMES.

FAIRY POETRY. A Selection by R. S. BATE, M.A., Assistant Master at St. Dunstan's College, Catford. 1s.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON. Selections. Edited by E. A. J. MARSH, M.A., Assistant Master, Hanley Secondary School. 1s.

HAKLUYT'S VOYAGES. Selections. Edited by the Rev. A. E. HALL, B.A. 1s.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

GRANT RICHARDS

A SELECTION OF NEW BOOKS

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'SUSAN,' &c.

ANTONIO

By ERNEST OLDMEADOW

With Frontispiece in Colour by FRANK HAVILAND. 6s.

During a journey along untrodden byways of Portugal, Mr. Ernest Oldmeadow heard, from the lips of an old priest, a remarkable story of a young monk who was turned adrift by the law of 1834 suppressing the Portuguese monasteries. Upon this foundation of fact Mr. Oldmeadow has built a superstructure of fiction, with an English heroine. There have been many romances in which a monk or a nun is the central figure; but 'Antonio' differs markedly from them all. The scenes are laid partly in Early Victorian England and partly in Portugal during the troubled reign of Queen Maria da Gloria.

The First Review (Globe).

"Mr. Oldmeadow has undoubtedly written an impressive novel, one which is certain to advance his literary career, for it is his highest achievement. Throughout its portraiture is clearly and skilfully defined. . . . The heroine is a charming creature, and her independence and frankness only add to her fascination. Mr. Oldmeadow also writes of the period picturesquely, and gives pictures of Portugal and the Benedictine Priory which are full of life and colour."

The Second Review (Morning Leader).

"The atmosphere of the book is perfect. It is far the best work Mr. Oldmeadow has done, and we are not forgetting the excellences of 'Susan.' Here is the real broad humane culture, here the true exotic colour done into English values. 'Antonio' is a very fine novel."

"The great defect in the rapidly increasing library of English books on Spain seems to me to be, that, instead of benefiting by what the Spaniards have done in research, their authors have gone on repeating the few known facts about the few stock places of interest, and filling in the gaps with more or less interesting personal appreciations."—From CHAPTER I.

SPAIN:

A STUDY OF HER LIFE AND ARTS

By ROYALL TYLER

With 64 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s. 6d. net.

"The object of this book is to give some account of the various schools of art which are represented by existing monuments in Spain, and of the manner of their adoption. In order to do this I have attempted to discover the nationality of the artists themselves, or, failing that, of their employers, and also to suggest some of the other agencies which brought about the importation of foreign styles. The study of mediæval art in Spain is puzzling at the best; but it is utterly impossible if the fact that the Peninsula was the world's end, into which every nationality was shaken at one time or another, is not taken into account. For this reason I have called the book a study of Spain's life and arts."

FROM THE PREFACE.

ROUND THE WORLD IN A MOTOR-CAR.

By ANTONIO SCARFOGLIO. With over 60 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 15s. net.

Signor Antonio Scarfoglio's famous journey from New York to Paris by motor-car, made during the summer of last year, must be still fresh in the minds of all who read; and in this volume we have his own vivid and picturesque record of that tour round the world by automobile.

THE TRAGEDY OF RUSSIA IN

PACIFIC ASIA. By FREDERICK McCORMICK. With Reproductions of Drawings by the author, Photographs, and Maps. 2 vols. royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 21s. net.

An interesting and picturesque record of the Russo-Japanese War, covering the whole period of operations. The book is profusely illustrated with drawings, photographs, and maps, and will prove invaluable to all historical students.

HOW TO APPRECIATE PRINTS.

By FRANK WEITENKAMPE. With 33 Illustrations in Half-Tone. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

A book of interest to all who appreciate engravings, etchings, or other prints, and want to know more about them. It tells enough concerning the history and technique to illustrate the development and nature of the various processes, and shows what to look for in prints, thus providing a finger-post to a wide range of pleasures.

"We must thank Mr. Weitenkamp warmly for his book. He writes well and vigorously and out of a thorough and complete knowledge of his subject."—Morning Post.

GEORGE MEREDITH IN

ANECDOTE AND CRITICISM. By J. A. HAMMERTON, Author of 'Stevensoniana.' With 50 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Hammerton is most interesting in dealing with Meredith's early life. . . . Well written, and the critical passages are not unworthy."—Standard.

JOHN DAVIDSON'S LAST BOOK.

'Fleet Street and other Poems' is the title of this last volume of the author of 'Holiday and other Poems,' &c. Here are found all the moods of John Davidson's genius. In many of the poems he returns to his earlier lyrical manner. 5s. net. "Full of characteristic and eloquent work."—Daily Chronicle.

MEMORY HARBOUR: Essays

Chiefly in Description. By FILSON YOUNG, Author of 'The Sands of Pleasure,' &c. Imperial 16mo, buckram gilt, 5s. net.

"An altogether delightful book. . . . Mr. Young has an interesting mind and a great gift of expression. . . . we look upon these essays as literature."

Westminster Gazette.

THE MENACE OF SOCIALISM.

By W. LAWLER WILSON. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

"This examination and destructive criticism of Socialism here and abroad has considerable ability."—Times.

"Most opportune is the publication of this book. . . . Besides being intensely interesting to the general reader, the book will supply the speaker and debater with an armoury of weapons."—Evening Standard.

MULTITUDE AND SOLITUDE.

By JOHN MASEFIELD, Author of 'Captain Margaret,' &c. 6s.

In 'Multitude and Solitude' Mr. Masefield endeavours to treat the problem which presents itself to the artistic temperament in a generation whose inspiration is scientific rather than artistic. His first novel, 'Captain Margaret,' was romantic and of a past age; 'Multitude and Solitude' is actual and of the present day.

THE BRONZE BELL. By LOUIS

JOSEPH VANCE, Author of 'Terence O'Rourke,' &c. 6s.

"A tense and absorbing narrative."—Times. His novels have now sold to the number of over 300,000 copies, and this new book will be as popular as any of its predecessors.

Type-Writers, &c.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, and all kinds of TYPE-WRITING accurately executed at home (Remington). 7d. per 1,000. Carbons 2d. per 1,000. First-class references.—A. M. P., Shamrock, Sutton Road, Muswell Hill, N.

AUTHORS.—Special facilities for disposing of MSS. of all kinds in America and elsewhere.—For particulars apply MANAGER, Literary and Book Department, Wiener Agency, Limited, 64, Strand, London.

TYPE-WRITING 9d. per 1,000 words; Carbons 2d. French and German Type-writing 1s. per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3s. 100 Copies (quarto), 15s. per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand. Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

Catalogues.

BERTRAM DOBELL, SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER, 77, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.
A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

MAGGS BROS., 109, Strand, London, W.C.
DEALERS IN RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS, PRINTS, AND AUTOGRAPHS.
CATALOGUES sent post free to all parts of the World
Export Orders Solicited.
Telegraphic and Cable Address: "Bibliolite, London."
Telephone: "Gerrard 4664."

CATALOGUE No. 51.—Drawings of the Early English School—Engravings after Turner, Hogarth, Reynolds—Coloured Prints by Stadler—Etchings by Samuel Palmer—Japanese Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by John Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols, 2l. 10s.; Trigg's Art Garden Design, Italy, 3½ Guineas, for 2ls.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3l. 3s.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

No. 365.

JUNE SUPPLEMENT TO GLAISHER'S CATALOGUE

Of Popular and Attractive Books at Cheap Remainder Prices.

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LIMITED,

Remainder and Discount Booksellers,

265 HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON (and at 14, George Street, Croydon).

The Books are on view at both Addresses.

CATALOGUE of BOOKS on ART, including important Works on Architecture, Costume, Furniture, Decoration, Old Masters, the English School, &c. (1,296 items). Post free on application to

JAMES RIMELL & SON, 53, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.
Books and Engravings Bought or Exchanged.

HIGHEST AWARDS.

CORK, 1883. LIVERPOOL, 1886. PARIS, 1886. ADELAIDE, 1887.

PARIS, 1889. CHICAGO, 1893. PARIS, 1900. ST. LOUIS, 1904.

FRANCO-BRITISH, 1908.

OLD BUSHMILLS.

Have you tried this—the Prize-Winning Whisky?

From all Wine Merchants.

Address of nearest Agent sent on application.

"OLD BUSHMILLS" DISTILLERY CO., LTD.,
20, Mark Lane, E.C.

Shipping.

P & O PLEASURE CRUISES.

BY THE NEW TWIN SCREW SS. MALWA, 11,500 TONS.

From London and Leith.

July 8 to July 29 THE BALTIC, from 20 Gns.

From London.

Aug. 7 to Aug. 30 RUSSIA, &c., from 20 Gns.

BY THE WELL-KNOWN S.Y. VECTIS, 6,000 TONS.

From London and Leith.

July 1 to July 27 SPITZBERGEN, from 30 Gns.

July 29 to Aug. 11 NORWAY, from 12 Gns.

Aug. 13 to Aug. 26 NORWAY, from 12 Gns.

From London.

Sept. 14 to Sept. 24 LISBON, &c., from 10 Gns.

From Marseilles.

Sept. 25 to Oct. 16 CONSTANTINOPLE, from 21 Gns.

Oct. 21 to Nov. 13 PALESTINE, &c., from 21 Gns.

Illustrated Programme on application.

For Passage, Illustrated Handbooks, and all information, apply Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Northumberland Avenue, W.C., or 122, Leadenhall Street, E.C., London.

SEA-SICKNESS CAN BE CURED.

We are quite satisfied, from the numerous tests we have made, and from the Testimonials received, that we have discovered an infallible preventative of Sea-sickness, Train-sickness, &c., in ZOTOS.

ZOTOS is contained in small capsules of gelatine, quite tasteless, easily swallowed whole, and readily soluble. Our Booklet, 'How Sea-sickness is Prevented,' with Pamphlet of Testimonials, sent free on request.

ZOTOS, LTD., 32 and 34, Theobalds Road, London, W.C.

Insurance Companies.

NORWICH UNION FIRE INSURANCE SOCIETY, LTD.

Founded 1797. HEAD OFFICE: NORWICH.

LONDON OFFICES: (50, Fleet Street, E.C.
71 and 72, King William Street, E.C.
Norwich Union Chambers (Entrance, St. James's Street), Piccadilly, W.
1, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.
26, Charles Street, St. James's, S.W.
81, Edgware Road, W.

Fire Claims Paid £23,000,000.

Applications for Agencies invited.

HOLIDAY SEASON.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS, SICKNESS,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY, AND
FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

Capital (fully subscribed), £1,000,000. Claims paid, £5,600,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

EVERY MAN

Whose estate will be liable for duty should read

A POPULAR FALLACY.

Sent post free on application to the

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

48 Gracechurch Street, London.

GOUT IN YOUR FAMILY.

HAVE YOU ANY OF THE SYMPTOMS OF THE URIC ACID HABIT?

There is no doubt about it. If gout "runs in your family" and you have inherited that tendency of the system known as the gouty habit, you are bound to suffer from some form of gout.

Do you suffer from pain after meals, indigestion, flatulence, and heartburn? Are you subject to "come-and-go" pains, with stiffness and inflammation in joints and muscles? Do these show themselves especially during changeable and damp weather? Do you have dull aches and pains, numbness, and tingling in the muscles of the fingers, arms, or legs? Are you troubled with irritation and burning on the skin—with or without redness or swelling—and small lumps on arms, ankles, outer rim of ear, or eyelids?

These are the commonest signs of the presence of uric acid—these are the signs which are significant warnings that you have a gouty future in store if you do not adopt proper preventive treatment immediately.

What you need is a thorough uric acid eliminant, such as Bishop's Varalettes. If you do not adopt this course, but continue to neglect or wrongly treat the first signs of uric acid, it will continue to accumulate in your blood, muscles, tissues, organs, and joints, and an attack of some more serious gouty ailment will be the result.

THE CHIEF GOUTY AILMENTS:

What this ailment will be depends on the situation of the deposits left by the uric acid in its course through the system; thus, when the uratic accumulations occur in a joint we have gout or rheumatic gout (rheumatoid arthritis), characterized by painful, inflamed, and swollen joints. The compounds of uric acid sometimes accumulate in the muscles, as, for instance, in an attack of lumbago, when the muscles of the lower back are the seat of the accumulations which set up the severe pain characterizing this well-known complaint, and in gouty rheumatism affecting the limbs. Two of the most distressing uric acid ailments are caused by the deposits of crystalline urates in the very sheaths of the nerves—i.e., sciatica and neuritis.

Uric acid also penetrates to the skin, in which its presence causes the irritation and the other unpleasant external features of gouty eczema.

When uric acid and its compounds accumulate in the kidneys and bladder we have those dangerous and exceedingly painful and prevalent gouty disorders known as stone and gravel.

Bishop's Varalettes ward off threatening attacks of gout, and relieve and remove gouty ailments at all stages of their development—even the most serious. This rational remedy has gained the support of the leading authorities, whose recommendations, supplemented as they are by the enthusiastic reports of those for whom the remedy has proved the only means of lasting relief, should be sufficient to convince every gouty person that Bishop's Varalettes are the gout remedy and preventive par excellence.

A BOOK ON GOUT.

The gouty subject may learn what to eat, drink, and avoid, and generally how to secure relief and immunity from all gouty ills, by reading Bishop's little book. A copy will be sent willingly to any address, post free, on application to Alfred Bishop, Limited, Manufacturing Chemists (Est. 1857), 48, Spelman Street, London, N.E. Ask for Booklet V.

All chemists sell Bishop's Varalettes at the following prices: 25 days' treatment, 5s.; bottles, 2s.; vials, 1s.; or they may be had from the makers, at the above address. Bishop's Varalettes dissolve instantly in any beverage, and are quite tasteless.

Bishop's Varalettes may be had of the leading chemists in every country. Our principal general Agents abroad are:—AUSTRALIA.—Potter & Birks, 1½, Macquarie Place, Sydney, N.S.W.

INDIA.—Mr. W. Moore, c/o Grindlay Groom & Co., Bombay.
UNITED STATES.—Lehn & Fink, 120, William Street, New York.

SPAIN.—Foye y Gimenez, Calle Gerona, 4 pral, Barcelona.
FRANCE.—Roberts et Cie, 5, Rue de la Paix, Paris.

RUSSIA.—Mr. F. Bremmel, Serpoukhovskaya Street, 17, St. Petersburg.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED, square 16mo, 5s. net.

ON THE OXFORD CIRCUIT, And Other Verses.

By the Hon. Mr. Justice DARLING,
Author of 'Scintillæ Juris,' 'Meditations in the Tea-Room,' 'Seria Ludo,' &c.

With Illustrations by AUSTIN O. SPARE.

Daily Mail.—"The range of these verses is extraordinary, and amid the graver and deeper issues one finds delightful fancies, subtle witticisms, and imaginative musings. The volume is finely illustrated by Austin O. Spare."

READY JULY 2, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

WIND AND HILL.

By GEOFFREY WINTHROP YOUNG.

* * A volume of poems inspired by the spirit of the mountains, and written by a distinguished mountaineer.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For JULY. Contents. Price One Shilling.
THE PALADIN. Chaps. 16-19. By Horace Annesley Vachell.

MOTHER AND CHILD. By Laurence Binyon.

VICARIOUS CHARITIES. A Dialogue. By Mary Cholmondeley.

THE TALE OF THE EUREKA STOCKADE. By Dr. W. H. Fitchett.

AN UNSEEN TERROR. By E. V. B.

BRITON AND BOER IN SOUTH AFRICA. By a Cape M.A.

THE LADY OF THE MANOR. By Katharine Tynan.

BABIES: THEIR POSITION IN THE STATE. By Mrs. Henrietta O. Barnett.

THE SEVEN-THIRTY. By Dorothea Deakin.

THE OLDEST OF HORTICULTURAL SOCIETIES. By Frederick Boyle.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM A PORTUGUESE COUNTRY HOUSE. By Constance Leigh Clare.

THE OSBORNES. Chap. 1. By E. F. Benson.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO.
15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Magazines, &c.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine Street, London, W.C., June 26, contains:—

THE VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM.

ARCHITECTURAL COPYRIGHT.

SCULPTURE AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

A NEW SYSTEM OF BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION.

THE CONCRETE INSTITUTE.

MUNICIPAL ENGINEERS AT ARBROATH.

REDNESS HALL, CARLISLE.

ILLUSTRATIONS:

"JUSTICE": GROUP FOR THE NATIONAL MEMORIAL TO QUEEN VICTORIA;

SCULPTURE AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY;

COMPETITION DESIGNS FOR NATIONAL LIBRARY FOR WALES;

GRAY'S ALMSHOUSES, TAUNTON.

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all Newsagents.

UNIVERSAL BIBLIOTHEK AND AUTEURS CÉLÈBRES.

The entire selection of the popular German Series UNIVERSAL BIBLIOTHEK is on view for sale at MUDIE'S, 3d. per part. Also the well-known French Series, AUTEURS CÉLÈBRES, at 8d. per part. Full Lists of both on application.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY LTD., 30-34, New Oxford Street, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED, price 1s. each.

TWO NEW ART HANDBOOKS.

Imperial 16mo, cloth. Illustrated by the Authors.

BLACK AND WHITE: a Manual of Illustration.

By STEVEN SPURRIER.

TREES AND TREE DRAWING.

By EDWARD C. CLIFFORD, R.I. R.D.S.

London: GEORGE ROWNEY & CO. Percy Street, W.

In 2 vols. crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 24s.

JOHN FRANCIS AND THE 'ATHENÆUM.'
A Literary Chronicle of Half a Century.

By JOHN C. FRANCIS.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

JUST PUBLISHED

THE ADVENTURES OF A CIVIL ENGINEER

By C. O. BURGE, M.Inst.C.E.

With 8 Full-Page Plates. At all Libraries and Bookshops. 7s. 6d. net.

The roving legion who are constantly employed on the frontiers of the Empire making the road for civilization come and go among us at such rare intervals that we have little opportunity of hearing their tale. One such, however, Mr. C. O. Burge, M.Inst.C.E., is now giving a selection of his experiences of railway and other work in all quarters of the globe, under the title of 'The Adventures of a Civil Engineer.' The book is not too technical for the lay reader, and beside dealing with the great works with which the author was associated, contains a lively fund of anecdote and reminiscence, which gives full play to his Irish sense of humour.

NEW FICTION

THE RED ROSE OF A SUMMER

By LOUISE MACK

Author of 'Teens,' 'The World is Round,' &c. Just ready. 6s.

The title is highly descriptive, for the love story unfolds itself rapidly petal by petal, as it were, in an atmosphere of sun, warmth, and colour, by the waters of the Adriatic. Altogether a charming book for a summer's day.

THE OLD HOME

By GERARD BENDALL

Author of 'Mrs. Jones's Bonnet.' Obtainable everywhere. 6s.

The Nottingham Express says:—"He is a clever writer, and has a good deal to say that is worth the saying... This book is one that should be read by all to whom clever opinions cleverly expressed are of more value than the novel revelling in complexities of incident and plot."

London: ALSTON RIVERS, LTD.

JUST ISSUED, in 2 demy 8vo vols. over 1,000 pp. price 21s. net.

PROGRESSIVE CREATION.

A Reconciliation of Religion with Science. By Rev. HOLDEN E. SAMFSON.

This is certainly one of the most remarkable books ever published. Occultism, Magic, Spiritualism, Christian Science, Re-Incarnation, Death and After, the True Nature of Evil, Demons and Angels, to name only a few of the subjects, are dealt with in a most engrossing and lucid manner.

PUBLISHED THIS WEEK.

Demy 8vo, 452 pp. cloth, price 7s. 6d. net.

SCIENTIFIC IDEALISM;

Or, Matter and Force, and their relation to Life and Consciousness. By WILLIAM KINGSLAND, Author of 'The Mystic Quest,' 'The Esoteric Basis of Christianity,' &c.

This work has for its object to show how modern Scientific Concepts of Matter and Force, carried to their logical conclusion, lead to the highest form of idealism. This idealism may be said to be practically identical with all forms of thought which have as their Central Concept the Identity of the Self in Man with the Infinite Self or Power, by whatever name it may be called, which IS the universe.

PUBLISHED YESTERDAY.

Demy 8vo, 384 pp. cloth, price 7s. 6d. net.

ACCIDENTAL INJURIES TO WORKMEN.

With Reference to Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. By H. NORMAN BARNETT, F.R.C.S., Surgeon, Cripples' Home, Belfast, Author of 'Legal Responsibility of the Drunkard,' &c. With Article on INJURIES TO THE ORGANS OF SPECIAL SENSE, by CECIL E. SHAW, M.A. M.Ch. M.D., Lecturer on Ophthalmology and Otology, Queen's University of Belfast, &c., and Legal Introduction by THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, M.A. LL.B., Barrister-at-Law, Author of 'Workmen's Compensation' and 'Irish Land Purchase.'

THE MANIAC. PUBLISHED YESTERDAY. 6s.

A Realistic Study of Madness from the Maniac's Point of View. To the general reader this book is offered as being more weirdly sensational than any novel.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'MORAG THE SEAL.'
PUBLISHED YESTERDAY. 6s.

OLD AS THE WORLD.

A Romance of the Western Islands. By J. W. BRODIE INNES.

THE ROMANCE OF A NUN.

By ALIX KING, Author of 'The Little Novice.' Second Impression now ready. 6s.

"Clever." "Irresistible." "Exciting." "Palpitating with pathos and passion."—Vide Press.

Descriptive Circulars sent on application.

London:

REBMAN LTD., 129, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.

THE DOVES PRESS

No. 15 UPPER MALL HAMMERSMITH

On Monday June 28 will be published

THE TRAGICALL HISTORIE

OF HAMLET, Prince of Denmarke. Small 4to. Printed verbatim and literatim, in black and red, from the Second Quarto, with additions from the First Folio of parts not found in the Quarto. Initial capital flourished in green by Edward Johnston. ¶250 copies on paper, bound in limp vellum at The Doves Bindery, or in boards, paper sides, at 2l. 2s.; or in morocco or sealskin at 4l. 4s.; and 15 on vellum, bound in limp vellum, or in boards, paper sides, at 10l. 10s.; or in morocco or sealskin, at 12l. 12s.

In the Autumn

A TERCENTENARY EDITION OF SHAKE-SPEARE'S SONNETS.

Small 4to. Printed verbatim and literatim, in black and red, from the First Edition imprinted in 1609, manifest errors excepted. ¶Three initial capitals designed by Edward Johnston, and cut in wood by Noel Rooke. ¶250 copies on paper, bound in limp vellum at The Doves Bindery, or in boards, paper sides, at 1l. 10s.; or in morocco or sealskin, at 3l. 10s.; and 15 on vellum, bound in limp vellum, or in boards, paper sides, at 10l. 10s.; or in morocco or sealskin, at 12l. 12s.

Early in 1910

FAUST, ZWEITER THEIL.

Small 4to. Printed, in black and red, from the 1899 Weimar Text, specially revised for this edition by the Editor of the Weimar Text, Dr. Erich Schmidt. Capitals designed by Edward Johnston, and cut in wood by Noel Rooke. ¶300 copies on paper, bound in limp vellum at The Doves Bindery, uniform with Part I., at 3l. 3s.; and 25 on vellum at 15l. 15s. ¶Part I. was published by The Doves Press in 1906.

Recent Publications:

CREDO: PLENI SUNT COELI

ET TERRA GLORIA TUA. By T. J. Cobden-Sanderson. Small 8vo, pp. 1-6. 250 Copies on paper at 1l. 1s., bound in leather and lettered in gold at The Doves Bindery; and 12 copies on vellum at 3l. 3s., bound in leather and lettered and tooled in gold.

1908

MEN AND WOMEN. By ROBERT

BROWNING. Two volumes. Small 4to. Printed in red and black, from the first edition, 1855. Pen-flourishings in blue and green by Edward Johnston. 250 copies on paper, at two guineas a volume, bound in limp vellum by The Doves Bindery; or at four guineas a volume, bound in morocco or sealskin. ¶12 copies on vellum at ten guineas a volume, bound in limp vellum; or, at twelve guineas a volume, bound in morocco or sealskin.

NOTE ON THE DOVES PRESS.

and Catalogue Raisonné. By T. J. Cobden-Sanderson. Small 4to. Paper, 5s. Bound in boards by The Doves Bindery.

¶Particulars of the above, and of all Publications of The Doves Press, may be had on application to Mr. Cobden-Sanderson at

THE DOVES PRESS

No. 15 THE UPPER MALL HAMMERSMITH

BOOKS TO BUY AND READ

PUBLISHED BY MR. T. FISHER UNWIN.

A LITERARY HISTORY OF ROME.

From the Origins to the Close of the Golden Age. By J. WIGHT DUFF, M.A. With a Photogravure Frontispiece. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. (A New Volume in the 'Library of Literary History'.)

COUNTRY RESIDENCES IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

By LOUIS VALCOULON LE MOYNE. With about 450 Illustrations. 4to, 21s. net.

Descriptions of the most interesting country residences of Italy, France, England, and America.

THE WARS OF RELIGION IN FRANCE:

The Huguenots, Catharine de' Medici, and Philip the Second.

By JAMES WESTFALL THOMPSON. 21s. net.

This work is based upon a careful examination of original sources, and contains a valuable appendix of hitherto unpublished documents from the archives of Paris and London.

THE FUNCTION OF RELIGION IN MAN'S STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE.

By GEORGE BURMAN FOSTER, Author of 'The Finality of the Christian Religion.' Cloth, 5s. net.

CHRIST AND THE EASTERN SOUL;

Or, the Witness of the Oriental Consciousness to Jesus Christ.

Lectures delivered on the Barrows Foundation in India and Ceylon in the Cold Season of 1906. By the late CHARLES CUTHBERT HALL, President of the Union Theological Seminary. 6s. 6d. net.

THE TEACHING OF JESUS ABOUT THE FUTURE.

By HENRY BURTON SHARMAN. 13s. 6d. net.

Based on a critical examination of the Synoptic Gospels, this book calls for the serious attention of students of the New Testament.

THROUGH UGANDA TO MOUNT ELGON

With Glimpses by the Way.

By the Rev. J. B. PURVIS. Illustrated with Photographs. 6s.

Will appeal to the general reader as an interesting, entertaining, and instructive volume of travel.

A TRAMP'S SCHOOLING.

By A. M. COOPER, M.A. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

The Chapter Titles include:—Walks in My Own Country—How I Walked Across Denmark—The Road to Pompeii—Across Sweden on Foot—What I have Seen of Society.

CHEAP EDITIONS.

WOMEN'S WORK AND WAGES.

A Phase of Life in an Industrial City.

By EDWARD CADBURY, M. CECILE MATHESON, and GEORGE SHANN. Paper boards, 1s. net.

EVERY WOMAN'S OWN LAWYER.

A Legal Adviser for Ladies.

By GORDON CUMING WHADCOAT. Paper boards, 1s. net.

MEXICO.

Its Ancient and Modern Civilisation, History, and Political Conditions; Topography, and Natural Resources; Industries and General Development. By C. REGINALD ENOCK, F.R.G.S. With an Introduction by MARTIN HUME, a Map, and 64 Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net. (Vol. III. of the South American Series.)

"Mr. Enock has special qualifications for writing this volume. He knows the country thoroughly; he sets down facts with mathematical precision; he has a scholar's knowledge of past history, and he can transmute the hard material of ancient chronicles into gleaming romance." Manchester City News.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.

By the Rev. L. S. MILFORD. Illustrated. 10s. 6d. net.

"This is in many ways a model school history, just because it is a good deal more than a mere history. It is an inspiration."—Evening Standard.

THE NORFOLK AND SUFFOLK COAST.

By W. A. DUTT. With about 40 Illustrations. 6s. net. (Vol. I. of the County Coasts Series.)

"A fascinating account of the history and romance of the coast, with descriptions of its many striking natural features, and the book should be the companion of every one contemplating a holiday in that part of the country." Truth.

THE PLACE OF ANIMALS IN HUMAN THOUGHT.

By Countess MARTINENGO-CESARESCO. With Photogravure Frontispiece with 32 other Illustrations. 12s. 6d. net.

"The chapters of this book are as full of charm as they are of invaluable suggestion... Illustrated in a fashion that does no discredit to the lucid and touching prose." Contemporary Review.

THE BURIED CITY OF KENFIG.

By THOMAS GRAY. With a Map and Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net.

"The history of Kenfig, which Mr. Gray gives as the result of a minute inspection of records, is most interesting, and constitutes a valuable contribution to the literature of archaeological research."—Manchester Courier.

THE PAPACY:

The Idea and its Exponents.

By GUSTAV KRUGER. 5s. net.

"It gives a clear, concise, and impartial account of the development of the Papacy from the earliest times to the accession of Pius X."—Pall Mall Gazette.

WORKS BY JOHN CAMPBELL OMAN, D.LIT.

"Mr. J. Campbell Oman has used the opportunity of residence in India as few Englishmen trouble to do; and as he never fails to associate sympathy with his criticism and accuracy with his erudition, he accomplishes a difficult task with distinct success."—Manchester Guardian.

1. CULTS, CUSTOMS, AND SUPERSTITIONS OF INDIA.

Profusely illustrated. Medium 8vo, cloth, 14s. net.

2. THE MYSTICS, ASCETICS, AND SAINTS OF INDIA.

Profusely illustrated. Popular Edition. Cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

3. THE BRAHMANS, THEISTS, AND MUSLIMS OF INDIA.

Profusely illustrated. Popular Edition. Cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

THE MERMAID SERIES.—New Volume.

THE COMPLETE PLAYS OF ROBERT GREENE.

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by THOMAS H. DICKINSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. Also a Thin Paper Edition, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

A complete list of the volumes in the Mermaid Series will be sent post free to any address on application.

THE HIGHER LIFE IN ART.

Lectures on the Barbizon School in France. By JOHN LA FARGE. With 64 Illustrations. 8s. 6d. net.

CHATS ON ENGLISH EARTHENWARE.

By ARTHUR HAYDEN, Author of 'Chats on English China,' 'Chats on Old Prints.' With a Coloured Frontispiece and 80 Full-Page Plates. Large crown 8vo, cloth. A Companion Volume to 'Chats on English China.'

"Valuable hints are given as to what to collect, the method of studying old earthenware, and of detecting forgeries... Will be found of the utmost practical value to collectors of earthenware."—Outlook.

NOTABLE NEW NOVELS. THE POOLS OF SILENCE.

By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE, Author of 'The Blue Lagoon.' 6s.

"It is seldom one reads a novel which takes so firm a grip upon one and haunts the memory so persistently as this vivid and terrible tropical romance dealing with the Congo atrocities."—World.

HENRY IN SEARCH OF A WIFE.

By ALPHONSE COURLANDER, Author of 'The Sacrifice.' 6s.

"This is just the kind of story that raises the spirits, puts one in a good temper, and helps to make a dull and depressing afternoon slip away with astonishing rapidity." World.

A FAMILY OF INFLUENCE.

By W. H. WILLIAMSON, Author of 'The Prince's Marriage.' 6s.

"Admirably light and diverting."—Morning Leader.
"Very entertaining."—Academy.

CONCERNING HIMSELF.

By VICTOR L. WHITECHURCH, Author of 'The Canon in Residence,' 6s.

The author calls this the story of an ordinary man. The Scotsman says: "It seems less like fiction than the record of an actual life... an artistic and successful study."

SISTER TERESA.

By GEORGE MOORE. Revised Edition. 3s. 6d.

SHILLING EDITIONS OF FAMOUS NOVELS.

In Picture Wrappers, 1s. net each.

THE BLUE LAGOON.

By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE.

THE ENDING OF MY DAY.

By "RITA."

DREAMS.

By OLIVE SCHREINER.

SOME EMOTIONS AND A MORAL

AND

THE SINNER'S COMEDY.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.

A STUDY IN TEMPTATIONS

AND

A BUNDLE OF LIFE.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.

T. FISHER UNWIN, 1, Adelphi Terrace, London.

AP The Athenaeum
4
A8
1909
Jan. - June

11

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE
CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY
